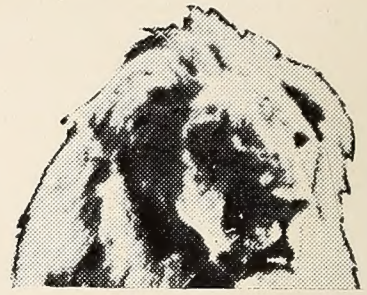
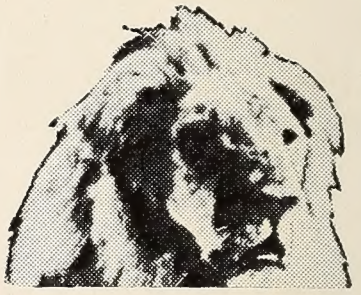
WONDER WHAT LEO, THE M-G-M LION THINKS ABOUT!



"It's great not to have to worry about having your option taken up. My job's permanent. Neither Metro nor Goldwyn nor Mayer can roar like me!"

"When I think of my folks back in the jungle I've gotta laugh... Me, the greatest star on the screen! They call me 'Star-Face'."

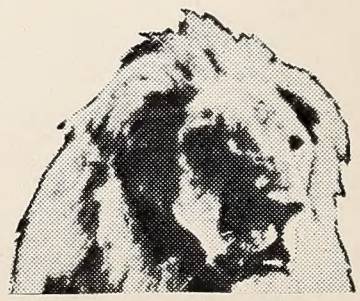
"Did you notice the tears in my eyes on that 'Smilin' Through' print? Honest, that picture got me. Shearer was marvelous!"



"Lionel Barrymore's got a beard just like mine in 'Rasputin'. John, Ethel, Lionel -- all together! Some line-up. Wait till I start roaring about that one!"

"M-G-M likes me to look dignified on the screen. I couldn't keep a straight face on that Dressler-Moran 'Prosperity' print! 'Scuse it please!"

"I like to play those $2 stands. We're doing swell business at the Astor with 'Strange Interlude.' I'm not high-hat about it, just proud!"



"'s funny how the folks say 'Oh' and 'Ah' when I'm on the screen. It's not for me personally, darn it! They know it's an M-G-M picture coming!"

"Whoops! I'd do a hand-spring if I didn't have to sit and look pretty! Clark Gable and Jean Harlow together in 'Red Dust.' Sweet and hot, I call it!"

"Pardon me, the show must go on. I feel a roar coming on.. let's go.. 'R.rr..rrr...rrrr...rrrr' Thank God that's over now I can sit back and enjoy the picture -- M-G-M, of course!"

Gala FALL Opening

"Greater Movie Season"

PARK THEATRE

BEGINNING MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 5TH

Gala FALL Opening

TO OUR PATRONS:

I am bringing you, on behalf of the management of this theatre, news of extraordinary importance from Hollywood. During the past Summer the Motion Picture industry mobilized as never before, all its forces—stars, directors, writers, studio executives—to produce the greatest pictures that Hollywood has yet turned out.

As a result, there is ahead a season of grand entertainment, crammed with punch, drama, pathos, comedy and glamor. Every production boasts an exceptional cast of artists—the popular favorites and new personalities—plus a fascinating story and brilliant direction.

Thanks to your continued support and patronage, it has been possible for the Management of this theatre to secure the most outstanding pictures for your entertainment during the coming Fall and Winter seasons. The following titles are just a few of the great array of smashing hits which will be shown at this theatre in the near future.

Thank you.

C. A. LYNCH, Resident Manager.

"THE TENDERFOOT"

WARNER BROS. HAVE HITS

Many of the Company's Best Included in Its 15 Releases For Season's First Quarter

READ!
From The Hollywood Reporter
Friday, Aug. 5, 1932

"FOR over a year this publication and Warners have had some differences. Warners did not like the way we ran this sheet and we were not over enthusiastic about the manner Warners handled a lot of things. If you are mad at some one, you just don't like to say anything nice about them if you can help it, but we have, in fairness and as our reward for time productions, had to do more waving of the Warner flag than for almost any company, as a result of the pictures that have been shown here in preview, during the past few months.

Back East several weeks ago we heard exhibitor ravings for Warners, we were told by showmen in New York, Chicago, Kansas City and here, what the Warner product has meant to them and only this morning a theatre owner from up North, having a large chain of independent theatres, came into this office to register his approval of the Warner-First National pictures and the treatment the Warner exchangemen gave the theatre owner in his section of the country.

If we were so situated that we could only take the program of one company for exhibition in our house, if there was no other way to get around the situation, we would select the Warner-First National product as our pick for the first quarter, or probably the entire year. That's a broad statement and we will justify it.

In the first place, Warners has the greatest showman producer in our business in the person of Darryl Zanuck. That man knows story values as does no other Hollywood executive. His ideas for the most part are new, original; always with plenty of wallop and he is able to inspire those around him, his writers, his directors, his artists on the merits of the ideas, thereby getting a co-operation that is, otherwise unknown in this cinema village. ZANUCK KNOWS.

Warners have had busts, as has every other company, but for the past two years their bloomers have been less than any of the other majors and although they have not had such terrific hits, smash attractions, their program summed up in box office figures, a statement of profit and loss for the theatre, has shown a better profit than any other outfit in the business. That's not our statement, but that of more than 176 theatre owners we have contacted during the past few months.

Warners are maneuvering themselves into a position that will make of that company one of the greatest profit-takers in the industry with another year like the past two. Whether they know it or not, the Warner name right now means more to exhibitors than all their stars. Warner is the draw, the other names are secondary because the public has learned over a two-year period that a picture from that organization is generally a GOOD SHOW.

Their product for the first quarter should top anything they have ever made, and that takes in the gangster era of two years ago. You won't get better pictures than the following, which has been previewed and looks sure-fire, and Michael Curtiz directed the latest horror picture, "Doctor X." "Stranger in Town," with Erle Kenton directing Chic Sale, completes the list.

Following is the list with more detail:

"CROONER."

Directed by Lloyd Bacon with David Manners, Ann Dvorak, Ken Murray and Guy Kibbee.

It's the sensational "Low Down" on your favorite Radio Idol. An ace comedy romance right off the bat.

"TIGER SHARK."

Directed by Howard Hawks; from the original story, "Tuna," by Houston Branch; screen play by Wells Root, Edward G. Robinson starred, with ZZita Johann, Richard Arlen, Lelia Bennett and J. Carroll Naish.

An adventure story of the seas; a chronicle of the lives of tuna fishermen, who brave dangers and even death in bringing home their cargo. It has some thrilling animal scenes, showing the man-killers of the sea.

"LIFE BEGINS."

Directed by James Flood and Elliott Nugent, from the play, "Birth," by Mary McDougal Axelson. Adaptation and additional dialogue by Earl Baldwin. With Loretta Young, Eric Linden, Aline MacMahon, Preston Foster, Glenda Farrell and Frank McHugh.

Here is one of the most entertaining of pictures of the sure-fire type, told entirely in of the talents of this fine actor. A story of the American South today, in which Barthelmess has the finest role he has had in years.

"TWO AGAINST THE WORLD."

Directed by Archie Mayo, from a story by Jerry Horwin and Marion Dix. Screen play by Sheridan Gibney. Constance Bennett starred, with Neil Hamilton, Helen Vinson, Gavin Gordon, Allen Vincent and Walter Walker.

This picture has been called Constance Bennett's best. It is a drama, with snappy lines, in which Miss Bennett plays a spoiled city girl who, when the real test comes, shows she has the intestinal fortitude to fight it out and take it on the chin while doing it.

"A SUCCESSFUL CALAMITY."

Directed by John Adolfi, from the stage play by Clare Kummer, with Austin Parker, Maude Howell and Jullian Josephson credited with adaptation and dialogue. Stars Mr. George Arliss, with Mary Astor, Hardie Albright, Grant Mitchell, Evelyn Knapp, David Torrence, William Janney, Hale Hamilton and Randolph Scott.

Mr. George Arliss in a role that just fits him, like a tailor-made suit. An optimistic comedy to chase away the depression blues. A vehicle worthy of Arliss' splendid artistry.

"SON OF RUSSIA."

Directed by William Dieterle, from the novel, "Revolt," by Mary McCall Jr. Screen play by Niven Busch and Edwin Gelsey; stars Douglas Fairbanks Jr., with Nancy Carroll, Lilyan Tashman and Guy Kibbee.

Doug Fairbanks Jr. teamed with Nancy Carroll and Lilyan Tashman, in a rom and adventure that teems with interest—a story of Europe after the Russian revolution, dealing with strange ro-from any company than "Blessed Event," "Crooner," "One Way Passage," "Life Begins," "A Successful Calamity." We have seen ALL those pictures with the exception of "Tiger Shark" and can, as a consequence, report our RAVE.

In addition to the above group you will get "Two Against the World," with Connie Bennett; "The Crash," with Chatterton; "Cabin in the Cotton," with Barthelmess; "You said a Mouthful," with Joe E. Brown; "Women in Prison," with Barbara Stanwyck; "Twenty Thousand Years in Sing," "Silver Dollar," and "A Fugitive from a Chain" during the first quarter.

No doubt you have noticed the selection of the other stories—all down to all new ideas and that them excellent. Also noticed that every stories, even down bits, has been a er. You know have drawn in Powell, Eddie Arliss, Dick Chatterton, stance Bennett under contra ner in which been written must have tion—well, the ones w thar and m tle doubt be shown.

DUSTING OFF BROADWAY

A STEP toward an improved status of the motion picture in its own consciousness and the public mind is achieved by the current campaign sweeping Broadway theatre fronts and marquees clear of cluttering displays and ballyhoos. This becomes immediately important to the whole of the industry because Broadway is after all the exhibition capital of the amusement world.

The world's greatest amusement street had in the last year become most unbecomingly undignified in its hysterical pursuit of box office attention, what with sidewalk barkers and "Coney Island fronts." Sales methods embodying the more obvious features of a fire sale in Fourteenth Street or a hot-dog stand in Canarsie do not confer an impression of value in behalf of a three hundred thousand dollar picture presented with say a million dollars worth of architecture and equipment. It was not for such a treatment that the screen outgrew the tawdry nickelodeon.

The Broadway association which inspired action by the City of New York in enforcement of the building code has performed a service for the industry.

ABOUT A DIME'S WORTH

WE see by the papers that the trade practices committee of the Southeastern Theatre Owners Association in convention at Atlanta did some resolutionary urging against ten cent admissions. It is well indeed that all exhibitors and exhibitor organizations should strive to uphold the dignity and the earning power of the motion picture—especially the earning power. But just in the whimsy of the moment we feel it our duty to do a little up-holding of the dime.

Now, to be sure, no one would argue that the motion picture industry as now constituted could live and prosper on a general policy of dime admissions, but that is no reason for resolving that there should not be any. It would appear to us, sitting pleasantly in a swivel chair two hundred feet above Broadway and surveying a three mile vista of first, second and third mortgages along Central Park West, that the prices of admissions will all have to be made by the man who sells them. A show is worth just exactly what you can get for it. It is fairly safe to assume that the exhibitor will endeavor to get as much as he can, with due consideration for all aspects of his business, including his tomorrow as well as his today.

Meanwhile there is a vast difference between the meaning of the terms "cheap" and "inexpensive." The motion picture cannot afford to be cheap, but if it is to entertain the millions and do it night after night it is clear enough that it cannot be made individually "expensive." Values are relative, with reference to time, place, environment. Raspberries once brought a dollar apiece in the Klondike and today a dollar will procure a quart of sound, sparkling Burgundy or most any good champagne at St. Pierre de Miquelon.

In such regions as there are persons who have only a dime to spend for a picture, if there are enough such persons, a dime show will be supplied. That is no forecast. The motion picture map of the broad agricultural southland is dotted with theatres doing business at a dime, and not a few of them making money against class competition scaled higher.

After all, this became a very considerable industry on a dime. A dime is a piece of money. Mr. Woolworth erected quite a monument to the dime down in lower Broadway.

A quarter of a dollar is a neat piece of money and a half is positively elegant. Meanwhile it will be well to let no dime escape. The motion picture is not to live on past glories, nor to concern itself too much with the lofty peaks of yesterday.

Admissions will keep pace with the buying power and in step with the gait with which the screen meets its amusement competitions.

MOBILE IMMORTALITY

MORE than half a score of years ago there was a solemn conclave of Broadway personalities in the lobby of the Rivoli theatre, while, at the instance of a great producing-distributing company, a plaque with a high relief bust of Mr. Samuel Lionel Rothapfel was unveiled, to immortalize him there forever in enduring bronze. Where is it now? A little more than a year after, he was established across the street at the Capitol, having knocked the "p" out of his name crossing Broadway, as S. L. Rothafel, master of divertissements. Came the radio and Roxy's gang. The nickname became the national nom de plume of distinction. Came sundry promoters and the Roxy theatre project was born and his name was blazoned to the skies of Broadway as the title and label of that pretentious project. Meanwhile, this and that happened in the amusement world and S. L. Rothafel moved along, presently to an RKO connection. Now efforts are being made to take the name off the theatre and over in Radio City the same letters R O X Y, fashioned this time in the new noncorroding ferro-nickel alloys, were aligned against the wall of the great new motion picture palace of the vast Rockefeller-Radio City project. Should Roxy or Radio or the connection fade, where next? Is one man's name adequate symbol and safeguard of a project involving many minds, thousands of stockholders and millions of dollars?

"More than 90 per cent of human ills originate above the ears," remarks Dr. Norman E. Titus of the Columbia University College of Physicians and Surgeons. But from where we sit it is apparent, in this industry, that the ears should be included. Dr. Titus has not heard about the microphone.

what a scenarist finds they want

HOLLYWOOD'S interest in what the exhibitor wants, as indicated in his response to the Herald's recent survey, extends somewhat beyond the degree represented by casual group discussions and the taking of mental notes, in an analysis submitted by John Francis Natteford, himself an author of some 70 motion picture stories and dramatizations.

"I have spent a very pleasant two hours analyzing your article on book and play preferences of exhibitors," he confesses, "and thought the results might interest you."

Thus the survey, published September 10, becomes worthy of a moment's revival, for Mr. Natteford's pleasant two hours have been spent in identifying the books and plays listed in the Herald, according to rather basic dramatic and emotional types. "All stories were rated," he assures us, "on the basis of knowing them—no guesses." And applying pretty well established indices, he has determined that 53 per cent of the titles show a preference for more or less serious drama.

The impression, quite likely, has been different. To comedy-drama Mr. Natteford gives the respectable figure of 25 per cent, but to straight comedy only 7 per cent. "The average degree of seriousness preferred" is represented by the figure 3.96—"indicating," Natteford finds, "that a strong dramatic interest should be relieved with little comedy." He, too, recognizes that this is hardly what one would expect, and offers the explanation that "only thoughtful and serious exhibitors would answer such a query as to their preferences, therefore the books and plays listed represent the preferences of older and serious minds."

The explanation seems logical, but does not hold in the face of the facts of the survey, which was participated in by every type of theatre from small independent houses operated by "old-timers," to circuit theatres managed by "young fellows." It may be, however, that the exhibitor tastes represented are not so serious as Mr. Natteford's formulaic tabulation would indicate. After all, the responding showmen did not indicate the treatment desired, and few are the serious stories in which one does not at least now and then encounter amusing characters and laughable situations.

The obvious emphasis on the more serious emotions may mean merely that more of life's true currents are wanted, and these currents are inclusive. In them is both the chuckle and the tear. It is only natural that most of all they involve sober purposes, for—as someone has said—life is like that.

Perhaps no analysis lending itself to tabulation would indicate this more complex interest. Fiction with the full breath of life is not so readily pigeonholed. But subjectively and fundamentally, such an interest involves verisimilitude. Self-identification. All life, essentially, but intensified. The list of books and plays in question at many points tends toward the epic. Throughout it are reflected those universals by which the person in the audience achieves a kind of rebirth, in a more interesting form, upon the screen. It may well be that novelty, which is so frequently relied upon and which is so obscure in the list, offers neither the laugh nor the tear authentic enough to provide a satisfying human experience in the theatre.

None of these other considerations, however, disturb the general significance of Mr. Natteford's analysis, the full findings of which he shows in the adjoining table.

In addition to the information tabulated, he offers his calculation that only seven of the titles listed represent morbid, depressing or sexy stories, while fully 46 are to be classified as wholesome. Of the musicals, he adds, three are farce, one is a comedy, and eight are comedy-dramas with strong romantic strain.

MAJOR POLITICAL PARTIES SEEK AID OF INDUSTRY GROUPS IN CAMPAIGN

Democratic Stage and Screen Division Plans Banquet and Parade in New York Oct. 16; Republicans May Form League

With only five weeks remaining before election, both major political parties have announced plans to seek cooperation of members of the motion picture industry, theatre and radio.

The climax of the Democratic stage and screen division's program will be reached on October 16 when a banquet will be held in New York at the Astor Hotel in honor of Governor Franklin D. Roosevelt, presidential aspirant. This occasion will bring the Democratic nominee to Broadway for the first time during the campaign. It is expected that Governor Roosevelt will lead the parade from the Biltmore to the Astor and that 3,000 motion picture, theatre and radio stars and executives will be at the dinner.

All details of this celebration are being arranged through the Broadway division, of which Richard B. Gilbert is chairman, and Joseph Glantz, vice chairman. Tickets to the dinner, which is a part of the "Pre-election Celebration of the Stars of the Stage, Screen and Radio as a Testimonial of Their Affection For and Support of Franklin D. Roosevelt, the Democratic Nominee for the Presidency of the United States," will be made of bronze and finished in tones of green-gold, with an inscription etched and embossed in black enamel.

During the entertainment that will follow, 25 masters of ceremonies will take turns in introducing celebrities.

The Broadway division is being assisted by an executive committee which includes, among others, Harry Warner, Norma Talmadge, Will Rogers, Marion Davies, Bert Lytell, Harry Richman and Winifred Sheehan, some working from Hollywood.

Although the Republican party has not yet attempted to organize a group in the theatrical and allied industries, George Akerson, director of publicity at the Waldorf-Astoria headquarters in New York, announced on Monday that a Republican Theatrical League may be formed in the near future. In the meantime, motion picture activities are being confined to a film, "The Master of Emergencies," which will be shown at political meetings. This picture, prepared with the cooperation of the New York State Republican headquarters committee, was written by Will Irwin and was originally shown during the 1928 campaign. The 1932 version, brought up to date by Mr. Irwin, includes a number of war scenes and shots of Mr. Hoover at important moments in his career. Milton J. Cross, NBC announcer, is narrator.

As a further aid to political gatherings, the Republicans have made use of a new device called the visaphone which combines recorded speech and pictures. Approximately ten of these machines will be employed to bring keynote speeches and speakers before voters.

Still further cooperation between leaders of the Democratic campaign and the picture industry was indicated by the appointment, on Tuesday, of Charles L. O'Reilly, president of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce, as head of the motion picture division. Mr. O'Reilly, whose headquarters will be at the Biltmore hotel, New York, will shortly start a nation-wide tour for the purpose of contacting all producing, distributing and exhibitor groups.

Roosevelt at Coast Pageant

It was also learned early this week that the Democrats are planning to make a campaign picture, probably in the form of a newsreel, which will be used at political meetings. This picture may also be shown from sound trucks at open-air meetings.

An important Democratic gathering, to be held under the direction of the New York State Committee, is scheduled for November 2, at the Madison Square Garden. A second parade of stage stars and others will be the feature of this meeting whose attendance, both afternoon and evening, is expected to total 30,000.

While on his West coast tour, Governor Roosevelt attended the motion picture electrical parade and sport pageant held at Los Angeles last Saturday under the chairmanship of Jack L. Warner, who also heads the motion picture division of the California Democratic organization. Will Rogers was spokesman and Conrad Nagel master of ceremonies. Among the stars listed as present were Joe E. Brown, grand marshal; Warner Baxter, Lew Ayers, Constance Bennett, Joan Bennett, Wallace Beery, Nancy Carroll, Jackie Cooper, Claudette Colbert, Gary Cooper, Leo Carillo, Bebe Daniels, James Dunn, Charles Farrell, Janet Gaynor, Sally Eilers, Ann Harding, Stan Laurel, Oliver Hardy, Ben Lyon, William Powell, Boris Karloff, Charles Ruggles, Warren William and Loretta Young.

Accompanying Governor Roosevelt on his Western tour were Charles C. Pettijohn, general counsel for the Film Boards of Trade and legislative advisor to the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, and Joseph P. Kennedy, a former film executive and banker.

Allied with the Republican campaign, although unofficially, are Will H. Hays and Louis B. Mayer. In a recent newspaper interview at Chicago, Mr. Hays made the suggestion that President Hoover undertake a cross-country campaign trip. "There is always a benefit from the intimate touch between the candidate and the voter," said Mr. Hays.

Believing that the efforts of industry leaders to support either the Republican or the Democratic ticket gave rise to harmful speculation as to the probable use of the screen as an agency for political propaganda, the national board of directors of the Allied States Association, at a meeting at Chicago on August 22, passed a resolution that Allied independent theatre owners under no circumstances would permit the use of their screens for propaganda purposes.

Objectionable Signs Ordered Off Broadway

Following a recent complaint by the Broadway Association, New York City officials speedily moved to clean up all forms of objectionable theatre ballyhoo and advertising from the Roaring Forties. The campaign of the building department, which began last Thursday, has been directed at inflammable cloth signs and elaborate marquee displays. The ordinance provides that all marquee displays must be 10 feet above the sidewalk and not higher than eight feet above the marquee. Many swinging signs, amplifiers and public address systems already have been removed.

Following a conference in the office of Borough President Levy, two theatre representatives, Leopold Friedman, secretary of Loew's, and J. Henry Walters, special counsel for RKO, have been appointed to confer with John E. Gratke, managing director of the Broadway Association, in an attempt to work out a satisfactory compromise.

RAGE FOR GIVEAWAYS DIMINISHING; FALSE STIMULANT IN PRESENT FORM

Exhibitors Turning from Grocery Baskets, Ham and Refrigerators to Merchandising Pictures as New Product Appears

Inducements Placed Before Patrons Ranged from Free Psychoanalysis to Ice Cream Cones and Furnished Home

The mania for handing out gifts and prizes, which for a year has held theatres in its grip in first-runs and neighborhoods alike and from coast to coast, is rapidly being cured. The practice in its present extreme form is considered by many theatre operators as an evil of the worst type, and a nationwide study of the situation indicates that exhibitors almost everywhere are awakening to the fact that gifts as a steady diet for increased attendance are pure fiction. With prospects of a higher standard in the season's product daily showing signs of materializing and general economic improvement showing itself they are turning their attention from the false stimulus of grocery baskets, hams and electric refrigerators to the more important business of merchandising pictures.

Theatre owners are learning that the extremes to which they have gone in recent months to attract patronage with offers ranging from a free psychoanalysis and an ice cream cone served in the lobby, to a complete home fully furnished, eventually react as a boomerang, and that the majority of steady patrons revolt against having their film entertainment cluttered up with ballyhoo about raffles and prizes.

Not even in the early days of nickelodeons, when "Country Store Nights" were quite the rage, did the industry participate to such an extent in wild proffers of elaborate gifts.

Exploitation Centered on Giveaways

In many locations the current wholesale practice reached the point where even a concentration of merchandising effort and exploitation was directed almost exclusively on the give-away, with the entertainment phase relegated to the background. Independent and neighborhood theatres have been involved in the practice on and off for many years, but the past season found large and small circuits also turning their attention to the plan.

Large circuit operators agree that the basic reason for the recent widespread interest lay in the lean receipts a year ago. The movement spread rapidly and then other theatre owners began to believe that the gift activities of competition compelled them to do likewise. The competitive situation was acute in many key cities, particularly Detroit, where the Fox downtown theatre started off with three automobiles every week, followed by the Hollywood, a second run de luxe, giving two cars each week and a group of 40 Allied theatres offering $2,500 in cash weekly. In other territories independents claimed that unfair protection accorded downtown theatres made it necessary for them to resort to a protective measure and they selected give-aways as the medium. One theatre offered $400 a night four times weekly and another undertook to give away 60 automobiles of a standard make, one each week.

BETTER FILMS, FEWER GIFTS, EDITORIAL URGES

"We notice that the last free auto offered as bait by a local moving picture palace did not draw such big crowds as heretofore," said an editorial recently in the Daily Journal of Commerce, Portland, Ore.

"Possibly the movie producers may take the hint.

"Is it too much to hope that they may try to produce better pictures as a means of increasing patronage instead of turning movies into lotteries?"

Many exhibitors adopted the plan to meet the reduced admission prices of competitors.

One reaction to the awarding of merchandise at theatres came from local merchants who said that their business suffered accordingly. A crockery manufacturer in a large key city said that he sells more of his wares to theatres than to stores. Many merchants, as a result of inroads made on their business, are now turning thumbs down on exploitation tieups and window displays in which they previously had cooperated with exhibitors.

A checkup of the situation indicated that theatres participating in the practice hold Prize Nights and Pal Nights; Gold Nights, Gim-me Nights and Gift Nights; Country Fairs and Giveaways; Lucky Number Nights, Treasure Nights, Merchants' Nights and whatnot. Prizes range all the way from sugar-cured hams and bacon strips to $2,500 in cash awarded weekly, and a varied assortment of Fords, Chevrolets, Nashes, Pontiacs, Austins, Essexes, Plymouths and a junior model Stutz racer have been raffled.

Warner Bars Plan

In one case a complete home was the grand prize and in others exhibitors offered as box office inducements household appliances and foodstuffs; electric heaters, waffle irons, refrigerators, vacuum cleaners, washing machines and radios; jewelry of every description, including diamond rings, china sets, dresser sets, silverware and glassware, canned fruits and vegetables, pies, ice cream sodas and cones, iced tea, meat and fruit baskets and candy, live dogs and ponies, 12 tons of coal, gas ranges, stock certificates, toilet preparations, linen and free psychoanalysis; furniture, suites for bedrooms, living rooms and diners; gold pieces, pictures and picture frames, theatre passes, oil burners, motor boats, country store prizes and fur coats, riding habits, men's suits and brides' complete trousseaux; auto radios and service memberships; garden implements and hardware; week end trips and trips to Yellowstone and Hollywood; airplane trips, vacation trips, hotel and transportation expenses, cut-rates on bus lines—everything under the sun.

It was reported recently that, in order to offset various china and silverware giveaways as practiced by independents in California, Fox West Coast was contemplating wholesale participation in the practice by awarding 100 Essex automobiles and a like number of refrigerators. Warner Brothers issued a stern order about two months ago to managers to desist from the so-called "racket," and it appears that other large circuits will soon follow suit. Harold B. Franklin, head of RKO Theatres, considers it an evil, and so does Walter Vincent, of Wilmer and Vincent, while Sam Dembow, Jr., of Publix, indicated that the company is practically eliminating giveaways. However, some weeks ago Publix staged an elaborate merchandising drive, known as "Sam Katz Week," during which its managers had 52 automobile giveaways, 30 stage weddings, all involving gifts of some nature; 35 refrigerator giveaways; 23 "free gold" nights and 19 parades and merchant tieups. H. M. Richey, of Allied in Michigan; Lee Ochs, independent circuit operator in New York; Fred S. Meyer, of MPTO in Milwaukee, Harry Arthur, Glen Dickinson and other important circuit operators voiced opposition to the practice and said it is of no permanent benefit to theatres. On the other hand, M. A. Lightman, president of the MPTOA, said the plan is beneficial in limited doses.

In Detroit, the county prosecutor joined Allied to rid the city of giveaways and the authorities promised to take steps against violators. The order quickly ended a two-year orgy. Other city and state officials recently indicated opposition to the practice, and many are now engaged in dusting off old statutes to aid in prosecution of offenders. Several states have laws prohibiting the awarding of major prizes from theatre stages, branding them as lotteries, but theatres have found a way around this by having the winner purchase the prize for $1. Extreme caution is being used in mentioning the prizes in advertisements in newspapers or in other mailed matter. A federal law prohibits the use of mails for publicizing a raffle. Seattle authorities plan to draft an ordinance against the practice. Milwaukee's Better Business Bureau is engaged in a fight against it.

Chicago Does Away with Gifts

There are some cases where exhibitors report increased business from giveaways, but in the main theatre owners declare that while receipts are higher on the night free gifts are offered, the subsequent let down in business at following performances more than over-balances the increase.

The practice of giving away a piece of merchandise to each patron on a certain night still continues, although theatres engaged in this practice have suffered by raffles of so-called "major" prizes which are usually won by selection of a "lucky" ticket stub in a drawing on the stage.

Give-aways and prize drawings are now practically a thing of the past in Chicago. The practice, which enjoyed considerable popularity there a year ago, gradually diminished as the vogue spread and the extra business resulting from prize and giveaway nights diminished as competition increased. Added to this is the fact that chain drug stores, restaurants and other places went into the giveaway business on a large scale, offering free automobiles, radios and other large items. This served in a large way to take the edge off the idea for theatres. Carl Appell, Chicago's assistant corporation counsel, issued a statement in which he said that "any scheme in which the amount a customer receives is decided by chance is a lottery." The practice of giving away a piece of merchandise to every patron on a certain night still continues in Chicago and is outside the classification of lottery. Such schemes are said to have proved business builders, since they have aided business over a period of weeks rather than in spurts. The most popular giveaways along this line have been dresserware sets, silver and linen.

Charlotte theatres have not participated in the awarding of prizes in several months. Recently, the Carolina theatre cooperated with merchants and a local newspaper in giving votes in connection with a citywide trade event, but save for this one activity Charlotte theatres have not given any prizes.

The Philadelphia territory goes in heavily for premiums and giveaways, particularly among independents. Though drawings are frowned upon in eastern Pennsylvania, southern Jersey and Delaware, about 300 theatres are at present using premiums, representing between 30 and 40 per cent of the territory. Of these, 250 are consistent users, some for the last four years. The premium use depends mainly on location and competition afforded by chain theatres. The most popular premium appears to be china, of the 60-piece variety. Most of the gifts are aimed directly for women appeal. Many of Philadelphia's larger houses have held drawings, an electric refrigerator being the most popular. Many local theatre men have found, however, that interest in such drawings is not a substantial means of increasing attendance. The fact that perhaps only one person in 30,000 can win seems to keep down the interest in such affairs. In addition, there is a state law, supplementing the federal law against lotteries. Also the trial of Senator Davis of that state in connection with fraternal lotteries has focused attention on such matters.

Iowa Opinion Divided

Twenty-five theatres in Iowa which are using prize nights and lotteries are divided upon their benefits. A number say that it is one of those things which is easier to start than to stop, and many of the older exhibitors say that giveaways attract an audience which is not permanent. However, owners at Estherville, Cedar Rapids and Spirit Lake feel that giveaways build business and that fans become interested permanently in the theatre. The U. S. law against advertising lotteries in the mails seems to be the only law which has affected the use of gifts and lottery nights at Iowa theatres.

The practice of giving prizes at theatres in Alabama has been practiced in many cities even though state authorities point out that it is illegal. Birmingham has two or three houses which practice giveaways. Articles range from candy to autos. Most managers in that city feel that giveaways increase box-office receipts provided a major prize is given away and the campaign is not too long-drawn-out.

Several Salt Lake theatres are giving away automobiles. There is no law in Utah against such prizes. Extra business has been drawn to the Capitol and Paramount.

Giveaways have engulfed St. Louis. Exhibitors and other merchants who are using the "something-for-nothing" bait to tone up business are hopeful that it will mean added profits in their tills. For the time being everything is moving smoothly and fastly. Everyone in town is hopeful of winning a new automobile, refrigerator or whatnot. Fred Wehrenberg, president of the MPTO of St. Louis, is among the owners who have joined the procession, but says he would prefer that theatres depend strictly on their shows to get customers. His views are shared by other local exhibitors and the question will come before the MPTO convention at the Coronado hotel on October 4. St. Louis Amusement Company with its 22 neighborhood houses is a party to a citywide "Get-a-NASH-Automobile-for-Nothing" arrangement that is running for eight weeks, an automobile being given each week. Merchants are also in on the arrangement. To meet this competition, Mr. Wehrenberg and other independent owners have started a similar project. Local laws governing such pools make them illegal if they are operated for gain. In view of this, merchants participating have been instructed to give chances to any one asking for them regardless of whether they make a purchase or not.

EXHIBITOR LEADERS TO DISCUSS PROBLEM

In next week's issue of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, exhibitor leaders of the country and important independent and circuit operators will discuss the giveaway rage which has been sweeping the country in recent months. Reactions at the box office, experiences of the circuits with giveaways and what the practice means to the industry will be subjects of the discussion.

Practice Dropping at Kansas City

Out of 20 leading exhibitors in Kansas City territory, only three declared they benefit from giveaways. The others consider the practice an "evil." Giveaways reached a peak in Kansas City last winter and spring when exhibitors outdid each other to offer "more for the money," but the practice seems to have subsided, except for a few instances, exhibitors finding that the results are detrimental. While it lasted, the craze reached the ridiculous. Besides ordinary giveaways, such as groceries, linen and chinaware, theatres gave away refrigerators, men's suits, dogs, auto radios, automobiles, automobile service organization membership and money. Exhibitors who benefit from the practice say it proves advantageous in some spots and not in others. The method of putting on the giveaway has much to do with its success, they say. Lotteries and drawings that might be construed as such are forbidden in Kansas and Missouri.

Newspaper tieups wherein contests are used to create interest in current features are used extensively at Baltimore by first-runs, prizes in most cases amounting to $25 and free admissions.

Many Delaware theatres in small farmer communities have been making awards, and houses in Dover, Newark, Smyrna, Harrington, Milford and Georgetown have been offering Frigidaires, while several have been making awards in cash. The giveaways have been popular and the performances are well patronized. However, a number of theatres have dropped the awards. Stanley-Warner houses gave an auto, refrigerators, household articles and gold pieces which boosted attendance considerably. Authorities raised no objection.

San Antonio theatres, de luxe and lower grades, have been awarding prizes without molestation from authorities. The only precaution taken by the theatres is the observance of postal regulations. Within six months, the Texas, Publix's ace house, has given away four Chevrolets. The RKO Majestic gave away a fur coat and at present a raffle is under way on a riding habit. A number of suburban theatres use the old "country store" one night weekly; goods of trivial value are given. San Antonio managers agree that lotteries are more of an evil than an asset because theatres are crowded on lottery nights to the detriment of other nights.

There is not much use of giveaway methods in Louisville's downtown houses, but many suburbans are handing out dollar bills, groceries, hams, radios, washing machines, and so on, on certain nights, some every night. The Rialto is the only downtown theatre that gives away anything. A Chevrolet car is presented on Monday nights. The Brown theatre gave away trips to Yellowstone, also radios and refrigerators. The Alamo also tried the plan, giving away radios, then dropped it. Many local exhibitors feel that it would be a good idea if every one stopped giving away prizes. There has been no local or state objection to such policies.

Twenty "lucky" patrons of the Humboldt theatre in Boston's Roxbury district received awards of a share of stock apiece. The plan went over well and wide interest was taken. Five shares in each of the principal stock groups were given. Stocks in 20 corporations were represented.

Used at Tampa

Gift nights have been played up strong in Tampa, and they pulled considerably. One theatre has given away eight automobiles, several radios, electric refrigerators, airplane trips and jewelry, and plans an offer of five Austin cars. Business at these drawings has been immense and there seems to be little, if any, reaction on other days. As most Tampa theatres have presented gifts, and profited by it, there is no expressed sentiment against them, and there is no law prohibiting their use.

Giveaways are beneficial only to smaller houses, inasmuch as they serve only to increase receipts temporarily, according to Oklahoma City exhibitors. Warner houses and Publix have awarded Fords. Drawings of this kind are not illegal in Oklahoma, the only drawback being the federal law, hence drawings are not advertised in newspaper mail copies.

Everything from electric irons to $1,500 automobiles is being given away in Seattle. Fords, Chevrolets, Plymouths and Nash sedans have been awarded by John Danz's Sterling chain, Fox West Coast, Jensen-Von Herberg and Lukan's Farwest Theatres. Because of state laws, winners are required to pay $1.00 for the auto. The auto giveaways are said to have helped receipts whenever used, because several theatres are included every time there is a drawing, the circuit playing to more than capacity at each theatre. However, Seattle circuit executives declare that they are not especially favorable to this method of attracting business, but will continue to use the plan as long as competitors do likewise. In the suburban and neighborhood Seattle theatres, special gift nights are held regularly. Merchandise for the household, food products and the like are given away. These special nights do not attract especially large houses, but are used instead of admitting two-for-one, or running double-feature. It has been reported that city authorities are planning a measure that will prohibit giveaways, particularly automobiles.

At Albany there are no theatres awarding prizes as a means of bolstering box office receipts. The theatres there have avoided such practices.

In Denver, giveaways have been used to extremes. Local houses, and those in towns near by, have used the idea and it is now fast falling into disrepute. The popular "night," especially in Fox houses, is the "gold" night, when $50 is given. The merchants each donate $5. Pub-lix has given away several cars, and the winner had to be at the Paramount at the time of the drawing. Increased attendance was found the night of the drawing, but it was said that it hurt attendance other nights. Most of Denver's theatre men were of the opinion that inducements such as these would be continued, at least until conditions improved.

The plan has assumed increasing proportions among Milwaukee exhibitors and business men and the Better Business Bureau and the retail division of the Milwaukee Association of Commerce is urging trade groups and civic organizations to join in the condemnation of lotteries. Until recently, prizes were awarded by only outlying theatres. However, on September 10 and 11, two automobiles were awarded at a local first-run circuit house. Most exhibitors in Milwaukee believe that the lottery does not build business. Gift offers invariably increase box-office attendance at the outset, they say, but, as in the case of double features when they become a general practice, soon lose their effectiveness. Likewise they have resulted in keen competition, so that where theatres were originally content to give just baskets of groceries, they now offer furniture, radios and automobiles. Merchants donate merchandise or the theatre gives numbers upon the purchase of a ticket. Lotteries in Wisconsin are illegal and this form of promotion is not looked upon favorably by leading Milwaukee exhibitors. Many using this plan say they were forced into it by opposition.

The awarding of prizes and presentation of merchandise to stimulate attendance have assumed proportions of a menace, declare leading owners and exchange heads of San Francisco, where, it is pointed out, many theatres have become distributing depots for merchandise, with entertainment of secondary consideration. None of the downtown houses in San Francisco has engaged in the plan, but the practice flourishes in the suburbs where prizes range from automobiles, washing machines, vacuum cleaners and cash, to groceries, dishes and toilet preparations. One circuit has given away eight automobiles. San Francisco exhibitors are almost a unit in declaring that prizes have not increased business noticeably. The result has been to pack houses on certain nights and leave them almost empty at other times. One San Francisco theatre that started out with one gift night a week is now giving away merchandise five nights a week. Entertainment is featured as the sole attraction on but two nights. San Francisco exchange managers brand the gift schemes as a greater menace than the double bill. They said exhibitors seek cheap pictures for gift nights, declaring that they can not pay regular prices for films and prizes at the same time. Objections to drawings have been made by San Francisco's Parent-Teacher organizations and women's clubs.

Illegal in Canada

Lotteries and drawings are strictly illegal in Canada. The only loophole is that the giving away of merchandise as premiums, where there is no cash consideration, does not come under the statutes. Recently, authorities at Ottawa banned drawings at theatres and a conviction was registered against an Ottawa owner.

Oscar R. Hanson, general manager of Allied Exhibitors of Ontario, has been preaching to his 77 members: "You can overdo the gift stunt; you can give your theatre away if you want to—the people won't object."

Neighborhood chain houses in Toronto have gone in for gift nights and independent exhibitors followed suit, but many regret the step, and it looks as if the majority will abandon the plan as soon as the prize sets are completed, particularly because theatre business is on the upgrade and special inducements are regarded as being unnecessary. Toronto exhibitors admit they lost friends among nearby merchants because of the giving away of merchandise prizes—they found the storekeepers less ready to cooperate in window displays and other advertising.

The giveaway problem was settled in Detroit two months ago by a ruling from the prosecutor's office, construing all such inducements not benefiting the entire audience as lotteries. Enforcement of the ruling comes under a state anti-lottery law. Action is believed to have been prompted by the three leading newspapers. Intervention by the prosecutor's office was welcomed by exhibitors, for at the time the situation had become acute. Cash awards led the list, ranging from $400 four times a week, down to $10 a night.

Drawings for prizes, regarded by some New England exhibitors as a business pull and by others as a deterrent, have not hit Providence. Exhibitors there have steered clear of the idea, although in some small houses down state they give crockery and candy occasionally. Most Providence showmen think that to indulge in lotteries is cheapening and in the nature of an apology for the entertainment offered.

At Houston, giveaways flourished throughout the summer, but for the past three weeks they seem to have become passe. Exhibitors are lukewarm in their discussion of the practice now.

With an anti-gambling law which is apparently enforced only against professional gaming, and then with only indifferent success, Washington, D. C., is a mecca for street carnivals at which "wheels" and other devices are freely used, but theatres use prize methods only infrequently and, except for a few neighborhoods, drawings are rarely used, most exhibitors holding that the film's the thing, and if a picture won't bring them in, it does not improve the reputation of the house to offer prizes. In the neighborhoods, the gift performance has been found to be a business builder for Saturday afternoon shows for youngsters.

Giveaways have been used by many in Cincinnati and in every case they resulted in increased returns. The most extensive plan was staged by L. B. Wilson, operating a circuit at Covington, Ky., where 60 Pontiac coupes were given away one each week. Another house now is conducting a "Gold Night," at which $100 in gold, consisting of 14 prizes, is given away. The result is a lineup at the box-office. The only difficulty thus far encountered is at the Andalus where Frank Hammel, manager, awarded an automobile. Rival exhibitors, probably anticipating inroads on their business, caused Mr. Hammel's arrest for alleged violation of the lottery law. The case still is unsettled. Several local exhibitors say they are in favor of giveaways, and may put it into practice later, and exhibitors who have used the plan report good response, and excellent word-of-mouth advertising. Although there is a federal law against a lottery and a state law prohibits such procedure, no adverse reaction, except in the case cited, has resulted.

There has been considerable discussion at Portland as to whether the practice was good business. The majority of managers say that it is not. The largest first-run has given away 10 automobiles, 10 refrigerators and two motorboats. For this particular house it did help, and on the nights of the drawing some 5,000 people endeavored to get in to occupy 3,000 seats. The management advised, however, that there was not as much interest manifested by patrons when the second motorboat was given away and they have decided to give away 10 more cars instead. The John Hamrick theatres have used an automobile in two instances, but do not expect to repeat, as Mr. Hamrick believes it does not build permanent patronage.

At St. Petersburg, Fla., presentation of an Austin automobile increased the income of a local theatre by several hundred dollars. This form of "drumming" up business is also successful in other Florida towns.

"Evil" at New Orleans

Prize awards and giveaways have grown into an evil at New Orleans, even affecting first-run houses. While certain exhibitors are of the opinion that they do not help the box office permanently, forcing the public to shop for the house that gives the best prizes, and while exchanges have attempted to persuade exhibitors to eliminate them, the possibilities of a cure, other than a legal one, are remote. Loew's State and Orpheum are not in on the policy. The situation in the neighborhood field is a maze. Independents claim they were forced to give away prizes by the action of United Theatres in this matter and by what they term excessive protection granted United by exchanges.

Cleveland has a city ordinance against raffles, drawings, or contests in which there is any element of chance. This ordinance, however, is not enforced, with the result that until recently almost every subsequent-run theatre in the territory employed this means of boosting business. While the practice is still used, it is not as prevalent as it was earlier in the summer. The circuits report that they have discontinued drawings in practically all spots. Independents still employ this plan. In no instance have theatre owners been interfered with by city officials. In Cleveland, all giveaways and premiums will automatically cease January 1, when the Horwitz protection settlement goes into effect. The agreement provides abolition of double features, giveaways, lotteries and premiums. There is also a state ordinance.

WHAT USE THE FILM WITHOUT THE GIRL

Canada's most northerly motion picture theatre has folded! After a stern struggle as bitter as the weather in the land of its location, the only house in Churchill, in the province of Manitoba, has closed its doors. This, strangely enough, despite the residence in Churchill of some 500 men working on construction projects. The management tried everything for a full year. Silent pictures did not appeal, amateur nights lost their flavor, star names were meaningless and talking films evoked no response. The offer of "Gents, 50 Cents, Ladies Free" went unanswered. There are only 15 women in the town, all wives of officials—and thereby hangs a tale. The men unanimously declared, in effect, "What's the use of going to a show, if you can't take your girl," and the theatre closed its door.

says noted critic concerning "Clear All Wires!", then chats about four other stage plays

by BENJAMIN DE CASSERES

The word-vigorous Mr. DeCassères, who loads his typewriter with machine-gun ribbons of verbal staccato in discussing the stage plays of the day from the viewpoint of screen possibilities, this season add a new touch to his already terse descriptions when he sums up his comment on each play with a succinct percentage rating of picture value.

Internationally known essayist, epigrammatist, and poet, Mr. DeCasseres speaks with the wisdom of experience gained within the studio when he applies a keen camera eye to the outgivings of the Broadway stage. Four years as title writer and surgeon of foreign and domestic pictures with Paramount Publix and two years as head of the title department of Universal contributed to that seeing eye.

CLEAR ALL WIRES!

Before the curtain had been up half of the first act on "Clear All Wires!" by Bella and Samuel Spewack, I saw in my mind's eye a grand picture.

Herman Shumlin, of "Grand Hotel" fame, produced it and Thomas Mitchell swung the first real play of the season to a smashing over-the-topsy.

The original theme—in which sizzle and steam a hundred tense situations and comic twists—is spoofing a "great" foreign correspondent.

Buckley Joyce Thomas, of the Chicago Press, has been fired off to Moscow by the Biggie of the paper because Buck went after the Biggie's "Follies" girl. But the Blond Thing follows Buck. Biggie in pursuit, booze-anchored in Paris.

Buck is a lying, bombastic, news-manufacturing, high-powered, screaming-Sam of a correspondent. He has already faked the world in all capitals.

To get back in the good graces of his employer he plots to have his secretary fire a bullet into the leg of the "last of the Romanoffs," a poor aristocratic sap he has found.

But the mighty Commissar of Foreign Affairs arrives to see Buck and would have got the shot had not Buck thrown himself in front of the Commissar and received a shot in the arm himself.

Buck becomes the Hero of Russia. In the third act he is found out—and here the play speeds so fast in hectic incidents that you've got to plug in all your receiving sets to get them.

Meanwhile, the frail, believing that Buck has put her on the train back to Paris, is really on her way to Siberia! Another of Buck's tricks. When she shows up in Moscow again after traveling à la pig-sty—wow!

Buck is fired and Hearst sends him to China as the curtain falls.

Tom Mitchell did the best work of his career as Buck. A superb cast of twenty-eight backed his tremendous verbal pitching.

This is a grab-off as a picture. With Thomas Mitchell or Lee Tracy there couldn't be a dull shot in this piece of monumental hoop-la.

Picture value, one hundred per cent.

BEST YEARS

It will be slow getting to the screen, but mother-love is getting it in the slats along Broadway!

First it was "The Silver Cord," then "When the Bough Breaks," then "Another Language" (in which Family Life is taken for a ride), and now it is a play by Raymond Van Sickle called "Best Years."

In matters of theme the screen follows the stage and books. I doubt whether it will ever acquire a backbone of its own. When Mazuma met Courage on the Narrow Road (saith the good Talmud) Courage took to the tall corn. Amen.

In "Best Years," which sports Katherine Alexander, we have a very simple story, boresomely and turgidly told in three acts.

A mother puts up a fight to retain her daughter, who has fallen in love with a regular guy. The old lady even gets paralysis. She even croaks at the last curtain. Yes, mothers are selfish; but there are some glorious exceptions (if you look hard).

The trouble with the play besides its structural weakness is that the girl never read the riot act. A sock in the mother's jaw is what is needed at the end of the second act. But the old Biograph rules still forbid it.

Picture value, a double nit.

THE CHAMELEON

Since the Guild play in which the boy was seduced by the week-end vamp while his family were away at the Ana Ball, everything done from the Hungarian is supposed to upset the apple-cart.

But I've been in at the death of one Hungarian play after another since them. Why not give Czechoslovakia a chance? She's in the Versailles Treaty, too.

"The Chameleon" was no doubt as purely Magyar in its original form as Scotch before it reaches West Forty-eighth street. But it didn't jell in its American bowl.

The fable is about a young and gland-teasing picture actress who tries to make a crusty old doctor, a woman-go-way sort of duck.

To neck the fossiliferous fellow she stages an operation for appendicitis. Naturally, when he sees the goods uncovered—well, there you are! Even this stale old sawbones had his moments.

Picture value, pre-Bunny.

COUNSELLOR-AT-LAW

Paul Muni and "Counsellor-at-Law" are about the best entertainment on Broadway as I write this.

This play, in my opinion, is Elmer Rice's best yet. It is vital, recognizable, vibrant with characterization, and has three dramatic situations of great intensity.

And humor flows through it like wine through the gullet of a Houston street cop.

Through Simon's law office in a day passes Humanity with most of its ills, undressed humanity.

This Simon-the-lawyer of Muni's is the low-down and high-lights on the legal profession. He is in jams; he has done dirty work himself; he is always doing good turns. In a word, a human being.

There is a fine climax where, distracted and gone stale, he is about to jump through the window when he gets a big case. The old game is on again!—as it is in "Front Page."

Paul Muni is one of our great actors. Who can ever forget that surrender to the cops in "Scarface?" It is one of the high points of the acting art.

As the lawyer in "Counsellor-at-Law" he has a different kind of role. But he is perfect in it. And the scene with the Communist is one of the fine bits on our stage.

PAGE PYGMALION

This play, by Carl Henkle, takes the old yarn of Pygmalion and Galatea and plays it from a New York angle with all kinds of screwy trimmings.

Let's focus: There's a fellow who defaces marble in the name of Art. He's in New York from Oklahoma City, where he left Will Rogers and Alfalfa Bill flat on their pancakes.

The sculptor is split emotionally between his poor but beautiful model (blondine skin) and a girl sticky with jack. The latter has a mother who is so up-stage that no sun-arc can reach her. This old crone had a janitor in her life, who (family skel.) is the father of the daughter.

Well, the girl with the jack puts up the poor model at auction, pretending that she is a statue (well, you coulduv slayed me when that happened!).

Well (again), love triumphs over poverty, as Dory Dreiser would say, and the young Rodin goes back to Oklahoma City.

Picture value, 1 per cent.

INVESTIGATION OF ERPI WORKINGS WILL BE USED BY WARNERS IN SUIT

Engineering Company Reports Finding That Mandatory Servicing by Erpi Is Not Necessary in Stanley Theatres

The controversy between Warner Brothers and the motion picture sound subsidiaries and affiliates of American Telephone and Telegraph Company will blaze into the open on November 2 when an impressive array of high-powered legal talent will assemble in United States district court at Wilmington, Del., to fight a battle which has been smoldering since arbitration of another phase of the Erpi-Warner dispute became somnolent some months ago.

The results will be of interest to every theatre owner and circuit operator using Western Electric equipment because the Telephone company, Western and Electrical Research Products must defend monopolistic charges filed by Warners, through its circuit affiliate, Stanley Company of America, which will seek to prove that mandatory weekly servicing and service charges on Erpi's theatre reproducers are unnecessary and should be abolished by decree of the court; that equipment provided by Western Electric is actually sold and not leased for 10 years, as stipulated in Erpi's contracts with theatres, and that costs of parts sold by Erpi are excessive.

Warner Files Deposition

The newest move in the campaign, which started on June 27 when the suit was filed, took place late last week when Harry M. Warner, president of Stanley and various other Warner companies, placed on file in federal court at Wilmington his deposition in the case along with other exhibits, including what is said to be a thorough investigation and study of the affairs of Erpi, made by the New York firm of Ford, Bacon and Davis, Inc., well known in the engineering field. In its relation to the questions of the necessity of, and charges for, cost of compulsory periodic service rendered by Erpi, the Ford, Bacon and Davis report says:

(1) "That the mandatory periodic inspection services, as now rendered by Erpi, are not necessary for satisfactory maintenance of Western Electric sound reproducing systems installed in theatres of the Stanley Company of America, Inc., and that this company should be able to provide an equal or better, more economic and better organized service for this equipment through its own technical organization."

(2) "That the aforesaid services of Electrical Research Products, Inc., have comparatively little real worth to the Stanley Company of America, Inc."

(3) "That, regardless of questions as to necessity of the aforesaid services of Erpi the charges made by it by that company in the Philadelphia district are indicated to be greatly in excess of cost of rendering the service even after including the cost of technical staff actually used in rendering," and

(4) "That the analysis of probable cost of manufacturing parts of the Western Electric sound equipment indicates that the prices charged for the parts thus far analyzed are considerably in excess of reasonable cost of manufacture, including factory, sales and general overhead expenses and a fair profit margin."

Ford, Bacon and Davis describe in detail "the evidence and information considered in arriving at these conclusions," which, it is understood, will play an important part in the suit. Exhibits of photostatic copies of stories appearing in the motion picture trade press are also included in the exhibit. In Mr. Warner's deposition, he said that A. T. and T. and its various subsidiaries and associated companies have a practical monopoly of the interstate business of telegraphic communication and a substantial monopoly of the intrastate business of telephonic communication in the United States. He said that Western Electric Company of New York controls 98 per cent or more of the capital stock which is owned by A. T. and T. and that Western acts as purchasing agent for Bell Telephone for equipment not made by Western and also enjoys a substantial monopoly on the business of manufacturing and selling telephonic apparatus as a result of association by stock ownership and contracts.

Electrical Research Products, said Mr. Warner's deposition, engages in the furtherance of certain interstate business inaugurated by Western Electric and Erpi is the licensor of motion picture producing and distributing companies which produce and distribute about 90 per cent of all product in the United States. Erpi, he continues, enjoys a practical monopoly of the interstate business of supplying apparatus and equipment to producers for studio use and a substantial monopoly of interstate business of supplying theatres.

In the original bill of complaint, Stanley-Warner claimed that the alleged conspiracy charged in the action had its inception in wartime when a patents pooling agreement was entered into between General Electric, Radio Corporation, A. T. and T., Westinghouse, Western Electric and others.

On May 27, 1925, it is claimed, Western agreed with Walter J. Rich to cooperate over a period of nine months in which time Western was to improve and develop the equipment, while Mr. Rich was to deal with commercial aspects of production, marketing and financing. If they were successful at the end of that period in their joint development, Western would agree to give to Mr. Rich, exclusively, certain supplies for motion picture purposes in the United States, Alaska and Hawaii, according to the current Warner deposition.

Test Case, Said Vitaphone Head

When the suit was filed late in June, George Quigley, attorney and president of Vitaphone, another Warner subsidiary, said: "This is a test case for all theatres to determine the status of service charges and servicing, which no theatre wants." In answer to the action, H. G. Knox, vice-president of Erpi, declared that "the charges in this complaint are not new, but are merely part of the series of charges developed by Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., and various of its subsidiaries during the past four years. In our view, "the complaint has no merit and we shall be glad to have it decided."

First announcement of the suit came from Warners in a statement issued from the home office in New York on June 28, which said: "The complaint alleges that the transaction between Erpi and the theatre is put in the form of a lease by Erpi for the purpose of enabling the latter to exert greater control over the use of equipments by reserving the right to restrict the use of equipments whenever it chooses to do so to the reproduction of its licensees' talking motion pictures and also for the purpose of exacting service charges of an exorbitant amount and compelling the exhibitor to purchase repair parts at excessive prices. The complaint further alleges that the engineers who inspect the equipments condemn parts and require the replacement of those parts, for which replacement the exhibitor is charged at unreasonable prices, and that in many instances the parts so condemned by the

SERVICING NEEDED, DECLARES ERPI

In connection with the deposition filed in Wilmington in the case in behalf of Stanley Company, including the report of Ford Bacon & Davis, Electrical Research Products said:

"The obvious conclusion from this report is that the Western Electric sound system is such a perfect product that it needs no servicing. Unfortunately, this is a compliment that isn't deserved.

"As a part of the organization responsible for this sound system we think that we're the ones best qualified to pass upon its merits and limitations. In our opinion it is the outstanding sound system—both in quality and performance. But when you consider that even oil burners and automobiles need frequent servicing to keep them working absolutely right, it is obvious that this becomes all the more necessary for such a highly technical and complicated piece of mechanism as talking picture equipment. This servicing is necessary not only to maintain the highest quality of performance, but also to protect the box-office. A few postponed and canceled shows as the result of breakdowns might spell the difference between profit and loss."

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

EXHIBITORS are urged to warn cashiers to be on the lookout for a flock of spurious $20 bills, a new issue of which is now flooding the country. Department of Justice agents have not caught up with the band, which is moving rapidly across the country. There are thousands already in circulation and they are drawn on the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, series of 1928A; check letter C; face plate No. 2; and back plate No. 32, signed by W. O. Woods, treasurer of the United States, and A. W. Mellon, secretary of the treasury.

The bill is described as an unusually well executed counterfeit and bears serial numbers A 11 933 216 A; B 18 606 640 A, and B 28 606 640 A, printed from finely etched photo-mechanical plates on one sheet of paper, the general appearance of which is calculated to deceive the wary handler of currency. The bills are said to be perfect, with the exception that there are no threads and, although the makers first resorted to the use of bleached genuine money paper, they subsequently substituted a fair grade of bond paper which is thinner than the genuine.

Schoolday friends of George Schutz, editor of "Better Theatres," arrived in New York the other day from the rural sections of Wisconsin, Mr. Schutz' home state. They had come east with a truckload of long dill pickles and some assorted sweet mixed, and after disposing of their cargo, proceeded to the United States Rubber Building on Broadway, where "Better Theatres" and various other Quigley Publications are quartered.

Upon arriving at the spot, they dispatched a special messenger to the office of Mr. Schutz on the 14th floor, requesting his presence downstairs. "They're friends of yours from Wisconsin," said the messenger, "and they told me to tell you that you will have to come down if you want to see them. They're scared to come up this high."

A certain young man, purporting to be a noted director of a large studio in Hollywood, nearly succeeded recently in fleecing a couple of tourists from Springfield, Mass., of a considerable sum on the promise of great profits from a picture venture which he said he was about to start. Accidentally he made one little slip and his subjects immediately communicated with local police in California, who arrested the schemer and found him to be an internationally known confidence man whose record dates back some 32 years. At this point we find him making a compulsory visit to the "jug."

Ex-mayor James J. Walker will again be with us soon, and when he returns from a rest in southern Europe he may consider an offer to appear in a feature picture, which he received before leaving New York from one of the three biggest producers. The offer is said to involve a substantial sum and preceded another cabled abroad to "Jimmy" last week by Freddie Schader, publicity director of the Fox at Detroit, who guaranteed $10,000 for a week of personal appearances with the "possibility" of 10 additional weeks at the same figure, depending, we assume, on box office reaction.

Mr. Harpo Marx recently vacationed in New York and when he returned to California he immediately went to Santa Barbara for a vacation recuperation from his New York vacation, after which he will go back to Hollywood to rest up from his Santa Barbara vacation and then make plans with the other three Marxmen for another vacation to outline their next comedy, which may be interrupted by a couple of more vacations unless some one at Paramount catches him.

Howard Hughes, socalled "multi-millionaire" producer, is said to have arrived in New York the other day incognito as pilot on a transcontinental air line at a salary of $250 per month. Mr. Hughes is supposed to have temporarily forsaken the high position of production executive for that of pilot in order to gather at first hand some information for his next feature picture, a romance in aerial commerce, which a publicity announcement from his Hollywood office says "will be comparable to 'Hell's Angels' in its pretentiousness"—if not in cost. Mr. Hughes has learned a lot about production budgets since the days, three or four years ago, when he spent a sum reputed to be $4,000,000 for "Angels." Now he is checking air travelers' baggage and keeping the ship's log to get background.

Birmingham exhibitors, like all others, admit—maybe modestly—that a motion picture theatre is a very pleasant place to while away the hours. One resident in that important town of Alabama disagrees. When a downtown theatre closed for the night, recently, the management unknowingly locked in a customer who was asleep. Now the house is being sued for damages totaling $10,000 on the ground of having caused much anxiety to loved ones at home, as well as endangering the health of the transient "boarder."

Donald S. Friede, vice-president of Covici, Friede, publishers, has returned from a first-hand inspection of Majorca, that alleged paradise for writers in the Balearic Isles in the Mediterranean, east of Spain, which he found to be too hot and very much overrated. Mr. Friede saw only five out of 100 authors in the colony doing any work—what with native wine selling at 3½ cents a gallon and good cognac at the same price per drink. "Pure, natural laziness" is another reason attributed by the publisher to the lack of industry there.

Maybe Harold Lloyd will not admit it, but the fact remains he took a licking while filming the fight scenes in "Movie Crazy." It seems that Mr. Lloyd told Kenneth Thomson, a heavyweight, to make a haymaker look realistic without hurting, but when they went on the set, the fighter forgot (?) what the comedian had told him about pulling his punches. And Lloyd could not yell to him to stop because of the mike.

Leo Meehan's Hollywood Herald reports on the manager of the Castle theatre in Los Angeles who every once in a while visits his opposition, the Fox Manchester, to see what's going on. The other evening the opposition gave away a refrigerator and the Castle owner won it. He probably will use it as a giveaway at his own theatre to attract patrons away from Fox's.

"Placing complete confidence in the cooperation of studio employees," Sam Jaffe, RKO studio manager, has ordered all policemen from the stages.

The United States Navy has announced that its men must preserve their dignity when posing for motion pictures, which prompted the New Orleans Times-Picayune to observe, "That's more than the studios have been able to persuade some of their high-priced stars to do."

ROBERT F. SICK, advertising impresario of RKO, believes that the power of suggestion is great, particularly in its application to a couple of big, fat brewery "hosses" and a load of prosperity in beer barrels.

It seems that Mr. Sisk the other night witnessed one of the season's new shows, a subtle little piece called "Ballyhoo." In the first act finale several dozen assorted damsels ("very nice, too," Bob reports) shout to the rafters that Prosperity will be returned to the land through the medium of Ballyhoo—the Art, not the magazine.

"After hoofing this same message and tossing their torsos hither and yon," said Mr. Sisk, "the gals step aside to reveal a pair of the Brewers' Big Hosses on a treadmill, just whooping it down the road with a load of Prosperity in Beer Barrels." All of which is a happy, happy thought.

The incident is related—with relish—in Bob's weekly message in the current edition of RKO's house organ and at this point he interrupts with the thought that the idea of ballyhoo turning the trick is largely true, even in theatre operation, although he makes no mention of using a pair of brewers' "hosses" to help out. However, the team of stalwart dobbins and their cargo in the show so unbalanced Sisk that he could not get far. "Last week's column," he concluded, "ended with some Travel Notes and promised more." But the sight of those big Hosses hauling barreled Prosperity drove memories of his recent tour of key cities so completely from mind that Mr. Sisk was unable to complete his editorial masterpiece.

"Some of you will understand," he apologized. We do.

'Tis said that a good theatre manager should take an active interest in the affairs of his community. Bob Lewis, manager of the Fox theatre in Marinette, Wis., goes this adage one better. He has had considerable experience with bloodhounds and recently assisted Menominee county sheriff's deputies in the hunt for the slayer of a woman in that community. However, while trailing one of the dogs in semi-darkness in the woods, Bob stumbled over a windfall and fell down hill 20 feet, sustaining a sprained ankle and various cuts and bruises, and abruptly ending his participation in the hunt for the murderer.

There is a little story behind "Singing a Song to the Stars," which Cliff Edwards offered on a recent radio program. Several years ago Cliff was engaged for the motion picture "Montana Moon." Just before the cast left for location he was given a new number to study for the picture. It was "Singing a Song to the Stars." Cliff called for a piano and it was placed in the baggage car, but when the troupe arrived at its destination, Ukulele Ike had not mastered the tune and the piano had to be taken aboard the backs of two donkeys to the mountain setting. After the picture was completed there was a big celebration, the feature of which was tossing the piano into the canyon below. But that was before bankers' emissaries visited Hollywood with axes.

Joint Exhibitor Session Delayed To October 15

The campaign for government regulation of the industry which was launched last week in Chicago jointly by Allied and the MPTOA has been temporarily interrupted by M. A. Lightman, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners, the MOTION PICTURE HERALD correspondent learned from Abram F. Myers at Allied headquarters in Washington. A joint committee was appointed at Chicago to meet in Washington Thursday to definitely establish a line of procedure, but the inability of Mr. Lightman to be on hand as a committee member forced postponement until October 15.

Mr. Lightman said on Wednesday, "I wired Mr. Myers my inabiilty to attend, and suggested either a postponement or a meeting without me." He denied reports that the delay on his part is due to necessity of obtaining authorization of the MPTOA board of directors before taking further action on its behalf. Mr. Lightman explained that he is "scheduled to go to a meeting at St. Louis, October 4; want to be at the Tri-State convention, Memphis, October 9 and 10, and am scheduled to speak at a women's club at the Hotel Astor, October 18. So you see the impossibility of my being in Washington September 30, especially when I anticipate a two- or three-day session."

Three Newsreels Sign Union Pact

Three newsreel organizations, Pathe News, Fox Movietone News and Hearst Metrotone News, have concluded a one-year agreement with three cameramen's unions in an effort to clear labor tangles between now and next September.

Paramount News, which has not signed as yet, is expected to do so with the arrival in New York from Hollywood next week of Emanuel Cohen, vice president in charge of production. Pat Casey, who negotiates labor situations for the major companies, handled this agreement, which shifts salaries upward to a minimum weekly wage of $90. Involved in the deal are Local 644, New York; Local 569, Hollywood, and Local 666, Chicago. The contract eleminates, at least for one year, the possibility of the reels supplanting union men with non-union cameramen.

The agreement provides that newsreel companies may shift cameramen from one city to another at will; requires $10,000 in insurance protection for cameramen assigned to unusually hazardous work; authorizes companies to discharge union men on two weeks' notice. A cameraman may leave a newsreel at will under the same terms.

Patterson Named NBC Executive

Richard C. Patterson, Jr., commissioner of the department of correction of New York City since 1927, has resigned to become executive vice-president of the National Broadcasting Company. The appointment is effective October 1.

Merlin H. Aylesworth, president of NBC, explained that his additional duties as president of the Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation have made it necessary for him to divide his time between the two organizations. George F. McClelland, vice-president of NBC, has been advanced to the post of assistant to the president, and Mr. Patterson is succeeding Mr. McClelland.

At the time of his appointment to the department of correction Mr. Patterson was president of Peacock Motion Picture Company, and was principally interested in the production of films designed for distribution in China.

inspectors have been resold to other theatres."

The lines of battle between Warner Brothers and Western Electric were drawn soon after the beginning of sound, in July, 1926. After some five years of secret conflict the war first broke out last year when Warners charged that $50,000,000 was due the corporation from Erpi on unpaid royalties on sales of disc recording by Electrical Research, in accordance with an agreement entered into when the Warner corporation undertook the commercialization of Western Electric's talking picture device in 1926-27.

The royalty claim was in the hands of a special arbitration committee composed of Nathan Miller, former governor of New York; Frank Hogan, of Washington, D. C., and Judge Hiscock, of the New York Court of Appeals. Arbitration proceedings on the royalty demands commenced in New York on September 14, 1931.

At the beginning of the sessions it was generally believed that the arbitration proceedings eventually would find their way into court. Specifically, Warner Brothers demanded that the 7 per cent rate of royalty payments on disc recording be raised to 10 per cent.

Mr. Quigley denied reports which followed announcement in June of the Wilmington suit indicating that the Warner action against A. T. and T. and its affiliates has a bearing on the royalty arbitration. He also denied that the suit is intended as a means of strengthening the company's $50,000,000 royalty claim.

BRITISH SCIENTISTS TURN TO FILMS AS MEDIUM TO ADVANCE EDUCATION

Hollywood Making Many Pictures Beyond Reproach and Industry's Prestige Is Growing, Eminent Professor Tells Assn.

by BERNARD CHARMAN
London Correspondent

The British Association for the Advancement of Science for the first time has turned its eyes toward the motion picture. The association, whose membership includes the most highly specialized scientific brains in this tight little island, has been holding its 101st annual talkfest at York.

Particular interest in the screen as a medium with particular reference in education is being manifested by the association, which, moreover heard a sweeping defense of the cinema by an eminent professor. A. C. Cameron, Oxford secretary of education, was the speaker, and "The Film as a Cultural Force" his subject.

"An adult population which reads few books has turned to the cinema as its staple solace and enjoyment," Mr. Cameron said, and added: "The film is gaining in prestige. A growing number of cultivated and unaffected people enjoy going to the pictures, and frequent not merely the performances of intellectual film societies, but also the local picture house to see, for instance, Marlene Dietrich."

"Many who do not now go to the cinema," he continued, "would go if they could be certain of their fare, to see films which are good for their kind, whether that kind should be farce or drama, fact or fiction, and dealing with three-dimensional men and women."

Naturally you have to use words like "three dimensional" to scientific audiences, though what the professor wished to stress was that the films must center on real human beings.

"Many Films Beyond Reproach"

Next, Mr. Cameron got down to his question, and please note how he tempers his national pride with a hand for that spot out west where most of the public's "solace and enjoyment" comes from. "Can these films be produced in Great Britain?" he asks. "I believe that they can. But it is not sufficient to abuse Hollywood and say, 'Show British films.' Like films of other countries, British films have varied from the very good to the very bad, technically, artistically and morally, while Hollywood has made and is making many films that are beyond reproach."

That then gives you the essentials of what British scientists and the British public—for the Association is nowadays great newspaper copy—heard in favor of the cinema from a professor of education, but before leaving the matter it may interest Rita C. McGoldrick and her disciples to read just one more of the Cameronian gems of wisdom. As how:

"There is a great need for entertainment films made specially for children, of which there are all too few. Dramas of the Wild West and many comedies may be excellent fare. The children of today are as much entitled to their crooks as the children of yesterday to their bandits."

Mr. Cameron was supported in his remarks by Sir Benjamin Gott, formerly chairman of a prominent education authority, and F. A. Hoare, a director of Western Electric, who has devoted much time to research in the educational field. Naturally enough, these gentlemen have come in for much praise and thanks in the trade press, for the able and competent manner in which they have answered the puritans, kill-joys and anti-cinema maniacs.

Now comes the surprise.

All Officers of Commission

Mr. Cameron is none other than joint honorary secretary of the Commission on Cultural and Educational Films, Sir Benjamin Gott is chairman of the same body, and Mr. Hoare is honorary treasurer of the CCEF. And it will take a lot to convince me that the trade press has not recently been fulminating violently against this Commission, charging inability of its members to judge the cinema and incompetence to treat with the film industry!

Be that as it may, it becomes increasingly obvious every day that the public is having the words "education" and "cinema" in close juxtaposition held closely against its eyeballs; if they are held there long enough something is bound to happen.

And if that were not enough, we have Sir James Marchant—whom you may recall as sponsor of the "cinema university" project which I outlined a few weeks back—loosing another shaft. In a letter addressed to the CEA, the KRS and the Kinematograph Manufacturers Association, he advocates a Royal Institution to be established within the industry to promote its national and international interests, and suggests that the Prince of Wales might become its patron.

Sir James also nominates Simon Rowson, chief of Ideal Films as well as one of the most highly intellectual members of the industry, for presidency of the educational section of such an institution. He thinks the president of the whole body might be, year by year, either a leader of the industry or a leader of national life, and proposes that the annual convention of the concern should be a public event, supported by representatives of the Empire as well as foreign countries.

Well, that shows the canvas on which some people's minds are working, and there is general agreement that some form of control will be necessary if the industry is to be a force in the education field. There is much talk about a big trade meeting to thresh out the matter, and what a meeting that will be!

Sunday Fight on in District

The free fight for Sunday opening in individual districts is on. Croydon, one of London's more populous suburbs, is waging a strong campaign with the assistance of the CEA to break down the shackles of counter-cinema opinion in the local authority, which hitherto has resolutely held its face against the exhibitor, while at Maidstone, a rural township, a new appeal has resulted in a 14 to 5 vote in approval of Sunday cinemas. Under the Act recently passed through Parliament the local council must now apply to the Government for powers to allow the concession.

It might be considered that Maidstone exhibitors have won a glorious victory, but just throw a glance at these conditions which the council has laid down against the granting by the Government of the necessary approval:

Charity payment of £3 a night shall be paid by each cinema; performances shall not commence before 8 p. m.; a minimum of 25 per cent of the footage shown must be British; a travel or topical interest film must be included in each program; no farces shall be shown and an undertaking must be given that the films shown will be of a high class; conditions shall be reconsidered in six months.

And we call this "the land of the free!"

"Most of the (film) posters appear to have been born in hell," said the president of the Methodist Conference at a recent meeting. "I wonder that members of a Christian community go to see them, or queue up to see film stars who treat marriage as a stud farm." He apparently had not read the speech of A. C. Cameron outlined in the foregoing.

Increases in Parcel Post Rates Effective October 1

Increases in parcel post rates from one to three cents go into effect on October 1, the post office department has announced. The new rates are: First and second zones, eight cents for the first pound or fraction thereof, and 1.1 cents for each additional pound or fraction; third zone, nine cents and two cents, respectively; fourth zone, 10 cents and 3.5 cents, respectively; fifth zone, 11 and 5.3 cents; sixth zone, 12 and seven cents; seventh zone, 14 and nine cents; eighth zone, 15 and 11 cents.

Postage on parcels mailed on rural routes for local delivery will be two cents less than at these rates and 3 cents less when for other than local delivery. The new regulations permit mailing matter up to 70 pounds in weight and as large as 100 inches in length and girth combined.

Powers Plans Short Series

Powers Pictures is releasing a new series of short subjects, "The Secrets of Nature," with "Dream Flowers" as the first of the group. One subject will be released each month. Photomicrography is used in the production of the series.

Publix Shows TSC Advertising Films In 380 Theatres

With the renewal of its contract with Theatre Service Corporation, Paramount-Publix will continue to exhibit, in 380 of its neighborhood houses, the one-reel "Screen Broadcasts" produced and distributed by TSC for use of local advertisers. These direct advertising films are produced at TSC's studio in New Orleans and are also being released to the Kincey circuit in North Carolina; Palmetta Amusement Company, South Carolina; R. and R., Oklahoma and Texas; Griffith Amusement Company, in Oklahoma and Jefferson Amusement Company, in Texas, in addition to a number of independents.

The company distributes from New Orleans, Kansas City and Cleveland. William Johnson, president, is also head of Motion Picture Advertisers Service of New Orleans. Latest figures obtained from a TSC executive in New York indicate distribution to approximately 2,000 theatres in 1,700 cities, with an audience of 8,000,000.

Six advertisements are included in each "Screen Broadcast" which takes about 4½ minutes to show. The films are done in Technicolor and employ a musical accompaniment.

Theatre Service says it has evolved two types of pictures. The first is a series of syndicated services covering 27 fields. In this work the company obtained the cooperation of national associations of manufacturers and dealers which supplied campaign material and statistical information in their respective fields. Each of the "syndicated" series in this group of 27 includes 52 pictures—one 50-foot film released each week. This service, with accompanying name trailer, is available to local advertisers in such general classifications as drug stores, groceries, banks, laundries and others, and provides them with exclusive campaigns in their own lines of business.

The rate for showing one full week at every performance is $5 a thousand of average weekly attendance. Showings can be limited to one state, one city or even one theatre, and may be for one or more performances a week. Theatres displaying the service are paid by Theatre Service Corporation.

The second type of advertising picture takes the form of campaigns organized for and in cooperation with national advertisers. A Chevrolet series is now being shown; another, for Elizabeth Arden, was exhibited a short time ago. This service differs from the local syndicated pictures in that the manufacturers pay costs, based on attendance in the theatres signed, and has the opportunity of featuring products rather than types of service, which form the basis of the syndicated series.

"Roxy" to Stage Prelude

S. L. "Roxy" Rothafel will stage a special prelude to Radio's "A Bill of Divorcement" at the special reserved seat performance on Friday evening, at the RKO Mayfair on Broadway. The proceeds of the performance will be devoted to charity, through the Free Milk Fund for Babies, Inc.

Union Denied Injunction Against Distributors

A temporary injunction, designed to restrain distributors from refusing films to the union's own outdoor theatres, has been denied to Local 306, motion picture operators' union, in New York.

In making the decision on Tuesday, Judge Alfred M. Frankenthaler decided that the necessity for the injunction had not been shown. The suit of the union against independent circuits and major distributors will be tried on October 10. Restraint of trade and discrimination are charged and a permanent injunction to prevent further alleged boycotting of the union's open-air theatres is asked. Springer-Cocalis and Morris Kutinsky circuits, Charles O'Reilly of the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce, the New York Film Board and large distributors are named.

Licensees of Erpi Settle Dispute on Copyright Music

The controversy over back royalty payments on the domestic copyright music agreement has been settled by Electrical Research Products, acting for its producer-licensees, and John G. Paine, as agent and trustee for music publishers. The settlement, whereby the producers, through Erpi, paid $825,000, automatically cancels the suit instituted by Mr. Paine on behalf of his publisher-principals who sought payment of royalties for the fifth and last year of the old domestic agreement, plus a tax which had never been paid on theatres not using Western Electric equipment.

A temporary agreement is to be entered into at once to permit the use of copyrighted music by Erpi's producer-licensees pending negotiation of a new long-term contract to replace that which expired on September 4, 1932.

Warner Sued for $500,000; Breach of Contract Charged

Elmore D. Heins, the Sun Investment Corporation and National Theatre Corporation brought suit for $500,000 in the New York supreme court on Tuesday against Warner Brothers Pictures, charging breach of contract in connection with an alleged failure of the defendant to take over four theatres in Roanoke, Va., at a stipulated price of $1,700,000. Petition of the plaintiffs was submitted to Justice Bernard L. Shientag, who issued an attachment.

Commenting on the suit, Stanley Friedman, of the Warner legal department, said: "The agreement on which this suit is brought is attached to the complaint and cites that it is a preliminary agreement. As a matter of fact, it was never ratified by the board of directors of our company and therefore was never an agreement."

Exclusives Raise Cost to Patrons, Says Jay Emanuel

If the public supports a theatre which runs exclusive shows, they automatically are increasing the cost of that motion picture entertainment, said Jay Emanuel, editor and publisher of Emanuel-Goodwin publications, speaking Wednesday evening over station WLIT, Philadelphia, on exclusive runs and their effect on the patron.

After a brief explanation of how the exclusive-run operates in its relation to the theatre public, Mr. Manuel, speaking also as an operator of theatres in Pennsylvania, declared that the public was now to be deprived by exclusives of its right to attend a favorite theatre where the cost of attendance is in accord with its pocketbook.

"This problem is made possible only through the greediness of certain producers," said Mr. Emanuel. "Their method of calculating returns on their investment is through the new idea that if pictures are advertised in certain theatres on an exclusive showing, it will force the public at large to patronize those theatres which are enjoying the exclusive run and the theatre owner will be forced by the producers to raise his admission price in excess of what is now being charged.

"Theatre owners throughout the country do not object to first-run theatres in communities playing a picture with what is termed 'protection' for those charging a higher price, but it is the consensus of opinion of theatre owners throughout the country exclusive selling will be a raid on the pocketbooks of at least 50 per cent of the people of the United States eventually.

"The answer is very simple: Whenever you see a theatre advertising pictures on an exclusive basis—'will not be shown again in this locality or town'—do not attend that particular theatre. You are only making it worse for yourself by giving it your patronage. You who have helped to build these stars and producers through your support should not be forced into a position of paying higher prices for your motion picture entertainment. As a member of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners organization, I assure you that the idea does not meet with favor of 95 per cent of the theatre owners, but the idea is being forced upon us by the collusion existing between certain producers."

Montagne Services Held

Services for Edward J. Montagne, former scenario editor of RKO at the Coast studio, were held at Holy Cross cemetery, Brooklyn, on Monday. Mr. Montagne died in Hollywood on September 15. Mrs. Agnes Montagne and her two children accompanied the body east.

Mrs. Chaplin Withdraws Suit

Lita Grey Chaplin, through her counsel, has removed her petition against Charlie Chaplin, her former husband, from the superior court calendar in Los Angeles. The action terminated Mrs. Chaplin's second attempt to place her two sons in films. The petition may be revived.

Divisions of Play Increase Interest In Coast Tourney

Entries for the Sixth Annual Motion Picture Golf Tournament, sponsored by Quigley Publications, which will be played at Rancho Golf Club on the Coast on October 15 and 16, are reaching George Marshall, treasurer, at a rapid pace, with interest in the event increasing by leaps and bounds.

The studio "team" idea is one of the big factors which has added to the interest. Under the new plan, studios may select their four best golfers, the names of whom must be submitted to Mr. Marshall by October 3 and enter them as the group that will compete for the team prize. It is not necessary for the four players to play as a unit. They can be entered in any division and the combined scores of the four will be counted for the low total. Likewise the individual scores of the players will be counted in the separate classifications.

The establishment of a separate division for camera men has also added to the glamour of the event. Heretofore camera men have been included in the technical division, but under this year's plan that division will be relieved of its overcrowded condition and the lab workers, cutters, editors, and others will have a fairer chance to compete for a prize.

Entry blanks for the event may be obtained from the following subcommittee men in the various studios: Paramount, Paul Snell and Richard Arlen; Radio, Perry Leiber and Lew Brock; Warner, Orville Stewart and Jack Warner; Universal, Eddie Laemmle and Russell Hopton; Columbia, Milt Brown and Frank Capra; Mack Sennett, Jed Buell; MGM, Fritz Tidden, Pete Smith and Billy Newberry; Pathe, Joe Schnitzer and Larry Urbach; Hal Roach, George Marshall and Bob McGowan; Tiffany, Dick Cahoon and Sam Bischoff; Fox, Sol Wurtzell and Ted Butcher; United Artists, Stewart Heisler and Harry Brand; Metropolitan, Lon Young and Ben Verschleiser; Monogram, Trem Carr and Lindsley Parsons; Consolidated, George Yates.

New York Stage Hands Accept Wage Reduction

Negotiations which have been carried on throughout the summer between Theatrical Protective Union, No. 1, New York stage hands organization, and the League of New York Theatres, have been successfully concluded, and provide for reductions in stage hands' salaries. The agreement, to run for one year, is retroactive to Labor Day, and provides for reduction of nine per cent in the wage of department heads and seven per cent for other workers.

Heads of departments hereafter will receive $75 per week instead of $82.50 and others $6.25 a performance instead of $6.75. Dr. Henry Moskowitz, advisor to the producers, noted that the agreement, though far short of what the producers had asked, nevertheless marks "the first time in 28 years that any reduction has been accepted by the unions."

CANADIANS LOOK FOR NEW CONTRACT FIGHT

Exhibitors Ready to Protest Taxation Clause; Two-Operator Law Also Issue; Beer a Theatre Business Factor

by W. M. GLADISH

Toronto Correspondent

Trade rumblings are already being heard in Canada with respect to conditions to be embodied in the 1933 License Agreement of the film distributors, although conferences on the next standard exhibition contract are not likely to get underway until next spring.

The broad hint has been made by exhibitor organizations that the taxation clause of the current agreement is not desirable, and it is assured that opposition will be directed against its inclusion in the 1933 agreement form. This clause provides that the distributor will pass on to the exhibitor any new tax or levy now or hereafter imposed by federal or provincial governments, based upon the delivery or exhibition of positive prints or upon sums payable by the exhibitor to the film exchange under the contract.

Organized independents in Ontario say that the possibilities are too great under this clause. They infer they do not know what is going to happen next in the matter of government taxation and that, if a distributor is at liberty to pass on any new tax, the theatre owners would have to engage in a one-sided fight against the tax proposals. This situation has one advantage alone, they say, because the apparent prospect is that the opposition of 200 or 300 exhibitors, scattered over the province, would have more weight in discussions with the government than 10 film exchange companies in one city.

The independents simply do not like the tax clause and are quite pointed in their remarks about it. They had a scare when the Imperial Economic Conference suggested a special levy on foreign films based on rental charges but the worst may yet come with parliamentary sessions just around the corner in federal and provincial capitals of the Dominion. There are expectations of an argument, at least, in each legislative center of Canada with respect to taxation measures in the coming months, and the cry from exhibitors is that they are already taxed to capacity.

Two Operators an Issue

An early issue in the legislative field of Ontario hinges on the regulation requiring two licensed operators in the projection room of a theatre, say independent theatre men of the province represented by the Allied Exhibitors of Ontario. Statistics are being compiled to show a number of things. It has been found, for instance, that there is no direct relationship between the number of theatre fires and the number of projectionists required by law. Places where only one operator is required do not have any more accidents than where two operators are on the job, it is asserted. In fact, it is claimed there is a sense of greater responsibility where a booth is in the hands of one operator, the point being raised that two men in a booth may get careless whereas one operator is literally always on the watch because he knows he must be. These are some of the general arguments already heard among the exhibitors. The promise has been made that a direct request will be made to the Ontario government to abolish the two-men regulation for the sake of economy in theatre operation, obviously very necessary at present.

A sudden dispute between W. A. Baillie of the Cum-Bac Theatre, Toronto, and the operators' local is regarded as the handwriting on the wall in Ontario with regard to the two-operator situation and it is also a test of strength between the independent exhibitors and the union. Baillie declared an open shop and the union retaliated with pickets and other forms of advertising. An injunction was obtained restraining the union from picketing and the final court arguments will be heard shortly. The case is the forerunner of the petition to the Ontario government to wipe out the regulation requiring two projectionists in a booth. If only one operator were required, the Cum-Bac theatre probably would have carried on in its relationship with the union, but two operators, at union scale, are just one too many under present conditions, exhibitors say.

Beer and Business

There has been some talk in the United States regarding the effect upon theatre business with the prospective return of the legitimate sale of beer and wines, under the forthcoming administration at Washington —either Republican or Democrat. Leaving straight politics out of the discussion, there is one definite example in Canada that may provide a guide in consideration of the damp question. While Canada has little or nothing to do with prohibition in the States (on the surface at least), there is a situation in the Province of Quebec that holds interest.

A visit to Montreal a few days ago convinced your correspondent that exhibitors were next to jubilant over business conditions—and the Province of Quebec permits the sale of beer and wine by the glass and the sale of all liquors from Government stores. There were fewer United States tourists in Montreal during the past summer despite the advantage of the U. S. dollar, yet the theatre patronage in Montreal houses has been showing distinct improvement in recent weeks and everybody is feeling quite happy, with or without stimulants. Trade generally, including that of the picture houses, is on the up-curve and the exhibitors are not complaining that the taverns are taking a share that should go into the box offices. Even the neighborhood theatres are showing cheerful signs. United Amusements Limited, operating 20 theatres in and around Montreal, has not missed a dividend through it all and undoubtedly will continue to come across with the semi-annual payment. Judging by the trend in Montreal, exhibitors in the United States should hold no fear for the result in the event of a swing back to liquid liberty.

OUT OF THE STUDIOS

Meehan Sees "Big-Time Stuff" Coming in Cantor, Jolson and Colman Films for United Artists

by LEO MEEHAN
Hollywood Staff Correspondent

In spite of heavy production schedules, or perhaps because of them, the previewing business has been pretty light these past 10 days. United Artists probably will have the Cantor picture, "The Kid from Spain," the Jolson show, "The New Yorker," and Ronald Colman's "I Have Been Faithful" (from "Cynara"), ready for preliminary showings within the next couple of weeks. The first two carry the Goldwyn brand, the third is a Schenck production. Judging from a few glimpses while in the making, they all are big-time stuff. Rumor hath it, by the way, that Harry Langdon, whose breaks haven't been so hot these many days, makes Monsieur Jolson perspire to keep up with the old frozen-faced lad. Anyhow, he's supposed to be so good they called him back for added scenes after looking at the first hookup.

One of the outstanding pictures recently from a production standpoint was made by Trem Carr for Monogram, called "Klondike." Here is a bang-up picture with good cast, excellent production values, an absorbing story, and made in its entirety for less money than the initial overhead "nut" charged to every picture by the major studios. It just goes to show what an independent can do, if he gets the right combination and knows his business. "Klondike" is an attraction perfectly able to stand on its own merits with the general run of any one's product. Especially interesting is the appearance in the cast of Captain Frank Hawks, one of the greatest airmen of all time. Lyle Talbot, Thelma Todd, H. B. Walthall and other good troupers make up a very competent cast.

Universal Has the Ball

In spite of George M. Cohan's criticisms of Hollywood, voiced after he collected his salary and went back to Broadway, "The Phantom President" is a very entertaining show. Maybe George didn't like it because Jimmy Durante grabs so many of the laughs. Nevertheless, the old Broadway king does his stuff. The picture has plenty of amusement for anybody's money.

Universal kicks off for the football season once more with a pigskin yarn called "The All-American." It contains without doubt the greatest aggregation of football stars, All-American heroes and famous football coaches ever gathered in one spot. It should make the football fan dizzy looking at them. They don't stand around and pose, either; they act in the picture, along with a crowd of professional actors like Dick Arlen, Jimmy Gleason, Andy Devine, Gloria Stuart and others. This certainly is a "natural" while football interest is at its annual peak. Russell Mack, who made "Spirit of Notre Dame" last year, turned the directorial tricks, and they are swell.

Sally Eilers shows up strong in a Fox number called "Hat Check Girl," which, as you've guessed, has something to do with those banditesses who grab your hat and coat when you enter a night club, and compel you to buy them back later at premium prices. There is plenty of lively comedy and melodrama, with Sally supported well by Ben Lyon, Ginger Rogers, Monroe Owsley, Noel Madison and others of the new favorites. The dialogue is particularly good.

George O'Brien, in the role of a white Injun chief (captured when a child and reared by redmen) just goes to show that Garbo, Dietrich, Harlow, et al.—including Gable—haven't any corner on the "sex-apple" business. Seriously, George's latest for Fox, "The Golden West," is an exceptionally attractive Western. We sometimes wonder if Fox shouldn't invent a line about "when the box office needs pepping up 'Let George do it.'" It's hard to fall asleep on an O'Brien picture.

Two World Wide Pictures

Looks like World Wide had a couple more productions for Joe Brandt to brag about in the KBS (Bert Kelly, Sam Bischoff, William Saal) production, "False Faces," and the Ben Verschleiser picture, "Breach of Promise." Lowell Sherman directed and acted the principal role in the former, with Peggy Shannon, Lila Lee, David Landau, Berton Churchill and other capable thespians in support. The story is by Kubec Glasmon, responsible for some of the Warner hits the past couple of years. The Verschleiser picture has Chester Morris and Mae Clarke for the leads, supported by Mary Doran, Ted Von Eltz, Elizabeth Patterson, Charles Middleton and others. Mae Clarke shows she did not forget how to be a real top-liner during her long illness. Chester has a part well suited to his talents. Cinderella business—and that always appeals to the most people, we think. It is Ben's initial bow on the World Wide program.

Out here there is renewed interest in independent production, particularly with the recent entry into this field of Jesse Lasky and Ben Schulberg, former Paramount chiefs. This, coupled with the independent activities of Joe Schnitzer, former Radio prexy, Charlie Rogers, Edward Small, the World Wide-Tiffany firm of Kelly-Bischoff-Saal, Mr. Verschleiser, Mr. Bachman, Trem Carr, M. H. Hoffman and some others, makes it appear from where we sit as though the matter of independent production is going to have a very thorough trial in the product of the coming season. In some cases, of course, the product is being distributed through national channels, in others through territorial arrangements. In either event, the production bosses here in Hollywood are experienced picture executives who should turn out salable product. If they get a profit it inevitably will cause a comparison of production cost figures, and rental price figures, which may have an important bearing on the setup next season between mass production and independent production. It is an interesting situation.

NOT ONLY LINES AT THE THEATRE! BUT WHAT LINES IN THE REVIEWS!

By 9:30 in the morning, the Rivoli was packed to S.R.O. capacity... novel plot... elegantly developed . . . thrilling . . . true Tarzan manner. Doug carries it splendidly" — IRENE THIRER in the DAILY NEWS.

"Affords Doug opportunity to out-TARZAN TARZAN...story moves briskly...situations deftly built." — BLAND JOHANESON in the DAILY MIRROR.

"Done in Mr. Fairbanks' best vein...artful, jolly and imaginative."
— MORDAUNT HALL in the NEW YORK TIMES

"Not a travelogue. The advent of a hostile tribe provides Fairbanks with one of those exciting swinging-from-limb-to-limb acrobatics that were his screen trade-mark long before Tarzan appeared on the cinema horizon! Good entertainment...plenty of comedy" — ROSE PELSWICK in the EVENING JOURNAL.

Cinevox to Make Six Films In Italian at Atlas Plant

Alfredo Verrico, Italian director, recently arrived in New York from the Coast, will supervise and direct a series of six features in Italian for Cinevox Productions at the Atlas Soundfilm studios on Long Island. Each Italian feature will be followed by versions in Spanish, English, French and German.

Modern themes will figure prominently in the series, portraying Italy and its people as they are today. The company indicates as its intention the picturization of the people in a favorable light, designed to offset "the detriment done to the race through Hollywood productions that have held Italians up to scorn," an announcement said.

Publicity Men on Two Shifts

The publicity department of Radio, at the Coast studio, has arranged a schedule of two shifts daily, to allow for studio coverage by the department at all hours, despite a heavy production schedule. One shift works from 8 A. M. to 6 P. M. and the other from 10:30 A. M. to 8 P. M.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

The total of theatre receipts from 107 houses in 20 key cities for the calendar week ended September 24, 1932, reached $1,527,916, a marked improvement over the previous calendar week, ended September 17, when 109 theatres in 20 cities reported an aggregate gross of $1,422,646. The increase was $105,270. No new high individual theatre record figures were established during the more recent week, while three new low individual totals were noted. This compares with no new "highs" and two new "lows" during the preceding seven-day period.

MICKEY MOUSE

He Stays on the Job

by TERRY RAMSAYE

MICKEY MOUSE is the crystalline, concentrated quintessence of that which is peculiarly the motion picture. He is at one with the Great Common Denominator of the great common art of the commonality in terms of expression, while in production he is a logarithmic derivative of the whole of screen technology. He is as simple as a dandelion and we do not know what makes it grow.

¶ Mickey is most humbly superhuman. He is an evolutionary product with everything that ever was made for the screen in his ancestry and with Charles Chaplin as his closest human relative.

¶ The irrepressible Mickey in charmingly typical expression of his own psychology, which is based on the principle of the triumph of the boob, the cosmic victory of the underdog, the might of the meek, has in a very certain sense paid tribute to Mr. Chaplin by becoming his successor in certain considerable sectors of the world of the motion picture.

¶ Due to assorted forces, as variant as commercial demands and personal ambitions, to say nothing of human limitations, Mr. Chaplin who began and became famous by endless, continuous industry in single reels, on the screen every day in thousands of theatres the world around, has become consciously symbolic, esoteric, multiple reeled, rich and infrequent. Mickey Mouse, like Mr. Chaplin used to, makes one reelers frequently, always sings something simple and scatters prints over the world across all linguistic and geographical boundaries, as lightly as he defies the law of gravity and all other laws thereunto pertaining.

¶ In the four years of his rise Mickey Mouse has become in a world sense the most famous personality of the screen of the day, and is likely in fact to become as well known as his collateral ancestor Mr. Chaplin was in the period of 1916-1918, when he was, beyond doubt, known to more persons than any prior or subsequent figure of human history.

¶ In his consistent and continuous screen performances at a high standard of quality, Mickey Mouse is today the screen's own best contributor to the creation and maintenance of the habit of attending the screen theatre. His success is a service to the industry. He stays on the job.

¶ Mickey confers distinction and honor upon the motion picture by his peculiar and lone capacity to utilize and demonstrate all of those capacities of the camera and screen as an instrument which especially distinguish it from other media of expression.

¶ In turn this amazing little creature of the cinema promises to share in the glory of the great fictional immortals, in a hall of fame with Santa Claus, Don Quixote, Leather Stocking, Paul Bunyan, Rip Van Winkle, Long John Silver and Odin, Wodin, Thor & Co.

¶ Even as Chaplin was, Mickey Mouse is all things to all men. He is a gust of thoughtless fun to the casual, the lowbrow, the thoughtless. He is the voice and personification of the weltschmerz to the sophisticate and a blood brother to the philosopher.

¶ Mickey is more of a man than a mouse and in all humility, not irony, we must admit that it takes a mouse to be Everyman.

MICKEY MOUSE'S FOURTH BIRTHDAY FINDS ORGANIZATION WORLDWIDE

700 Clubs Meet on Saturday Mornings and New Units Form Overseas; Anniversary Is Observed in Series of Broadcasts

At the birthday party on the studio lawn. Walt Disney is holding the left hand of his Mickey. Roy O. Disney, brother and chief lieutenant of Walt's, is shown on the other side of him.

Mickey Mouse is a big boy now.

Since his birth on October 1, 1928, he has seen the growth of a production organization which for comprehensiveness has no parallel in the field of the screen cartoon. In those four years he has noted the development of a direct contact with the children of this and other countries until the numbers enrolled in Mickey Mouse Clubs are estimated as on the way to the million mark. And since midsummer, when he entered the United Artists household, has come a nationwide concentration of tieup connections with the makers of Mickey Mouse dolls, toys, wearing apparel and other articles.

The ramifications of active interest in the careers of Mickey and Minnie Mouse, as depicted by Walt Disney, are cited as follows:

Children members of more than 700 Mickey Mouse Clubs meet on Saturday mornings.

Approximately 15,000 exhibitors throughout the world show the cartoons at one time or another.

Publishers of 172 newspapers print a daily Mickey Mouse cartoon strip.

Fifty to sixty mercantile houses are engaged in the manufacture of Mickey Mouse novelties.

Some 200,000 retail stores sell these articles.

Mickey has his own studio in Hollywood, a plant estimated at $500,000 cost and employing in the neighborhood of 300 men and women, 60 to 70 artists.

The most marked concentration of exploitation came on July 15, when United Artists and 28 manufacturers of Mickey Mouse articles united forces, following upon the adoption of Mickey into the producer-member organization that made him a brother of Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, Charlie Chaplin, Gloria Swanson, Joseph M. Schenck, Samuel Goldwyn and David Wark Griffith.

All the activities that have to do with the screen cartoon, with the exception of the physical marketing of the pictures, now have been centered in a new affiliation with headquarters in New York City. This is the Kamen-Blair Company, headed by Kay Kamen and Streeter Blair, who came into national repute as exploiters with retail merchants in a campaign for boys' wearing apparel in conjunction with the cartoon character "Tim."

Walt Disney and his brother, Roy O. Disney, general manager, turned over to Kamen-Blair complete charge of the appointing of licensees to manufacture Mickey Mouse products. A campaign book of 48 pages in color was mailed to 15,000 exhibitors, outlining tieups with their local stores for Mickey Mouse and Silly Symphonies showings. The Mickey Mouse products are conspicuous in the lobby decorations and in awards, while the advertisements for the local merchant are displayed in the theatre. The retailer in turn plays up the picture in window displays, newspaper advertising and in other media. United Artists supplies the playdates to manufacturers and retailers.

The campaign books were circulated also in 88 foreign centers and in the languages of those exchanges. With 25 or so of manufacturers of Mickey Mouse articles in England, France and other European countries, the tieups are being extended to those agencies.

Such developments were certainly not in the thoughts of Walt Disney ten to twelve years ago when as an obscure commercial artist he was working day and night in a Kansas City shop drawing pictures to be used as advertisements in a farm magazine. The story goes that as the late hours rolled around the mice appeared for their buffet suppers from the wastebaskets where the girl clerks had dropped their lunch boxes. The young artist adopted ten of the midnight banqueters, even taming one to sit upon a corner of his drawing board. Eight years later a composite of these office mice scrambled from the inkwell of Mr. Disney, who had become a cartoonist seeking a penhold in Hollywood.

Mr. Disney is still a decidedly young man—he was born in Chicago in 1901, December 5. Following commercial art work in Chicago and in Kansas City, as mentioned, from 1919 to 1922, he produced a series of seven cartoons for Pictorial Clubs, Inc. As his work began drawing wider attention, from 1923 to 1926 he made the Alice comedies, a combination of live actors and

'GRIND SHORTS' FALLING OFF, SAYS AL LICHTMAN

With the definite reduction in the number of "grind shorts" being produced, an exhibitor problem is being eliminated because of better balanced programs that will improve the box office, says Al Lichtman, vice-president and general manager of United Artists.

"The time is not far distant when the supply of excellent short subjects will approximate the demand," Mr. Lichtman said. "The short subject is coming into its own."

50 TO 60 MAKERS OF NOVELTIES JOIN IN EXPLOITATION CAMPAIGN

On with the dance. And Mickey Mouse does step to Minnie's music. She's loose-footed, too, perhaps because Walt Disney buys her that kind of shoes.

cartoons, for Winkler Pictures, releasing through state rights and FBO. He created and produced the first 26 Oswald cartoons in sound, starting in May, 1928. Then came the Mickey Mouse cartoons in sound. They were released through state rights until February, 1930, then through Columbia, including the Silly Symphony series. Since the contract this summer with United Artists, a still further development recently has been the turn to color in the Symphonies, several of them in their new dress already having been delivered to the New York offices.

4,000 DRAWINGS MADE FOR McCAY FILM IN 1909

It's a far cry from the animated motion picture of Winsor McCay in 1909 to Mickey Mouse and the Silly Symphonies. Mr. McCay's Little Nemo was brought into the motion picture about eleven months after an actor named D. W. Griffith left the stage for "the movies."

Mr. McCay made 4,000 drawings for Little Nemo; Walt Disney's staff makes 11,000 for a single subject. Mr. McCay followed with Gertie the dinosaurus

With that multiple expansion, Mickey Mouse's activities now are housed in a capacious studio of Monterey design, called the largest sound-cartoon plant. It includes two large music-scoring studios, an up-to-the-minute projection room and recording stage, and quarters for 100 artists and additional comic strip illustrators who draw the cartoons syndicated in the newspapers.

Paralleling the growth of the production organization has been the spread of the Mickey Mouse Clubs in the less than three years since that movement began. Units now are being formed in Europe and in other countries.

What started with the objective of guaranteeing attendance at Saturday morning matinees has taken on a wider significance. In addition to the commercial objective there came the opportunity for furthering civic and patriotic interest among these clubs whose membership approximates that of the Boy Scouts of America and the Girl Scouts, combined. While the primary thought of the children was entertainment, fathers and mothers, the Parent-Teachers' Association and other civic organizations saw a fertile field for character-building and their cooperation readily was extended. Merchants also took to the thought, and increased goodwill has been one outcome. Reports from theatre managers, clergymen, school principals, parents and civic authorities all attest the resultant force for good created for children. Now there is talk of a national convention, with delegates from the many local units.

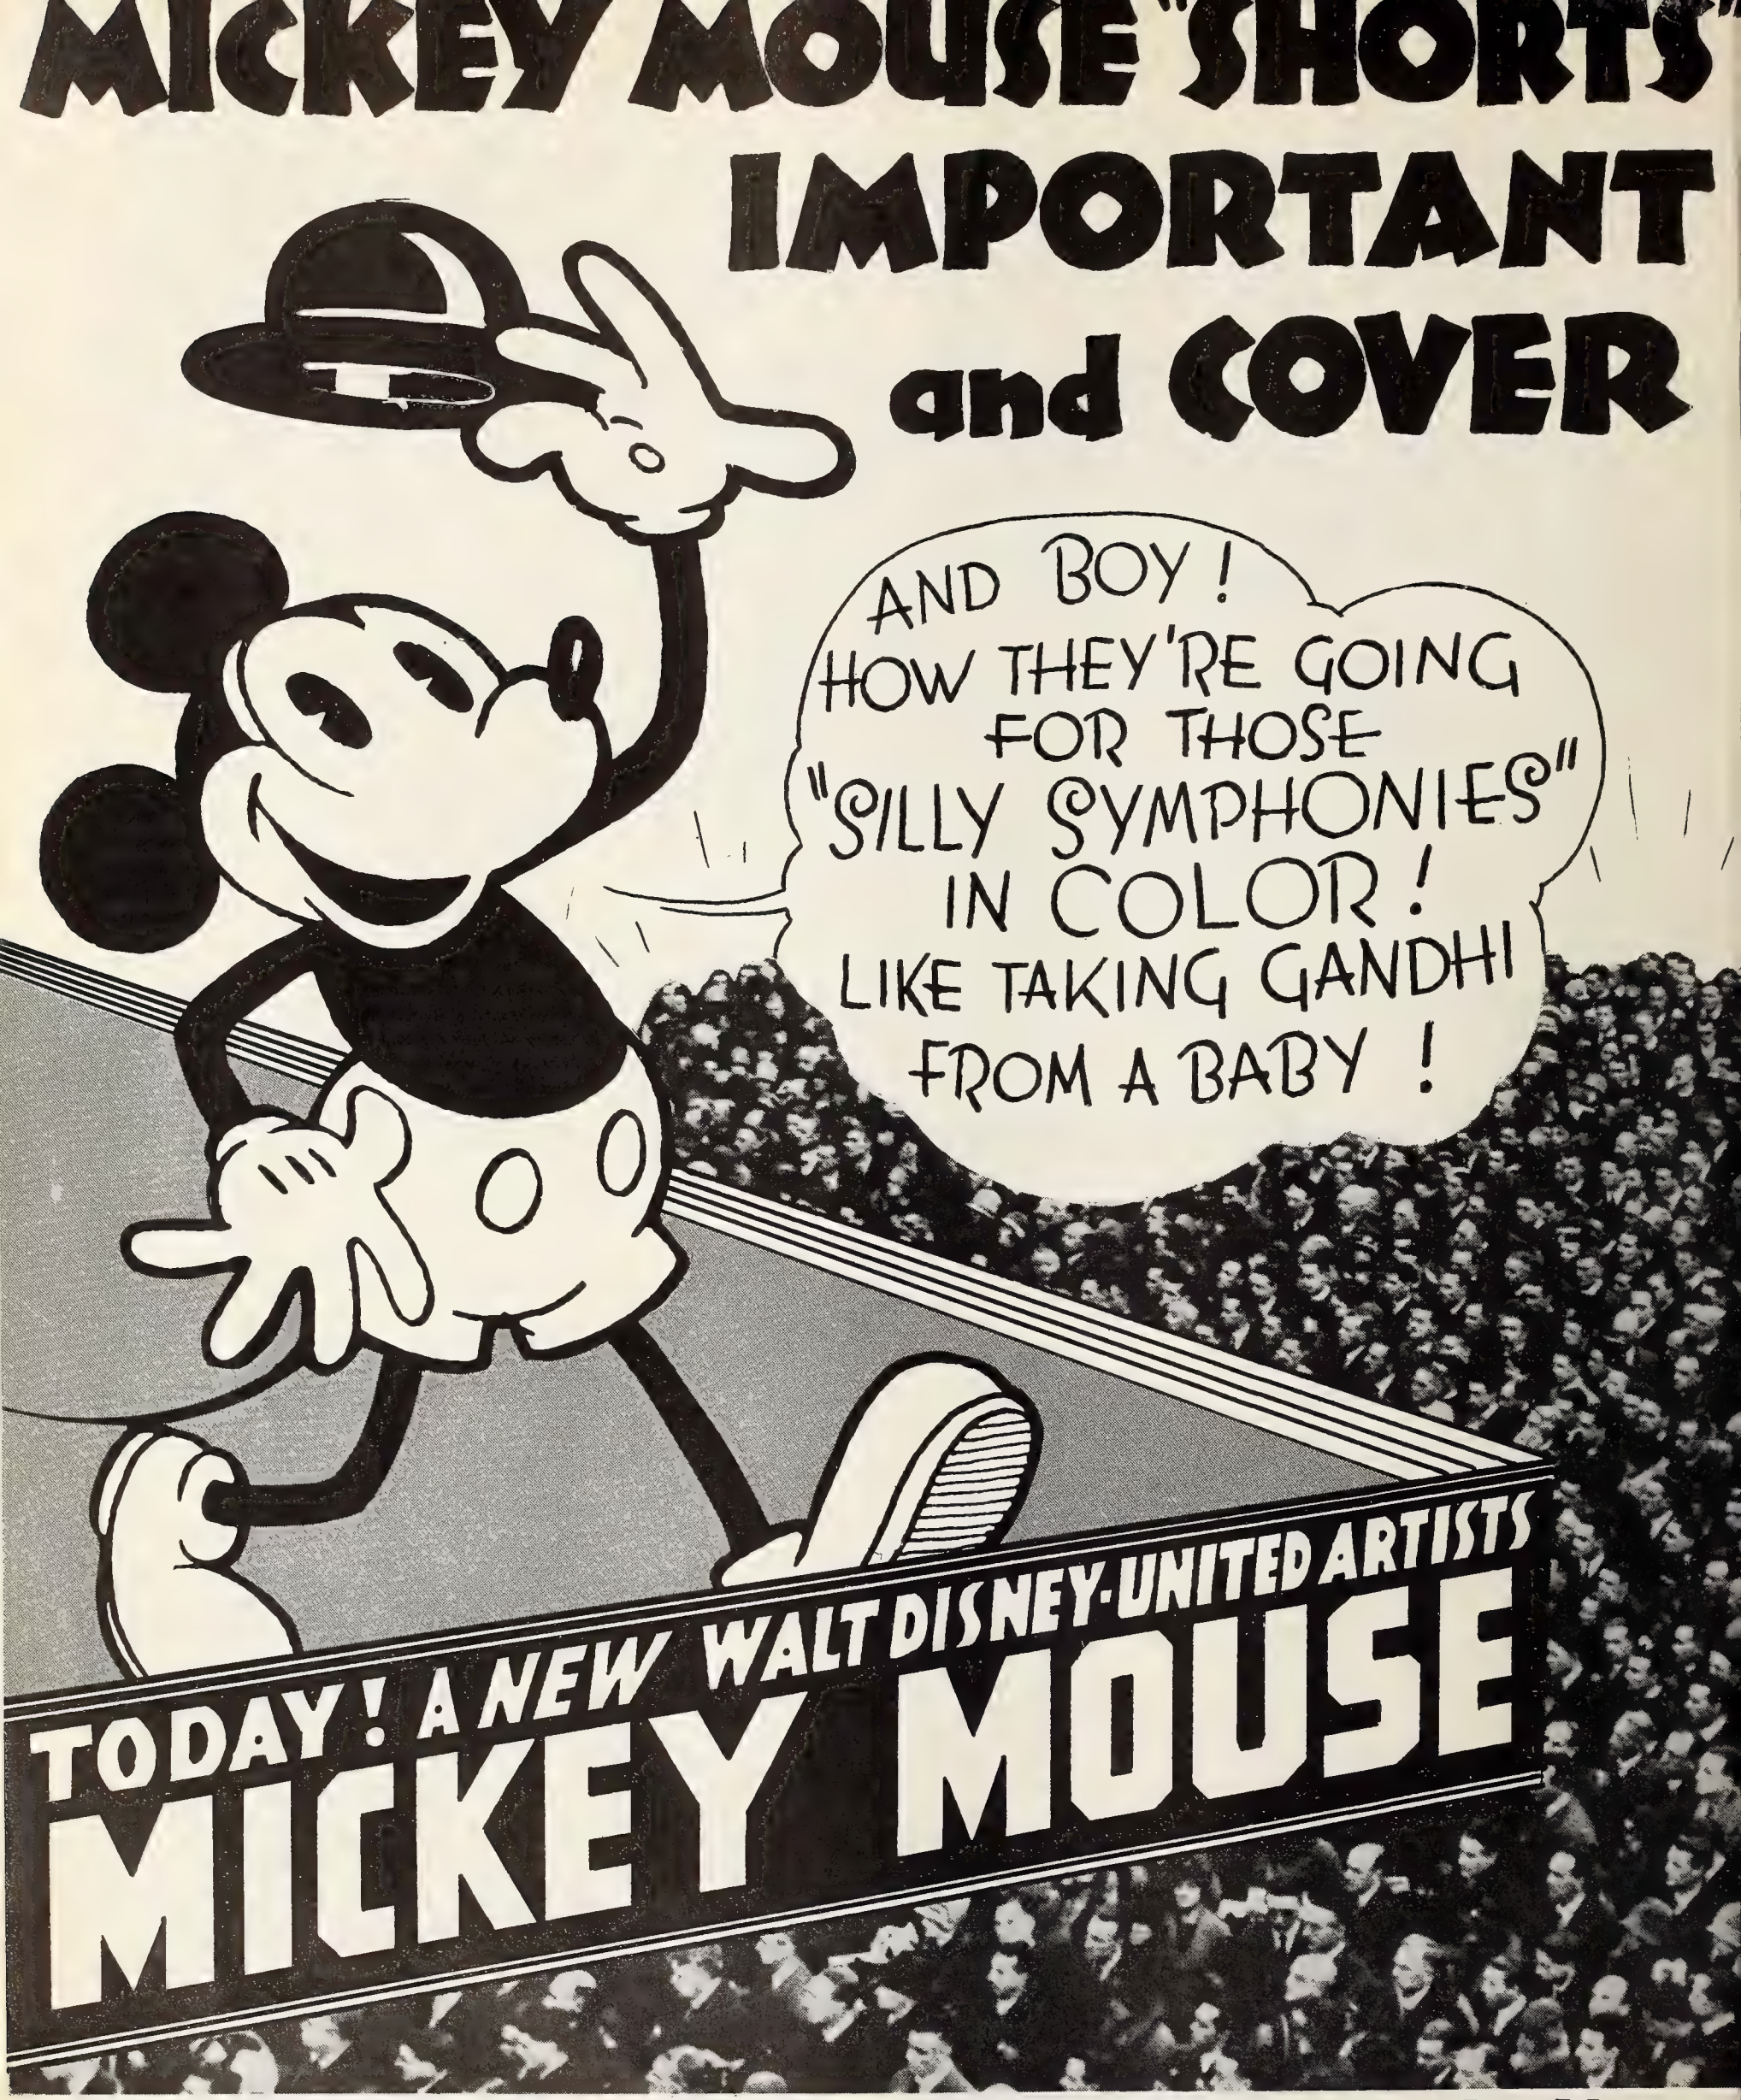
Lucille Allen Benedict is manager of the Mickey Mouse Clubs, with headquarters at 2719 Hyperion avenue, Hollywood. Field representatives include Edw. M. Whaley, Jr., Lee Riley and Harry E. Nichols.

Many Birthday Celebrations

Birthday celebrations will be in order in the clubs throughout the country on Saturday, the birthday anniversary fittingly coming on the regular meeting day of the members.



But the clubs will not have the occasion to themselves. Several radio programs over the weekend will carry their share of tribute to the fun-making cartoon character and his producer. Stars of stage and screen will participate in a Mickey Mouse birthday party on the night of Tuesday, October 4, when George Olsen and his orchestra will be hosts at the Hotel New Yorker. The party starts at 11 o'clock, and from midnight until 12:30 the festivities will take to the air, with a nationwide hookup over the National Broadcasting System. Ethel Shutta and Fran Frey will present several Mickey Mouse songs, among them Irving Caesar's "What? No Mickey Mouse? What Kind of a Party is This?" Among the invited guests are Gus Edwards, Irving Caesar, Mitzi Mayfair, Tony Canzoneri, Jack Dempsey, Lilyan Tashman, Paul Muni, Jack Curley, Paulette Goddard, Abe Lyman and Edmund Lowe.

There will be a Mickey Mouse Birthday Party of the Air Thursday night, September 29, from the Coast, on an NBC hookup, with several stars on the program. And on Friday morning, September 30, at 10:30, George Rector, internationally known restaurateur, is to introduce over WJZ and an NBC network a special Mickey Mouse sandwich, which is to be featured in all A. & P. stores. The W. T. Grant department stores throughout the country will have display features on Mickey Mouse on his birthday, October 1. The Candy Institute of America, Inc., whose members make a large share of the confections manufactured in the United States, has adopted this slogan for October 1: "Celebrate Mickey Mouse's Birthday with Candy." And there is even the announcement from United Artists that the company will hold a "mouse warming" October 1 at the Rivoli theatre in New York, future home of exclusive first runs of the cartoons, with cheese of all kinds as refreshments.

NBC executives are waiving a broadcast policy of several months standing for the occasion. The company set about recently to restrict "plugging" of any one melody over the air, with the exception of theme songs on commercial contracts. But for

October 1 the rule is suspended. Its application will have particular significance in other than musical programs, for several children's hours are planning the introduction of various Mickey Mouse celebrations.

Mr. Disney was initiated into the Breakfast Club at Hollywood on Wednesday. The Assistance League, charity organization, is holding a luncheon in his honor on Friday, with stars attending. On Monday Sid Grauman will have a birthday party for Mickey at the Chinese theatre. Children with their parents will be admitted free as the personal guests of Mickey.

The birthday parties will be the occasions for recalling unusual incidents in the career of the honored guest. Censors in varied localities have presented weird rulings to confound the Disneys, though Harry Hammond Beall, director of publicity, has found them excellent pegs for comment.

Clarabelle Cow, one of the characters of the cartoon, has come in for thumbs-down on at least two occasions. There was the complaint from a Canadian board that the sources of sustenance should be latent as well as lacteal. And when Mr. Disney gave her a dress, even that was not sufficient to smoothen the censorial frown.

When Clarabelle took to reading Elinor Glyn's "Three Weeks," Ohio censors decided to alter her active participation in the book-of-the-week club.

From Berlin came objection to the wearing of German helmets by an army of cats in one of the cartoons.

Mr. Disney's first venture into the motion picture field was a bit happier than his second, though neither was roseate. He did manage to sell locally some animated cartoons of Kansas City celebrities, but when he organized his own little company to do cartoons of famous fairy tales, such as Jack and the Beanstalk and Jack the Giant Killer, he found the modern boys and girls not even lukewarm to them.

There are more than 11,000 drawings in a single Disney subject today. And Walt Disney did all the drawing for the first "Alice" pictures. He had to produce at his own expense. And that was the occasion for the entrance of Roy O. Disney into the company, the brother adding a few hundred dollars to Walt's $40 and what he could round up elsewhere. The first of the "Alice" series was sold for $1,500; it cost half that amount. The Oswald the Cat series was more successful; the partnership accumulated $15,000 savings from Oswald's antics.

It was the advent of sound that started the Disney fortunes definitely on the upgrade. Two of the Mickey Mouse subjects had failed to bring a nibble from Hollywood's producers, whereupon the brothers plunged into Poverty Row. Then came the talkers. Mickey began to talk and dance to music, and within a year the series had become sweet music to the ears of other producers as well as to the brothers.

Not only does Mickey retain his youth; the same is true of the Disney staff.

5 REASONS why CONSOLIDATED should be making your RELEASE PRINTS

Our New York and Hollywood plants are especially equipped to develop negatives—to render a COMPLETE film laboratory service.

1 QUALITY PRODUCTION

In the production of "Certified Prints", only the finest Raw Stock and Chemicals are used. Only the most modern equipment and skilled operators with years of experience are employed. Nothing is left to chance. Every process is measured. This combination produces RELEASE PRINTS of uniformly high-grade quality — brilliant and clear — faithful reproductions of your negatives.

2 PROMPT SERVICE

Operators understand that our Service requires speed in production —overnight service when necessary. Our plants are capable of operating 24 hours a day. A complete organization is on duty at all times to meet the instant demands characteristic of our industry. Our capacity is over 1,000,000,000 feet per year.

3 SAFETY

Every scientific device known to our industry and endorsed by the leading government and insurance authorities is employed, together with carefully trained guards to protect your negatives and release prints against any hazard. There is no possibility that the originality of your ideas and the contents of your production will be revealed to the industry or public until released for exhibition.

4 RESEARCH FACILITIES

A costly experimental laboratory is maintained. A selected scientific organization of chemical, technical and research engineers are continually engaged in searching for methods which will improve and further standardize quality and prolong the life of release prints.

5 AMPLE RESOURCES

Working capital is ample to undertake any release printing contract — large enough for loans to our customers and to finance independent production on a large scale at moderate cost. Consolidated offers all the natural advantages of a large, specialized organization with more than twenty years of experience and service.

A Successful Calamity

(Warner)

Comedy-Drama

Mr. George Arliss, generally considered one of the most able actors on the screen, presents here a deft, finished performance in his usual fine style. The film follows the lines of stage technique, having been adapted from a stage play of the same title by Clare Kummer. There is a good deal of humor in the film, though definitely of a more subtle nature than usual and for the most part achieved by way of dialogue rather than action.

The picture is greatly dependent upon dialogue throughout for its effect, and fortunate it is that that dialogue fell into the capable hands of Mr. Arliss, who makes the most of it.

The fact that the original of the film was a stage play probably will have comparatively little effect on the potential audience. Nevertheless it will do no harm, and perhaps some good, liberally to indicate the film's origin. The title is sufficiently intriguing to afford a certain amount of box-office attraction, and when that title is linked to the star's name it should carry considerable weight. In fact it would be well to cite certain of his previous characterizations. Indicate that here is Mr. Arliss in a somewhat different type of role from that in which the motion picture public is accustomed to seeing him. He plays here the wealthy, successful financier, who, after a year's absence in Europe, finds it virtually impossible to gather his wife, daughter and son about him for a "quiet evening at home." By a ruse he contrives to bring them back to the fireside.

In consequence of the fact that the audience is "in" on Mr. Arliss' fabricated "ruin" to gather sympathy and attention from his family, the story never becomes seriously dramatic and has an underlying chuckle throughout. The family makes sacrifices for Mr. Arliss, while he laughs up his sleeve as the ruse works. Perhaps the most feasible angle from which to hit the story is that of the wealthy man who "saved" his family from the effect of too much wealth by fooling them. There is a note of loyalty in the story, in that the family sticks by the father in his "distress."

Mary Astor, Evelyn Knapp, Grant Mitchell, William Janney and David Torrence head the support and all are capable, reasonably sound box office names. The picture is primarily adult entertainment.—AARONSON, New York.

Produced and distributed by Warner Brothers. Directed by John Adolfi. Story by Clare Kummer: Adaptation and dialogue by Austin Parker, Maude Howell and Julian Josephson. Art director, Anton Grot. Release date, September 17, 1932. Running time, 72 minutes.

THE concept of this department is that the exhibitor is concerned not with any critic's idea of "how good?" or "how poor?" but rather with the question of precisely what the product is and what is to be done with it when and as it is played. The exhibitor, in general, is concerned with the special aspects of strength and of weakness in the product, its appeals and shortcomings, that he may adequately deal with it when he becomes its sponsor to his public. These "review" pages aim to aid the exhibitor as the retailer of the merchandise concerned.—THE EDITOR.

Washington Merry-Go-Round

(Columbia)

Drama

Sell this as Washington from the inside, as a flashing glance behind the political scene in the nation's capital, and let the timeliness of the subject carry it along of its own weight. Designed for release prior to election day in November, the picture offers the showman an excellent opportunity to cash in on a public opinion primed for politics, devouring political headlines and party sold from the start.

Hit this hard in the advertising, giving it all the ballyhoo and heavy type possible and carrying over the same flashing campaign idea into the lobby displays and marquee. The title is that of a book published last year with considerable success and devoted to the inside of Washington politics and society. It would be well, perhaps, not to stress the origin of the title too heavily, if at all, since it appears obvious that the film has taken from the book merely the title and general theme, with no fidelity of detail or situation, except by suggestion.

Rely for the most part on the subject matter concerned, its pertinence at the moment and the cast names. Lee Tracy, in another splendidly hard-hitting performance, plays the young and newly elected Representative who comes to Washington through illicit votes and for the express purpose of smashing the ring of grafters and political opportunists who elected him. With Tracy for the marquee lights are Constance Cummings, attractive and capable in her restrained performance as the granddaughter of a senator who is innocently deeply enmeshed in the political network, and is poisoned when he attempts to break away. Alan Dinehart presents a strong performance as the ambitious ring-master of the circus, and Walter Connolly, in the role of the elderly senator, gives a character performance of unusual merit. He is definitely worthy of attention in this, his first screen role. He has come from the New York stage to the motion picture.

The historical and much publicized Bonus Expeditionary Force, in its encampment on the Anacostia Flats near Washington, takes an important part in the picture, and becomes thereby a valuable selling angle for the exhibitor. Pictorially the interest in the film is heightened by authentic-appearing scenes of the House in session, and by several excellent bits of Washington scenery.

The picture, in a measure forceful, active and rapid of pace, is entertaining, and definitely adult in character. It calls for a strong selling campaign in keeping with the theme and should keep the audience well up in its seats.—AARONSON, New York.

Produced and distributed by Columbia. Directed by James Cruze. Story by Maxwell Anderson. Screen play by Joe Swerling. Cameramen, Ira Morgan, Teddy Tetzlaff. Sound, Lodge Cunningham. Film editor, Richard Cahoon. Running time, 78 minutes.

Three on a Match

(First National)

Drama

Because of its story, selling of this picture must depend upon the strength of the cast names. The superstitution connected with the title is pretty well known, the idea being that something dire happens when one match is used to light three cigarets. Enough tragedy and misfortune follows in this story to add plenty of power to the omen.

The whole thing builds up to a climax that nobody can disassociate from the Lindbergh kidnaping, but if that fact is brought out at all in advertising and publicity it is quite apt to create a negative audience reaction. Therefore, creating advance interest in the picture will be more a matter of what not to do.

It does not seem logical for any one to play up the dramatic sequence. Likewise, the idea of a woman deserting her husband, when he has given her everything in the world to make her happy, and taking up a sordid life with a gangster, will not tend to create the impression desired.

Although a child, Buster Phelps, is prominent all the way through the picture, the feature is anything but children's entertainment.

The first third of it is played with juveniles occupying the roles of the three featured feminine names. These sequences are given over to the careers of the children up to public school graduation, with Mary, the hard-boiled kid, Vivian, the snob, and Ruth, the honor student, scenes interesting enough in themselves and tending to give an idea of what is to follow.

After their accidental meeting 10 years later the story proceeds as outlined earlier, with Mary proving that she has a heart of gold and marrying Kirkwood after he has divorced Vivian.

Names will have to shoulder much of the task of carrying the picture. With Joan Blondell, Warren William, Ann Dvorak, Bette Davis and Lyle Talbot to work with, you have plenty of reason to shout about their work in the picture. Considering the type of story, they all do fine and effective work. But in building them up, be careful of the style of catchlines and ad copy you use, framing it so that it will let the theme of the story down easily.

Don't resort to any foolish showmanship. Don't tell them that if they don't want to be shocked at a story of life, they had better stay away. Don't use the word "kidnaping" or anything that suggests it in any way. There may be ways of doing something with the title, bringing out the direful results that may ensue with the three-on-a-match idea, but that, too, will have to be handled carefully.

Produced and distributed by First National. Directed by Mervyn LeRoy. Story by Kubec Glasmon and John Bright. Screen play by Lucien Hubbard. Photographed by Sol Polito. Film editor, Ray Curtis. Art director, Robert Haas. Release date, October 29, 1932.

Mr. Robinson Crusoe

(United Artists)

Adventure

Active and vigorous, Douglas Fairbanks, the perennial, presents a fantastic adventure constructed around the Robinson Crusoe theme, builds himself a house—and a radio set—and injects dialogue in the modern mode. Mr. Fairbanks, on his lonely isle, indulges in the wisecrack, aimed in the general direction of his monkey, his parrot or his dog. And the parrot replies, also with the modern "Okay."

Fairbanks has chosen for his theme here an idea bizarre in conception, diverting, occasionally amusing, and sprightly. The star, as always, creates an atmosphere of surging good health, of a youthful ardor which refuses to be dimmed and should communicate itself to the audience in a manner to assure a hearty reception, however lacking in red meat the finished product may seem. As a result the audience should be fully entertained, should enjoy the antics and inventive turn of Fairbanks, however much they may chuckle at the fantastic developments of his hand and mind.

The exhibitor has the enormous drawing power of the Fairbanks name, which cannot possibly fail of individual strength, to guarantee for himself a marquee name probably without a peer in so far as personality is concerned. Of assistance Mr. Fairbanks has little, with the exception of attractive Maria Alba as the native girl whom he protects, and William Farnum in a definitely minor role, but he needs none. Let the exhibitor picture for himself Douglas Fairbanks, wealthy and healthy, taking a bet while on a yachting cruise that he will be able to live in luxury on a deserted island, and swimming to shore with nothing but a shirt and a pair of trousers, and a dog by his side. With that picture in mind, the exhibitor may let his imagination run in fashioning his advertising copy, in constructing a theatre front along all the novel South Sea lines he may care to attempt.

Fairbanks' ingenious devices for comfort and even luxury are clever, and others are so perfect of construction as to be funny. Here is a modern Robinson Crusoe who "builds him" a penthouse and an overhead trolley line. Plaster the theatre front with Fanrbanks and his inventions, in all the poses possible.

Fairbanks outwits a horde of savages in order to save the girl, who escapes to his island from the wedding bells of her tribe. The closing sequence shows the native girl dancing in hip-swaying rhythm to the applause of a Follies audience, while Fairbanks in the front row salutes her in native South Sea style. Here is lively, amusing entertainment to be sold as such to the entire family, between the ages of seven and 70.—AARONSON, New York.

Produced and distributed by United Artists. Directed by Edward Sutherland. Story by Elton Thomas. Adaptation by Tom Geraghty. Music score by Alfred Newman. Film editor, Robert Kern. Cameraman, Max Dupont. Release date, September 17, 1932. Running time, 72 minutes.

Kreuzer Emden

Cruiser Emden

(World's Trade Exchange)

War Drama

A tribute to the heroism of the crew of the German sea raider, the Emden, is the obvious objective in this production, which has as its climax the battle with the British cruiser Sydney that wrote finis to the raider's spectacular career.

As such the production is treated essentially as a pictorial record of naval activity in the World War. There is a thread of romance spun into the story, but so thin that it is of no material consequence.

Considerable suspense has been worked into the gunnery duel in the final scenes, where action practically eliminates dialogue. The exhibitor may well promise his community an exciting battle scene which maintains as complete interest to the non-German patron as to the one familiar with the language of the participants.

Louis Ralph, as Captain von Mueller, gives a telling characterization as the commander of the raider, but whether the name of the captain or the others in the cast will have any significance in the given community is for the exhibitor himself to determine, in the light of the reception of previous bookings.

There is much of martial and patriotic music.

The battle at sea should be interesting to the juvenile patron.—ROVELSTAD, New York.

Monkey's Paw

(RKO Radio)

Drama

With the release of "The Monkey's Paw," a pretty problem is dropped into showmen's laps.

The story is about the fatalistic charm of a monkey's paw. It is laid entirely in England and the dialogue throughout is spoken with a very decided British accent. Sergeant Major Morris, in showing the paw to the White family, relates the dire consequences it brought its first possessor. Mr. White is fascinated by its power and steals it from Morris' pocket. He wishes for a thousand dollars and gets it, but it costs the life of his son. The tragedy is too much for his wife, who has scoffed at the paw's power, but in her desperation she seizes it and wishes for the return of her son. Fearful of the consequences, White wishes the son back in the grave. The finale shows the whole thing was only a dream after Morris had told his story.

Note that the running time is only 52 minutes. You should be sure to build up a strong supporting program and work in some worthy showmanship features. Added attractions of particular local significance, such as talent try-out nights, song contests, or some important exploitation event that you want to pull off, should help grosses.

If there are any British societies in your neighborhood, it might be a good idea to work out some kind of special contact, because of the high British atmosphere of the picture. But where the picture must stand on its own, before essentially American audiences, try to create interest by stressing the dramatic idea which seeks to inspire awe, mystery and a little terror.

You may be able to work up some curiosity by playing on a lot of pet superstitions starting with the four-leaf clover, lucky ring, spilling the salt, seeing a load of barrels, having them all lead up to the fantastic superstition of the monkey's paw and the power of all for good and evil, getting over the idea that "The Monkey's Paw" is the strangest charm ever used by any man and that its power is greater than any other.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Maedchen in Uniform

(Krimsky-Cochran)

Drama in German

The power and subtlety of dramatic story and the excellence of performance and development serve to make this picture worthy of the most serious consideration by American exhibitors, despite its German dialogue, its foreign players.

Due to the inclusion of occasional superimposed subtitles in English at critical points in the development of the story, the picture becomes readily understandable to the patron lacking a working knowledge of the German language. If the exhibitor were to follow the method employed by the distributors at the two-a-day performance at New York's Criterion, and supply the audience with a brief written synopsis, there could be no slightest difficulty is appreciating more fully the run of the rapid and evenly flowing plot. The expense incident to the printing of such audience-assistance would in this instance appear wholly justified, since thereby a long step would be taken to overcome the natural obstacle of an unfamiliar language.

Stressed as something unusual, something fine in motion pictures, the picture should be made to return full value at the box office if the appeal is made in dignified manner to those of the potential patrons who appreciate excellent quality, in story, in plot construction, in performance.

Briefly, the story concerns a young girl, Hertha Thiele, sensitive and reserved, who is suddenly dropped into a girls' boarding school following the death of her mother. It is operated for the children of German army officers and the school authorities, as brilliantly personified by the principal, maintain the strictest of military discipline, even to the point of requiring the girls to wear striped uniforms. Only one teacher, played splendidly by Dorothea Wieck, has an appreciation of the deep hurt in the soul of the young girl, and tries, in a small way, to replace her mother. An infraction of the rules banishes the girl to a detention room, where her attempted suicide leap from a balcony is prevented by a rush to the rescue by dozens of her frightened schoolmates. Realizing to the full the effect of her iron discipline, the principal, crushed, passes down the staircase.

There are no men in the cast, and the entire action takes place within the confines of the school. Brilliantly has the direction indicated its ability to handle with telling effect mass movement, as the girls scurry about, or mass sound, as they give vent to their fears for the missing girl. There is no necessity in advertising this picture, to even suggest the possibility of a strange affair between the girl and her teacher, since there is nothing strange about it, when all circumstances are considered.

The exhibitor who plays this film has much ready made copy set for him. A highly successful run at top prices at the Criterion is currently a fact, and New York motion picture critics have praised the film with almost complete unanimity. The film is for discriminating adults alone, should be sold in an emphatic but dignified manner, and the exhibitor may promise a production outstanding in merit.—Aaronson, New York.

White Eagle

(Columbia)

Western

It is difficult to estimate the number of motion picture patrons who are Western "fans," who like their films red-blooded and meaty in an outdoor action sense, but whatever that number, here is a picture they should all enjoy. It is almost unnecessary to indicate that any one younger than the upper "teens" will stand up on his chair as the Indians start their raid or the Pony Express flashes across the plains.

Here is a dashing Western, with Buck Jones as the Indian, White Eagle, living as a white man and the most daring rider of which the service can boast. Buck has a host of friends among the younger generation and, through them, among many elders. There are numerous Buck Jones clubs connected with theatres, and among them his admirers are unswerving in their loyalty. Jones looks every inch an Indian when he is in feathered warbonnet, rides like a fiend on a beautiful white horse, and saves the day for the Indian and the white man by calling the Indians from the warpath, which they took when the villain of the piece, posing as a Government agent, caused his own depredations to be blamed on the Indians.

There is a sequence, in which the blue uniformed cavalry of the United States takes the trail against the maurauders, which should chase the thrills up and down the spine of any boy. There is a girl, Barbara Weeks, attractive and blonde, the sister of the Pony Express superintendent, and it develops at the conclusion that Jones is not an Indian, but the son of a white army captain, brought up by an Indian chief.

Play for the youngsters with this, certainly, but it should be worth while to direct an appeal toward the adults as well. Ask them how long it has been since they last saw a fast-moving Western, and promise them a treat in a momentary return to childhood thrills. Buck Jones and his capable Western support will bring them many a memory, many an appreciative chuckle, and they will probably enjoy it very nearly as much as the youngsters. Play the film at that time of the week which is most advantageous for the attendance of children.

There is no reason why the school teachers cannot be drawn into the campaign, since the picture has its quota of excellent Western scenery, appears to be an authentic picturization of a period in American history, and is as clean as a whistle.—Aaronson, New York.

Money Means Nothing

(Paramount)

Light Comedy

On the slenderest of stories and without heavy outlay on production, the Paramount British organization with this picture has turned out a film that should satisfy the average non-critical audience, without creating anything in the way of a sensation. It is competently made, with good settings and lighting and adequate technical work generally, with the exception of a few minor lapses in recording.

The story is woven round a young English lord whose valet, the descendant of a long line of family servitors, suddenly becomes possessed of vast wealth. The valet, who stands almost in loco parentis towards the young man, contrives with this wealth to extricate the youth from an engagement to a cheap chorus girl, buys back the ancestral mansion and has the final satisfaction of seeing his master fall in love with his own daughter.

John Loder carries the part of the young Lord Massingham in convincing manner, and gives you a name with which to strengthen your campaign, but it is to Gibb McLaughlin, as Faringay the valet, that principal honors must go, for he bears the onus of the acting, and gives a highly credible characterization of the old retainer, with a very real embarrassment at the accession of wealth. Take him out as your lead and play the piece up to your public as the story of a "gentleman's gentleman," or the odyssey of a butler, if you want to be poetical.

Apart from that, however, there is little in the picture to justify extravagant exploitation, and your next best bet would be to gag the title as far as it suggests itself to your imagination. There is, however, material in the plot for a contest competition on the line of "What would you do if you suddenly inherited $100,000,000?"—Charman, London.

Produced for Paramount British by British & Dominions Films. Story by Douglas Furber. Running time, 67 minutes.

Laughs and Speed

The Baby Stars mimic the grown-ups in the atmosphere of a night club. The story concerns the trouble of a tiny soubrette, in the clutches of her hard-boiled boss. She's saved from the gilded den by the timely arrival of her sweetheart, who is fresh from the country. Some smart dancing and the singing of "Only a Bird in a Gilded Cage," by a 3-year-old miss are the highlights. A re-creation of the Floradora Sextette should get plenty of laughs from the grown-ups. The picture moves along at a speedy clip, but is well timed so that all the laughs can register. It looks to be a pretty good picture to show children and should fit in nicely on any program. Running time, 10 minutes.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Hot Spot
(Hal Roach-MGM)
Merry

Plenty of nutty comedy is dished up in this one to introduce a new screen personality, Ben Blue, in a series called "The Taxi Boys." It's about a dumb taxi driver and his stooge, who hasn't the slightest glimmer of what it's all about, and consequently do the most absurd thing possible in any given circumstance. First we have Blue wrestling with a customer and finally landing him in the driver's seat as he lolls in the cab. Next is the old gag of "two tens for a five," the two drivers coming out on the short end of the deal. The finale is a ludicrous attempt to save a beautiful girl from her suspicious husband. The picture is a neat medium to get audiences in a merry mood. Running time, 18 minutes.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Dr. Jekyll's Hide
Fair

A 1915 melodrama has been jazzed into the modern with the aid of accompanying dialogue meant to be amusing; the whole designed to be funny. It succeeds only moderately well in its intention, failing chiefly because of the comparative weakness of the dialogue, which falls short of being truly amusing. However, the heavy dramatic acting of a decade or two ago, combined with the elderly technique does make for a certain amount of comedy to the film-goer of today.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Musical Doctor
(Paramount)
Entertaining

For those patrons who have something in the nature of a flair for Rudy Vallee, and they are supposed at least to be legion, this short is worth a play in the advertising, under the feature. There is a fair possibility of drawing a feminine contingent thereby. Vallee conducts a hospital where the only treatment is music, and his patients and the audience are subjected to frequent and reasonably effective closes.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Mickey's Revue
(United Artists)
Clever Cartoon

An amusing and often cleverly drawn cartoon of the Mickey Mouse brand, with the animated figure leading his band in a most unusual, hectic fashion, providing thereby much of amusement, especially for the younger generation. Feature this Mickey Mouse cartoon in the trailers. Promise a few laughable minutes with the star of the cartoon world, and no one will be disappointed.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Betty Boop for President
(Paramount)
Clever, Amusing

Smart, novel and amusing is this Betty Boop animated cartoon, in which Betty carries on a vigorous campaign for President, and promises what she will do if elected. The novelty lies in the unusual drawings, the cleverness of idea and execution. Pertinent at this moment, the short may be considered in a measure outstanding among animateds.—Running time, 7 minutes.

THE JUNIOR SHOW

by RITA C. McGOLDRICK

FOR the past three months MOTION PICTURE HERALD, through the department School and Screen, has been conducting a careful national survey of the activities of all large club groups working for or against the best interests of the motion picture. A questionnaire was addressed to the heads of 150 Film Councils representing thousands of clubs located in the metropolitan districts as well as in the smaller, but very active, communities in every state of the Union.

Out of the avalanche of important material that followed in the answers, a few of the topics are of arresting interest. One is the Junior Show. There is no question of the active concern felt by all club leaders about the supervised programs for children. Nor is there any doubt that the theatre managers of the country are newly expressing themselves in terms of their own responsibility to the community. A whole new field of action is disclosed in this bird's-eye view of national opinions which have been assembled for the first time.

Junior Show Or Family Night

The answers under this question have brought to light two interesting facts. One is that the Junior Show is a fine financial and popular success in those theatres where club women and theatre men, cooperating to make the program for the children as interesting as pissible, have organized active clubs such as the Mickey Mouse, Buck Jones Rangers, Fox Trailers, Booster Clubs or Scout Helpers. From dozens of theatres the news comes that their young people's clubs have a membership of 1,200 to 2,300 children. In nearly all these instances the theatre manager has a card index of names and addresses of his small patrons. The enthusiastic response he receives from his young members has made the Junior Show the outstanding activity in his theatre and has won him an increased night patronage of pleased parents.

The second fact that club leaders are inclined to favor the Family Friday Night program and are laying far more stress on family audience entertainment than on the program for children alone. The majority of theatre men say that they also find the selected and carefully balanced week end program a far better paying proposition than the matinees for children which, unless they are flourishing, can become so expensive to the exhibitor.

There are several reasons offered in support of this new trend. First, there are too few pictures to choose from for straight juvenile entertainment. A good year gives us a "Skippy" and a "Sooky," "Tom Sawyer" and "Huckleberry Finn," "Penrod and Sam," and some of the operettas like "Puss In Boots," but the supply is meager. The exhibitor finds himself harassed with a real problem, and the children themselves are the worst critics. They want entertainment, with plenty of life and action and quality, but they refuse to be patronized or to have their entertainment served to them in homeopathic doses. So unless they are encouraged by contests, club activities, and a lively program, they have no use for Junior Shows themselves. The Family Friday Night offers a wider choice of pictures, and theatre men, club leaders and Parent-Teacher Association members find it much simpler to work out a balanced screen diet for all ages in the family. Where the father or mother goes with the children to the show, the serious question of chaperonage is cared for, and there is something to be said for the building-up of the family unit in the theatre audience.

In some communities both plans are being carried on successfully, but in these instances a carefully graded set of pictures is worked out to accommodate both groups. In Massachusetts, which is highly organized through Film Councils, and committees of theatre men, the following classification of current pictures has been made and distributed to all exhibitors in the state as well as to the members of the Springfield Motion Picture Council, with its sixty cooperating organizations; Quincy Better Film Council with 16 clubs; Worcester, 16 clubs; Clinton, 12 clubs; Northampton Council, Waltham, 20 clubs; Melrose, 20 clubs.

Chicago has become the most highly organized center in its motion picture activity, with 780 clubs to draw upon for support, and a local city committee of 350 women engaged in answering the tangled problems. The development of the Junior Show is to be the great forward step of Chicago's plan for this coming year. The chairman of the council, Mrs. Richard M. McClure, writes:

"We find the Junior Clubs flourishing in many neighborhood houses and it is our hope to coordinate these as a working basis to a city wide movement. Many of the neighborhood houses sponsor the Family Friday Nights as well, and seem to be doing good business. There has been much hostility to the industry in Chicago. Now, after two years of constant work, we feel that a very fine spirit exists between organizations and exhibitors. We arrange joint meetings and discuss the many complicated problems of the exhibitor and distributor and the further difficulties that beset most managers. We have accurate information as a basis of understanding and, because we have proved an honest desire to build audiences for the motion pictures, we are assisted in every possible way. We believe that the Better Films Council of Chicago will develop into a Public Relations department for the theatre men of this city."

Memphis Activities

The chairman of the Better Films Council of Memphis, Mrs. Lawrence A. Akers, sends us this comment:

"We have both Family Night programs and Junior Shows. They do not serve the same purpose, so, we feel, do not deserve to be compared. Our Family Nights are, of course, at the suburban theatres and the Junior Shows are at our uptown ones. Financially, the latter seems more profitable to the theatre owner, but from the standpoint of our Council we prefer the former. It is our contention that they are more lasting in their influence, as they encourage that almost lost art of bringing entire families together for their amusement, and the programs are such that they are not outgrown as are those for Junior Shows. We have continued both types of shows all summer with splendid results.

"Our Family Nights are every Friday, but the Junior Shows are only for special occasions. The scarcity of suitable pictures makes it impossible to have many of them.

"Suggestions for other groups are numerous, but above all else I should like to stress the importance of selling the idea of their work to the newspapers and through them, to the public. This has been responsible for what success our Memphis Council has had."

It is the purpose of this department in the HERALD to follow through on every story of a successful show that the questionnaires have brought into us, and to give to readers the benefit of the experience of other managers who are finding goodwill and a better box office by dealing directly with the interested people in their communities. It will also be our plan to present to you news of successful programs, suggestions for special occasions and every bright and new idea that finds its way into the mail bag from these widely scattered but interested groups who are accomplishing very definite things for better motion pictures.

Selznick Radio Contract To Be Renewed, Says Kahane

David O. Selznick, Radio studio production executive, will retain his post at the expiration of his present one-year contract, on October 28, according to B. B. Kahane, president. A new contract will be given Mr. Selznick. "The company wants Mr. Selznick to remain, and he has indicated that he wishes to," said Mr. Kahane.

The executive pointed to numerous improvements in the company's product in recent months and expressed optimism for still further improvement during the 1932-33 season.

JENKINS' COLYUM

Joplin, Mo.

DEAR HERALD:

Hugh Gardner of the Neosho Orpheum at Neosho has one bad fault he ought to break himself of. He probably has a lot of 'em. He will laugh at you every time you drive a ball into the pond, and there's no doggone sense in it. He will take you up to his swell home and he will treat you royally, but when he gets you out on the golf links he won't show you a bit of mercy, that's the kind of a guy he is. However, Mrs. Gardner is such a delightful lady that you will overlook a lot of Hugh's shortcomings.

When they built the Ozarks down there they left a nice spot to put Neosho in; if they hadn't there wouldn't be any Neosho. They also made a big hole in the rocks where a lot of water comes out and runs under the hotel, and they have a trout pond in the front yard full of trout which they will catch and fry for you at 75 cents a piece, but we never cared for liver-fed trout. We'd sooner have a bullhead out of the Elkhorn river.

Hugh has been trying to struggle along for several months without the HERALD, but we told him he couldn't do it, and he agreed with us, and now we expect his business will pick up. If he manages the Orpheum like he shot number 9 they will have to build an addition on the bank.

Joplin is where they dug up a lot of ground to get lead to shoot people with, but there isn't much left there but holes. When Joplin, Mo., and Galena, Ill., run out of lead maybe there won't be any more wars. We've got some pellets of Galena lead in our left leg and foot that have been there for a good many years, and so we are not crazy about Joplin or Galena. No, you are wrong: we weren't stealing watermelons nor chickens, that is, we weren't then. A kid took us for a teal duck and he took us aplenty. That's why we always feel sorry for the teals.

G. E. Shilkett operates the Rex theatre here, and while we don't know very much about it, we'll bet he is giving the rest of them a run for their money.

We ran into a regular hornet's nest at Webb City. There was a collection of film salesmen, exhibitors and equipment salesmen gathered in the office of the Civic Theatre Company and they were all talking at once and making signs like a gathering of candidates at a Republican caucus.

If it hadn't been for Fletch Hammond and P. Larsen of the Civic Theatre Company we doubt if we would have gotten out of there with our B. V. D.'s. These boys came to our relief, and they have our undying gratitude.

A. J. Simmons of the Plaza theatre at Lamar was there and he wanted to punch us in the nose for not coming to Lamar to call on him. We compromised the matter with him by consenting to sell him the HERALD for two years and this quieted him down. A HERALD subscription always does quiet 'em down. The Civic Theatre Company is rebuilding its theatre, which burned recently, and we judge from the plans that it will be a good one.

A man from Drumright, Okla. (we don't recall the name), is remodeling and refurnishing another theatre and when both of these houses are completed Webb City will have theatres a-plenty and they will be plenty good enough. When these theatres are open it will be tough on Joplin, for the Webb City folks have had to go to Joplin for their entertainment for some time.

Emporia, Kan.

Here we are back in the old Sunflower and hay fever state, and we find the sunflowers and more so.

We were sitting out in front of the hotel with the water running out of our eyes and nose when a kindly old lady came along and said: "What's the matter, my good man? Have you received bad news?" and we replied: "Do badam, id's the hay beber that bakes the wader rud oud of our eyes and dose." And she replied: "That's too bad; my husband had that hay fever as prolific as ever, except a little once and he only lasted 30 days." We said: "Well badam, babe that was log enough."

At Independence we met our old friend, C. J. Caskey, who operates the Best theatre. The Best is one of the old landmarks in Independence, having formerly been known as the Snark. C. J. is also a landmark, and he is so familiar with all the alleys and cellarways that nobody could catch him. He looks after all the details of the business as carefully as he does his bass flies, and if you knew him as we do, you would agree that that was carefully enough.

We also met two other very lovely people. Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Montgomery, who operate the Mainstreet theatre. This was our first meeting with these delightful folks, but we hope it won't be our last. Mrs. Montgomery knew us on sight, although she had never seen us before, which proves that the ladies have an eye for beauty—she had seen our picture in the HERALD.

We also met the manager of the Booth theatre. We found him an up-to-the-minute boy who seems to know the show business forward and back. The Booth is one of the Dickenson chain and is a credit to Independence.

Fox is paying rent on three theatres here in Emporia. Two of them are locked up and the Granada has to carry the load for all three of them. The Granada is a very fine theatre and is managed by Mr. Ray McLain, whom we met for the first time, and we judge that the Fox management picked a good one when they got Mr. McLain for the Granada. We also met Mrs. McLain, and we said something that almost threw her into hysterics, but we couldn't find out what it was, which proves that one ought to be careful of his conversation.

We found Mr. and Mrs. E. O. Briles very delightful people. They manage the Lyric, a second-run house, and they play at 10 and 15 cents. The only thing we found wrong with the Lyric is that it isn't large enough to handle the people. It took three shows to handle them last night. Mrs. Briles told us she was going to have a ride in an airplane today and the thing is circling over town right now. We hope the thing lands safely. No, we are not going up, and that's only half of it.

We wonder why they don't put Joe Brown and Winnie Lightner back together in pictures. There would be just as much sense in separating Laurel and Hardy or Polly and Marie as to separate this pair.

Just see what Zasu and Thelma did when they put them together. Won't they ever learn anything out there?

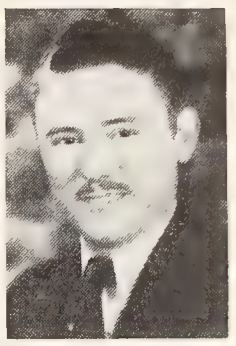
Our hay fever makes us cough and sneeze
And do a lot of cussing.
We've got an old asthmatic wheeze
But what's the use of fussing.
For we must work with all our might
From early morn 'till late at night.



And that's no bull. If you think so just come out and follow us around for a while. And now the duck season will soon be here. They say it's honest to be poor, but it's heltobehonest.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 145.—(A) Describe the difference between direct and alternating current. (B) Tell us why alternating current in such a large percentage of the power plants charge their lines with alternating current. (C) Explain just why it is possible to convey a greater amount of power over wires of given diameter if the current be alternating than if it be direct. (D) Tell us why 60-1 cycle current is found on so great a percentage of commercial power lines.

Answer to Question No. 137

Bluebook School Question No. 137 was: "(A) What various types of condensers are available for use with the electric arc? (B) How far apart should condensers be spaced? (C) Why should the collector lens never be in actual contact with the converging lens? (D) When using a plano-convex condenser does the collector lens send forward a parallel beam of light?

The following made acceptable answers: S. Evans and C. Rau, G. E. Doe, Lester Borst, R. J. Arntson, S. G. Williams, W. Lemke, Bill Doe, J. Abruzzo, D. L Mason, H. D. Schofield, W. Broadbent, L. D. Benjamin, A. Wells, T. R. Henry, G. Deckson and L. Cranlo, J. Wentworth, D. Emmerson, T. Van Vaulkenburg, S. G. Williams, A. Breston and G. Lombard, H. B. Coates, L. D. Solomon, S. Kay, P. L. Davis and J. Torr, N. Granby, F. B. Gamble, L. F. Bliven and H. M. Evans, B. L. Simpkins, Dan Holler, R. Giddings, M. McGuire, L. S. Marksley, R. Dwight and L. M. Dwight, P. T. Garling, B. Diglah and O. Garling, P. O'Brien, G. Farmann, P. H. Chiotis, F. F. Franks, H. Edwards, H. L. Harvey, K. L. Knight, F. Ferguson, J. L. Major and D. B. Bates, D. L. Simmons, D. Lambert and S. G. Goss, J. Rathburn and D. Little, R. Singleton, M. H. Prenderly, A. Bailey, A. Jones and L. T. Foley, B. U. Grant, J. Daniels, M. L. Tomlinson, F. D. Prinde and T. Gaitsley, B. E. Danning, J. Ahrenson, T. McGruder, D. Donahue, A. Ilks, S. Chestney and T. Lavery, R. Pierce, P. J. Cermak, B. R. Compton and L. Peterson, D. Buckstein and T. Howard, L. C. Cummings, D. Golding, L. Andrews, N. T. Potter, H. D. Cylor and H. L. Davis.

I note the increasing number of doubles, indicating that both men, presumably, in projection rooms are joining in the study, which is good. I have selected the answer of brother G. E. Doe as best for publication insofar as Section A is concerned. He says:

"The various types of condensers for use with electric light arc sources in motion picture projection are (1) the plano-convex, which consists of two plano-convex lenses placed with convex surfaces facing each other; (2) the Cinephor parabolic, now much in favor, particularly where high power arcs are used; (3) the meniscus-biconvex, now seldom if ever used but available if wanted and quite popular in past days; (4) the three-lens condenser, consisting of two plano-convex lenses with a bi-convex between, which combination also is still available but, I believe, no longer used, and it never was used much; (5) the large-diameter, thin condenser used with some types of reflector arc lamps."

On Section B, L. D. Solomon says: "Were the collector lens placed in actual contact with the converging lens, the contact could and would only be at one point—the center of the lenses. The collector lens, of course, being nearest the light source and between it and the converging lens, gets very much hotter than does the converging lens. If there be actual physical contact between lenses, then of course there would be a considerable excess of heat conveyed to the converging lens, and at only one point, namely, its center.

"This would be objectionable in any event, but is particularly so by reason of the fact that an extra amount of expansion would be set up at that point, which might operate to produce fracture in the lens. The lenses should be placed as closely together as possible without actual physical contact, this last for the reason that the beam between the two lenses diverges considerably."

Section C was fully covered in answer to Section B, which was permitted for the reason that Brother Solomon set the matter forth there somewhat better than did anyone in answering Section B itself.

Evans and Rau, Lester Borst, G. E. Doe, M. L. Tomlinson, B. Diglah, T. Van Vaulkenburg and W. Broadbent say almost exactly the same thing concerning Section D, without even much difference in wording. Here is an answer made up from them all:

"The collector lens does not send forward a parallel beam when the light source is in correct position for efficient work in projection. The beam between the collector and the converging lens diverges (as per Fig. 40, Page 170, Vol. 1, of the Bluebook), therefore, unless the two lenses be as close together as practical without actual contact (within from 1/16 to 1/32 of an inch of each other at the apex of their curves), there will be unnecessary light loss, which will increase as distance of separation is increased."

Brother S. G. Williams appends this note to his answer to Section D: "In these days of rear shutters and a projection speed of 90 feet per minute, does not the advantage of increased light outweigh whatever disadvantage there may be in increased heat transmission through actual contact between the two lenses?"

Answering this very pertinent question, I would say no, for the reason that the light loss set up by the separation above indicated (the maximum should be 1/16 of an inch) is so slight that it may be regarded as negligible. Then, too, increased projection speed and the rear shutter have no bearing on the matter, except that the rear shutter cannot, I believe, be trimmed down to provide quite such efficient light transmission as can the front shutter. As to increased projection speed, that has no bearing at all, unless it be that there is some added loss by reason of added absorption by the body of the film itself—not the photographic shades, but the celluloid. While it is quite true that as projection speed is increased, each film photograph remains over the aperture a shorter period of time, hence a less amount of light is transmitted to the screen through that individual picture, but don't forget that a proportionally greater number of photographs are projected during any given space of time, hence the total light sent forward to the screen remains unaltered except as above noted. During the time period we are considering, there being a greater number of photographs projected, the light must of course pass through a greater number of thicknesses of celluloid, hence the absorption would be greater, or so it seems to me.

New Commercial Invention Projects Stills and Sound

Inauguration in Wilmington, Del., and 22 other cities of an illustrated voice program service, fundamental in its application to commercial and social problems, is announced by the Fairchild-Wood Visaphone Corporation and the Western Union Telegraph Company.

The new service is based on an invention for co-ordinating the projection of still pictures with sound reproduction. It will be available for business programs.

"OPEN SEASON FOR SHOOTING STARS"

MRS. J. LESTER THERME, EXHIBITOR IN IOWA

OVER-SHOOTING OF STARS DISASTROUS

To the Editor of the Herald:

Here's a protest entered to where it may concern.

There is too much "open season" for shooting "stars." And the shooting is proving disastrous.

Chic Sales is officially box office dead in this vicinity, simply because they turned him loose in two-reel comedies. His particular brand of acting is too slow for a "two-reeler." Seeing him doddering around too often has taken away all the glamour of the man. And now, as a feature drawing-card in rather excellent attractions, he is "no big" on a banner, so "no good" at the money-till.

Slim Summerville, Roscoe Ates, Benny Rubin, Thelma Todd, Zasu Pitts and a host of others are losing value as box office attractions because they have doubled up on us and are seen too oft.

Most of us have a feeling that the short comedy stars and the long-feature attractions should be in two separate classes, and going from the "shorts" to the five and six reels plus is a promotion for excellence attained rather than a short cut on a bypath for more money. Eventually it works against them, these celebrities that are. They cease to "celeb." One tires from becoming too familiar with their faces, their particular tricks in trade, and their attractions fade from the picture. It's a rule that holds in the selling of any product; and, after all, they all become product after they are canned up as films. Keeping that product highly rated for commercial purposes is good business, and tips from customers are to be considered. Those strutting the legitimate stage retain charm for us and their magic much longer than the faces and forms on the Screen because they are a rarity, which enhances their value. You carefully build up a program for your theatre, and a comedy booking is switched on you, and what have you? The same faces in both parts of your program. The damage is done, but not to the extent that you can get reparation. Personally, we like them all—the movie colony. They are all "boy and girl friends" of ours. But we want them served in their places to keep our movie appetite whetted with admiration, when we dine a la motion picture. From "soup to nuts" in pictures is a sane principle to be heeded.—Mrs. J. Lester Therme, Wampas Theatre, Keosauqua, Iowa.

ON CYCLES AND TITLES

To the Editor of the Herald:

In "Stranger in Town" is one picture that is not in any particular cycle and it is darn good entertainment for both young and old. Some of the producers should take a look at this picture and then keep it in mind when they think that they have to make pictures of a certain cycle at a certain time to keep the public entertained. There are a lot of good stories lying around that they are passing up every day just trying to beat the other fellow at getting a "Covered Wagon," "Big Parade," "Ten Commandments," or some gangster or newspaper story on the market just because a competitor made one that was a hit.

And the same thing goes for the producers that think they have to produce all this sex stuff and then have guts enough to label it entertainment. "Stranger in Town" is good clean entertainment for all members of the family and you don't have to be afraid to take your wife or sweetheart for fear of being embarrassed at some of the smut that they are putting in pictures nowadays; furthermore, you don't have to put up a sign on your B. O. that this picture is not recommended for children or children under 16 are not admitted.

While I think of it, here is one that you might hand your cartoonist if you think it worthwhile.

Not long ago we were playing a Joe Brown picture. A certain father in town who has several little boys took the children to call on their mother, while in a hospital in a neighboring city. Before leaving, one of the little fellows said to his mother, "We can't come up to see you tomorrow, Mother, 'cause we have to see Joe Brown in 'The Tenderfoot.'"

This isn't exactly a lobby laugh, but you can call it what you wish.

And, by the way, do you think the distributors will ever learn that they don't have to use suggestive titles to get people in? The title "Stranger in Town" ought to be proof enough of that. Here Fox comes along with a picture from a story entitled "After the Rain." A nice clean title, don't you think? And they have to change it to "The Painted Woman." Can you feature that?—E. L. Parsons, manager, Garden Theatre, Renville, Minn.

PICTURES OF LIFE, NOT ART, HELD NEED

Not art but pictures of life that the mass audience understands and lives are what the theatres need, wrote Marty Schwartz, manager of the Fox West Coast Belmont Theatre at Los Angeles, to Jack L. Warner, vice-president in charge of production at the Warner Brothers' coast studios. Mr. Schwartz's letter follows:

I want to express the opinion of a theatre operator after seeing "Blessed Event."

It thrilled me every minute it was on the screen. First, because I enjoyed it, and secondly, because it will make our work so much easier in this terrific battle of survival.

"Blessed Event" has everything that is box-office, the type of picture our audiences understand—no high-falutin' theme and dialogue that is over their heads and keeps them away from the theatre. It is down to earth, and I can see and feel that I will be happy to be around the theatre when I show that type of entertainment. Please continue to make pictures for the fellows that pay admission, not the important judges and critics . . . they never pay, anyhow. Art? Bah! Let's have pictures of life as our mass audience understands and lives.

Please take this letter in the spirit that it is meant. This business is my life and I enthuse as much as the producer when I see something that is right in our industry. I have been all over the country . . . little towns and big. I have studied audiences. I have listened to them. I have seen them go out pleased and I have seen them leave mad at, perhaps, a good story or production, but that was over their heads. What does the big majority of our audiences know or care about the fictitious life of Park Avenue? Mr. Warner, look back for the past 10 years and, as you said, a million dollars does not make a good picture. Let's not kid ourselves. Your talk was enlightening—you are right. That's what we need and we little fellows live with the people that pay the freight of this industry. All this is not just my own opinion, but the summary of my ilk. We talk it over every day.—Marty Schwartz, manager, Fox West Coast Belmont Theatre, Los Angeles, Cal.

CHARLES E. ("CHICK") LEWIS, chairman and editor

SOME MARKET QUOTATIONS!

THUMBING THROUGH SOME scrap books the other evening we happened across a page wherein we jotted down, or pasted, little quotations, paragraphs, and clipped items garnered from most every conceivable place. In fact, if you would start an interesting side-line, duplicate the idea yourself and see what a kick you get out of it and how often you stumble over some little expression that fits our own business quite snugly.

To the men who find it hard to strike a happy medium in their relations with superiors, we suggest they lend an ear to what old man Diogenes had to say on a similar subject:

"A man should live with his superiors as he does with his fire; not too near lest he burn; not too far off lest he freeze."

IF YOU ARE BEING "worked to death," as the expression is often employed to describe long, indefinite hours, and you labor under the illusion that you are getting nowhere, may we quote from a mid-western newspaper which had the following to say:

"Opportunities might be more easily recognized if they didn't so often come disguised as hard work."

TWO QUOTATIONS CROSSED our path at the same time. One modern and the other old, but not antique. Hershel Stuart of RKO cautioned his managers to avoid wasting time and hanging around doing nothing when they could be busy on many important things for their theatre's good and welfare.

After reading about the above in RKO's NOW, we found the following words from the pen of Benjamin Franklin, a Philadelphia printer, right at the top of a page in our scrapbook:

"Dost thou love life? Then do not squander Time, for that is the stuff life is made of."

NOW WE ARRIVE at that type of human being who is ALWAYS right and heaven forbid that he should admit himself or his judgment to be at all in error. Just start an argument with one of these gents and you'll see him turn up his nose into a great big peeve just because you question his ideas. He just can't be wrong (in his own estimation), so to them we dedicate the following from the lips of Rouchefoucauld, 18th century French wisecracker:

"No persons are more frequently wrong than those who will not admit they are wrong."

AND WHENEVER YOU START running short of quotations (Wall Street notwithstanding) you can always fall back on good old Henry Ford. He gave us these pearly words of wisdom and they ought to sound very familiar to a lot of the boys:

"Thinking is the hardest work there is, which is the probable reason why so few engage in it."

WE, ESPECIALLY, in a business where so many are self-appointed or paid critics, should harken to these valuable few lines from Tuckerman. We only hope that the author meets up, some day, with a couple of hard-boiled newspaper critics passing judgment (good and otherwise) on worthy product:

"The man who becomes a critic by trade ceases, in reality, to be one at all."

HERE WE ARE AT the front door of one of those managers who develops a swell idea and then never gets to first base with it because when he starts telling the boss about it he paints so impossible a picture that they think he is either crazy or just plain nerts. William Feather of Cleveland has some good advice for these boys. Here it is, and we recommend it all along the line:

"Don't ruin a big idea by expressing it in big words."

JUST TO PROVE THAT we are not entirely prejudiced in our selection of quotes to the male species only, we offer the following from Mary Garden. It ought to give you something to think about:

"Money never yet formed an environment for anything; only genius or talent, or whatever lies within you, can do that."

In conclusion we quote that ancient proverb: "God feeds the birds, but He doesn't put the food in their nests." And so endeth our weekly blurb. "CHICK"

DICK KIRSCHBAUM'S LOBBY LAFFS!

Here is one of the contributions to Dick's series which managed to get quite a rise out of him. As a matter of fact he scribbled a note to tell us he liked it. But he forgot to mention just what he liked; the idea,—or the art work. Funny guys, these cartoonists.

DISCOUNT IDEA AND OTHER STUNTS AIDED GLASER ON CARNIVAL

Down in Carlisle, Pa., another point in William Schmidt's division and where Arthur R. Glaser manages the Strand Theatre, the 10 per cent discount idea and other stunts were effectively used in connection with the recent Publix Carnival Week campaign.

He arranged a community-wide tie-up with the Retail Merchants Association, merchants paying entire cost of all heralds and tickets that were given away with purchase of adult tickets at the theatre. These tickets were good for a 10 per cent discount at any of the stores participating. One of the largest stores in the city had banners made up for trucks for announcement of the "Strand-Store Profit Sharing Plan."

He also promoted a bannered Packard car for the week to distribute heralds and act as a bally. The car was equipped with a power amplifier and broadcast the profit sharing plan all over the country.

Various stage attractions, consisting of a well known local quartette, a selected 10-piece orchestra from the High School, and a sax trio, were promoted as added attractions. On the tail end of the week twenty-two girls from six to sixteen years of age, recruited from a local dancing school, put on a dance revue. The act ran for thirty minutes and consisted of songs, solos, tap and toe dancing and classical numbers by the older girls. A special kiddies matinee was arranged for Saturday.

HURLEY CREATED LOT OF GOOD WILL WITH SCHOOL BOOK STUNT

General economic conditions throughout his community and adjacent towns, affecting families to the point where children had to stay away from school for want of text books to pursue their studies, prompted Arch Hurley and his brother Mike, of the Princess Theatre, Tucumcari, N. Mex., to stage a round-up of discarded books from the homes of other pupils.

It was announced for a stated time that all children under 12 years of age who would bring to the theatre a text book usable in Quay County schools during the current year would be admitted free of charge. Children over 12 years of age, ordinarily charged adult admission, were offered an opportunity to attend the theatre any night or Saturday matinee for one book and 10 cents. A member of the school faculty was present each evening to examine the books as to fitness. Over 600 usable books were thus secured and turned over to school authorities for distribution among local and other communities in the county.

Hurley's move not only rated a long column of editorial comment in the local newspaper, but endeared the theatre management to many poor families in his section, a majority of which were patrons of the Princess prior to hard times. As a HERALD reader he is passing this information to other exhibitors, with the hope that Club members similarly situated may also benefit from the good will resulting from taking an active part in shaping community affairs for the better. It's a cinch that the poor will remember the Hurley Brothers'.

EGAN GARNERED LOT OF FREE PUBLICITY ACTING AS A JUDGE

Acting as one of the judges in the annual fair held by the Hudson's Bay Company at Calgary, Alberta, Canada, Pete Egan, manager of the Palace Theatre there, managed to annex a good-sized portion of the limelight and some newspaper stories by virtue of his activities when it came to passing on the city's best dressed cats and dogs.

Pete saw that consolation awards in the form of passes to the Palace were handed out to the many youngsters who thought their animals just as good as the winners. As a further gesture of goodwill and friendship for the younger generation, he passed around ice cream cones to all.

All of which is additional evidence why Pete Egan is popular among young and old in his home town. He's always putting over some little gag, such as described above, and the box office tells the story.

SCHOOL TIE-UPS

Floyd Fitzsimmons' next exploitation manual, dealing with the great possibilities of school and college tie-ups, will appear in next week's issue of the Club pages. Like the other Fitzsimmons' manuals, this one, too, will be chockful of marvelous slants to show direct results at the box office.

We are constantly receiving fine comment on everyone of these manuals and this one will surely be no exception. Look for it next week—and cash in.

SUBMARINE STUFF

BOB ANTHONY MADE EXCELLENT DISPLAY ON ANIMAL PICTURE

Among recent returns on the vast amount of exploitation done on "Bring 'Em Back Alive" is some photographic evidence of activities made on this picture by Robert Anthony, formerly assistant manager of the State Theatre, Cortland, N. Y., and recently promoted to managership of the Temple Theatre, another Schine house in the same city.

Robert Anthony

At the left of the accompanying photo is a close-up of one end of the attractive compo-board front and the portion on the right shows both entire compo front and cutouts of animals atop the marquee. You will note that a good sized portion of the space underneath marquee was enclosed, entrance for pedestrian traffic being provided for at both ends.

In addition to the display described above a ballyhoo truck equipped with amplifier and mike and constructed out of the same material as the front display, was used to cover all adjacent territory within a wide radius. Announcements were made over the mike and records were played for musical attraction.

Additional efforts included thorough coverage by billing of a 25-mile territory and heavier than usual newspaper advertising carried out under supervision of W. M.

Powers, Schine manager in Cortland. A special trailer was also used on the screen 10 days in advance. This was cut so that parts of it were thrown on the screen at a time, thus working up to the climax of a full trailer a few days prior to opening.

Excellent results followed the work done by Anthony and his co-workers and we're glad to have the opportunity to pass along to other members an account of his campaign. We'll be looking for further news from this new Club member because it is always our aim to try and recognize unusual ability among our new members and encourage them to contribute their interesting and profitable activities.

GILLMAN APPLIED MULE TAIL GAG TO DURANTE SCHNOZZLE

We picture below a composite illustration of a gag that not only provided heaps of fun for many youngsters but proved a corking box office accelerator for S. A. Gillman, manager of the Parkway Theatre, Baltimore, Md. As far as we know, it was originated by Gillman and his assistant, R. E. Etchberger. It was used in connection with the showing of "Speakeasily" and built around Jimmy Durante, who is one of the cast of that picture.

You will at once recognize the famous Durante schnozzle in the lower portion of the photo and, perhaps, recall the old pin-the-tail-on-the-mule gag that has been the delight and diversion to kiddies for many generations. Just what chain of thought suggested this strange, unrelated association of a mule's tail with the Durante proboscis is a bit beyond our ken; however, suggest itself it did, and the result was a pin-the-schnozzle-on-Durante stunt that went over at the Parkway like a sack of hot cookies.

Observe, then, if you please, both schnozzless and nose-attached shots of the board built and placed in front of the Parkway for the occasion. The youngsters were furnished with pasteboard replicas of the celebrated Durante beak and instructed to place same on the caricature sketch while blindfolded. Needless to state, a large crowd gathered while the stunt was being pulled off and when the doors were opened immediately after to admit the winners, a majority of the lookers-on followed in. As the stunt progressed the crowds increased.

Another little gag worked in connection with the same picture was put over through contacting a couple of fruit stand proprietors in a neighborhood market for a couple of thousand paper sacks for imprinting of title of picture, theatre, playdates and name of stand at bottom. This only set the theatre back the cost of printing.

If some of our members decide to use the Durante schnozzle stunt it will be well to keep in mind the suggestion that the doors be opened immediately on award of guest tickets to those successful in pinning on the detached nose, although any showman will recognize the psychology of this move. Thanks to Gilman for making it possible for the Club to receive this one. We'll hope to hear more from both him and Etchberger.

KEEPING UP WITH THE TIMES!

By GUY JONES

Was his face red? We suggest that he kill the bird and kill it quick.

CHALK UP ANOTHER FINE DISPLAY FOR THE RKO MAYFAIR

The marquee of the Mayfair Theatre, RKO first-run in New York City, is fast becoming famous for strikingly attractive displays.

Following the much discussed display made for "Bring 'Em Back," Robert Sisk and Terry Turner, respectively in charge of advertising, publicity and exploitation for RKO, made arrangements for construction of a huge, realistic volcano atop the marquee. Steam issued forth from the crater and "molten lava" poured from the sides. Flames spurted from the crater and the human touch was provided by figures of a native taking the heroine of the film up to the mouth of the volcano, as well as animated figures placed around the base, with one of them driving a yoke of oxen and waving his whip.

Four loudspeakers were placed inside the volcano and played a record of slow Hawaiian music, with volcanic roars intermittently interrupting the music. A background of Hawaiian mountain scenes, a flash front with elaborate art work, and palms and tropical shrubbery and trees in the lobby completed the atmospheric exploitation.

The steam outlets at the bottom of the volcano increased the illusion of lava pouring down the sides; and there was a flasher in the top, with lights going off and on to heighten the "outbursts." The beauty of the whole setup was that one man, simply to turn on switcher in the morning, was all that was required for the display. One switch controlled the electrically operated steam valve, which permitted steam to escape every thirty seconds.

A mould has been prepared from which smaller volcanoes can be made for smaller theatres. Blowers will be available for renting so that the fabric "flame" will have life.

Novel Doorknob Hangers

When people open their front doors these days they're very apt to find a good sized hanger on it with words to the effect that "It's On the Way." The hanger features a baby in a diaper and it's just one of the Warner publicity department's gags for exploitation of "Blessed Event."

Chatkin Boston Manager

Herbert Chatkin recently succeeded Charles Branham as Publix district manager of the Brighton, Allston and Newton districts of Boston, Mass. Branham, it will be recalled, was named to handle a new alignment of Iowa territory for the circuit.

SAM FIELD KNOWS HIS WAY 'ROUND IN RIDGEWOOD SECTION

Out in the Ridgewood section of Brooklyn, N. Y., where hausfrau-descendants of the old German settlers of that neighborhood can still concoct real potato pancake, sauerbraten, noodle zup, etc., and where, it is said, a glass of honest beer can still be obtained if one knows how to speak and act easily, Sam Field manages the Parthenon Theatre for the Randforce Amusement Company.

Sam, so Monty MacLevy, publicity disseminator for the circuit, tells us, knows his Ridgewood and the language spoken over there; at least, so a couple of tear sheets from a community would indicate. This newspaper serves its several courses a la tabloid and across the top of the front page of a recent issue 72-point type screams "Pygmies' Love Nest." Below the main head, scaled down to 48 point, is announced "Gorilla's Deadly Warfare." The balance of the page is entirely devoted to reproductions of stills of Congorilla," which, it is explained in a boxed notice, will play the Parthenon for four days, starting such and such a date. On page nine of the same issue appears a "Congorilla" cross-word puzzle, thus adding many more inches of free space to the already stated page.

We hear that Fields lands something like the above on the average of about once each month, which is not so bad for a fellow who wasn't born in Ridgewood and reads his German backwards; in fact, we modestly classify his flair for space-grabbing as one big break for him and the Parthenon, and worthy of a P. T. Barnum medal of honor.

In addition to having a swarm of fine contacts among business men and merchants of his neighborhood for promotional schemes, Sam, in his spare moments, writes ads for his own house, the Ridgewood and Glenwood Theatres, other houses under the supervision of Supervisor Lew Preston.

We are glad, indeed, to get a line on this Club member's activities and hope he will come through with further news of what he is doing to sell his shows. In the meantime, we wish him and Lew Preston continued success.

PUBLICITY MAN BECOMES "ZOMBIE"!

See the man on the left, inside the quaint old cab? He's a publicity man down at Loew's State Theatre, Houston, Texas. Maybe Homer McCallen, who knows? Anyway, he doubled as a "White Zombie," along with two former stock players. The stunt was used at night time and the occupants were spotted with green rays from a powerful battery lamp. The cab windows were covered with scrim to add to the ghastly effect. This novel bally caught the public eye.

CHATTY STYLE ADS SUCCESSFULLY USED BY HERB' McGINNIS

Good examples of the intimate, chatty style of theatre advertising may be seen in copy turned out by H. S. McGinnis, manager of Warner's Ohio Theatre, Sidney, Ohio. The series was headed, "Sez Me to You" and signed, "Sez McGinty." Most of the ads ran eight inches on two columns. Let's show you a few excerpts:

"Met a feller from Iowa t'other day and he sed the d'preshun was so bad the Mississippi was only runnin' three times a week, but I'm tellin' you he's all wet.

"Things are lookin' up and it won't be long before we'll all have cream in our coffee once again—we're on the road back—and a bit wiser, too.

"In the meantime, come on over Saturday and join us in laffin' at 'Make Me a Star.' . . . Then come right back again Sunday to see. . . . I'll B. C. N. U."

As a bid for out-of-town trade McGinnis inserted the following and in another newspaper in a small town near Sidney:

"Came through your town last week; stopped at Mr. Sinclair's Gas Fillup and refueled. Had the Mrs. along and she sure thinks you run a nice clean city—and you sure do, too.

"While we're on the subject of Clean let me remind you that Saturday we have Tom Mix and Tony in . . . a cleaner, faster and more exciting fillum you'll never see again. Better cum. And Sunday and Monday." . . .

The preceding ads all carried a small photo of McGinnis in the upper right-hand corner. As a change of fare he inserted a large (?) mark in the space for the cut and wrote the following copy:

"Sed a feller to me, 'them thar ads are okay if that mug of yours warn't always stuck around.' Sez I, okay, Pal; enything to please the Cash Customers—at that I believe he's right—there's some sort of improvement.

"Talk about improvements—pitchers are sure gettin' better and the proof of the puddin' is in the seein'—for instance, lookit today's show. . . . Then comes Saturday and Roscoe Ates . . . and does this serious faced Erwin do some plain and fancy clownin'? I'll say he does, . . . but the best news is Sunday's feature." . . .

We also have some photographic evidence in the form of small snapshots on hand, showing that Mack has been busy with other things than writing of chatty theatre ads; however, they're a bit too small to do justice to the subjects. We can tell you, although detailed information is lacking, that he apparently made a tie-up with some dairy concern for a corking lobby display of a huge replica of a milk bottle, flanked on all sides around the base with regular quart size bottles. In the same photo we can see two of those speedobykes that the kiddies rave about, indicating that the dairy people were prevailed upon by Mack to donate a couple of give-aways.

Another small shot shows a lobby display of bedroom furniture, which featured a certain mattress and further indicates that Mack made another tie-up for the give-away of the articles.

Three other small photos portray other activities on recent pictures. One shows an attractive display made for "Doctor X," made with cutout letters of the title arranged in a semi-circle with a large X in the center. In the background is a large cutout of a woman character in the picture.

On "Dark Horse" one of those diminutive Austins was used for a bally, with a giant-size stuffed figure draped from the rear bumpers clear across the back and top of car. The other shot shows a portion of an atmospheric lobby display made for "Bring 'Em Back Alive."

McGinnis has been hanging around theatres ever since he was 11 years old, working after school hours and gradually acquiring the necessary knowledge to fit him for a manager's position. He has a lot of tricks up his sleeve that will be of interest to his fellow Round Tablers and we'll hope to hear from again in the near future.

ORLOVE HAS METHOD OF CHECKING UP ON HOUSE THROW-AWAYS

Method of distribution appears an important factor in the effective results achieved by L. W. Orlove, manager of the Tivoli Theatre, Milwaukee, in connection with an inexpensive throw-away.

These mimeographed 8½ by 14-inch sheets of ordinary but substantial stock are distributed house-to-house, but are not placed in the mail box or pushed into a crack in the step; nor are they folded and crushed around the door knob. Each one is inserted half way under the door, so that when Orlove drives around to check the distributor he can see every one of the bills and know that they will be noticed.

LAMM'S PROFITABLE STAGE WEDDING!

WE continue to harvest the summer crop of stage weddings, this time one from Julius Lamm, well known Round Tabler and formerly manager of the Variety Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio. In addition, we'll tell you what he did to exploit "Dark Horse."

Twenty merchants participated in the promotional activities surrounding the stage wedding, each one displaying in advance the present donated and an appropriately lettered card selling the entire show on the designated date. Round trip tickets to Niagara Falls and a suite of rooms at a well known hotel on the Canadian side were also promoted without cost to theatre. Additional cost-free features of the campaign included a 25-piece orchestra for the occasion and flowers and other decorations for stage, auditorium and lobby. Credits to merchants on screen and in lobby took care of the theatre's end of the deal. Five thousand special invitations were mailed to all homes in the vicinity of the theatre.

Exploitation on "Dark Horse" included special decorations for the front of the house; a bally of a truck with a 7-piece band and two speakers extolling the virtues of "Dark Horse"; and a torchlight parade of over 200 children, during which handbills carrying the head, "Vote For Every Star," were distributed. Names of stars in picture and their photos were made up in the form of an election ballot. Copy at the bottom of bill stated that "Hilarity Was Just Around the Corner—at the Variety Theatre."

The two photos on this page show views of the stage wedding and the theatre front as decorated for the above-mentioned picture. While the shot of the bride and groom on stage is not very sharp, we believe it will convey a fair idea of the setting used for this event. We understand that this reliable old stunt increased trade 100 per cent on a hot night.

SEFF SUPPORTS THE STREET BALLY AS A SEAT-FILLING STUNT

The power of the bally as a box office stimulant was again demonstrated a short time ago when E. E. Seff, manager of the Rialto and Loop Theatres, Sioux City, Iowa, used a street stunt to exploit "Wild Women of Borneo."

The two weird looking people pictured here are described by Seff as "a couple of pals who got him some real business." These boys, dressed in burlesque fashion to represent Borneo females, attracted a lot of attention. He put them on the streets two days prior to opening and when opening day had come and gone, the first packed house in many a moon greeted his eyes. Which, as he points out, bears out the theory that "if you go after it, you get it—and the world hasn't come to an end yet."

Again and again different managers point out the efficacy of the old bally as a stunt to bring them to the box office. Perhaps Seff's was particularly effective in that the make-up of the two "pals" bordered on the ridiculous. Anyway, it's something to ponder over as a means of waking things up—if this sort of stunt hasn't been overworked in any given community. Thanks to Seff for sending it along. We will hope to include him as an active contributor to our Club.

ZIMMER PROMOTED TO SPRINGFIELD (ILL.) POST!

A. R. Zimmer, former Fox theatre manager in Dodge City, Kan., has been appointed city manager of the Fox-Lincoln and Tivoli Theatres in Springfield, Ill., which come under E. C. Rhoden's supervision.

Zimmer recently used the "wall paper" gag to plug "Winner Take All" by promoting discarded paper samples from the dealers. The old, familiar catchline of "We'd tear the paper from the walls to tell you that—" and other copy was imprinted on the face of the paper.

LOUIS LABINE AND FLORIST MADE FINE DISPLAY FOR LOBBY

A splendid example of cooperation between florist and theatre manager was recently demonstrated when Louis U. Labine, manager of the Strand Theatre, New Britain, Conn., arranged for the staging of a Tom Thumb wedding. The tieup was made in connection with a Saturday matinee showing of "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm."

Labine contacted a dancing school teacher and secured the services of 25 pupils to take part in the ceremonies. The teacher also contributed her time during rehearsals and the necessary costumes for the show, receiving in return ten days of screen advertising.

In addition to furnishing bouquets for all the youngsters who took part in the wedding, the florist contributed a lobby display somewhat similar to the one from Peoria, Ill., pictured on this page. It was the same sort of a little house with a fence around it and the theatre artist and stage hand are also credited with their share of the work. Screen advertising also took care of the florist's end of the deal.

When the wedding party arrived at the theatre in cars promoted from the Packard Motor dealer, confetti and rolls of paper were showered upon the passengers. At the appointed time the bride and her party marched down the two centre aisles to the strain of the wedding march, played by an organist who gave her services gratis for the occasion. (Labine lets her practice on the instrument occasionally.) The groom and minister then took their proper places on the stage and the ceremony was on. A capacity audience showed its appreciation by keeping so silent one could hear a pin drop. A novel and surprise effect was obtained immediately at the close of the ceremony by having a bag of confetti rigged on the baton open on the couple.

The entire cost of the presentation outlined above was $12; the trailer, $4.50 and card printing $7.50. As to results, the house played to the largest matinee trade since opening, despite the fact that the day was exceptionally hot.

Another novel presentation put on a short time ago by Labine was a "Jack and Jill Revue." The stage hand and artist constructed a large shoe for a background and 100 youngsters took part in the show. Twelve of the kids were featured as headliners and the entertainment lasted for thirty minutes. The dancing school teacher again came to the fore in return for screen credit. An advertisement in the paper for talent to take part in the revue brought about 500 kiddies to the stage door. The cost of putting on the show, including trailers and services of a pianist, amounted to $26, and the results were as gratifying as those attending the Tom Thumb wedding.

We note from a tear sheet taken from a florists' trade paper that the tieup described above was enthusiastically mentioned in a section devoted to suggestions for stimulating trade, which is proof that merchants are in a receptive mood these days for any scheme to bring their wares before the public. It was a nice piece of work on the part of Labine and he is to be congratulated for his initiative. We hear he plans to put on another kiddie show a little later and we're sure other Club members will want to hear the details.

L. WORLEY PROMOTED SEVERAL EFFECTIVE MERCHANT TIE-UPS

Three tie-ups with local institutions materially helped L. C. Worley, manager of the Madison Theatre, Peoria, Ill., when he exploited "Downstairs."

He arranged with a local radio broadcasting concern to offer 25 pairs of tickets to see John Gilbert in his own story, awarding the ducats to those who sent in the best suggestions for the program of the radio station's new "Variety Hour." The theatre received from four to six announcements each day for the period of a week.

What John Gilbert and typewriters have to do with one another we don't know, except that maybe he wrote his yarn on an Underwood. However, be that as it may, Worley arranged with the Peoria Typewriter Company to display Gilbert typewriter stills in two window displays and four counter displays in stores handling the Underwood. Each display carried a mounted still.

Worley also took advantage of the annual convention of the Illinois Pharmaceutical Society, held in the city at that time. He secured permission from the hotel management to place cards under the doors of 500 rooms, with copy welcoming the members to Peoria and suggesting that they and their families drop around to see the current attraction at the theatre.

The above is the first word we've had of Leonard Worley's activities in some time and even if we had to get the information through the courtesy of the M-G-M publicity department, we're mighty glad to offer a report on what's keeping him so tied-up he can't find time to drop the Club a line now and then. Of course, he's a city manager and that job spells work. Maybe these words will jog him up a bit.

WELL-BALANCED SHOWS !

Don't be discouraged if on one or two occasions in the past year your suggestions for improving the shows were not well received by your district or circuit booker. Possibly, prevailing conditions made it impossible for him to take action on what you wanted.

The local manager is beyond all question of doubt the best judge of what a well-balanced program should consist of. He is also the one who should be in a position to suggest the best days to spot certain productions. Any intelligent booker knows this, and if he is at all anxious to cooperate with local manager he will gladly change or switch the shows to suit the suggestion.

Get your bookings as early as possible and as far in advance as you can. This will permit sufficient time for the booker to pay attention to what you want. Look over every program booked into your house and consult the HERALD regularly for reviews, etc., so that you can decide whether the bill is well-balanced and not top heavy with some particular phase of entertainment. Or possibly lacking in much needed comedy.

By keeping informed at all times on the various subjects released, especially the shorts, you can readily see, as soon as the bookings come in, whether suggestions or changes are in order.

We have always admired the programs assembled by the independent exhibitor, because he must shift for himself and naturally pays careful attention to these details. You must likewise learn to give more thought to what is projected on your screen. Don't take anything thrown at you and laugh it off with the alibi that the booker is to blame. YOU are the one responsible for your house. Fight for every little thing that will help you make your house a profit-maker.

BERT HENSON AND ASSOCIATES DOING LOT OF GOOD WORK

A recent report concerning the activities of Bert Henson, director of advertising and publicity for the Cleveland division of RKO theatres, and who makes his headquarters at the Palace, discloses that he and his gang have been putting over a number of effective tie-ups and other promotional schemes at no cost to his division.

To inaugurate RKO Greater Show Season he made a tie-up with a leading newspaper for gratis distribution of 250,000 four-page tabloid-size papers featuring the RKO Talent Quest. The front page was entirely devoted to RKO product and activities, the second page outlined the search for local theatrical talent and the third featured photos of stars and coming attractions at the Palace. The newspaper took the back page to plug its own departments.

writes things for the HERALD about Tin Pan Alley and who, as far as we know, is the only crooner on this paper's staff, became quite excited a few days ago concerning the tie-up illustrated therein. It seems that the Whitmark Music Publishing Company is an important factor in exploitation activities on "Crooner," having at least two of the picture's popular songs to its credit and, therefore, is plugging both picture and compositions through music stores. This photo shows the window display arranged by Henson and a local dealer in sheet music and musical instruments.

Before signing off on Bert Henson for the time, let us mention another tie-up he made with a local florist and acknowledge receipt of an application for membership in the Club from Orville Deffenbaugh, head art man for RKO theatres in Cleveland.

In connection with the opening day of Greater Show Season at the Palace and in addition to street decorations and gaily colored pennants strung from the front of the building to top of marquee, a floral display of 1,000 roses per day for the period of one week was promoted for the first 1,000 lady patrons. The foyer was attractively decorated with ferns and other flowers donated by the Florists' Association of Greater Cleveland.

Regarding Deffenbaugh's membership, we're mighty glad to have him with us and hope he'll send this department some examples of his work. Thanks to Bert for his report and we'll be on the lookout for further news. Especially if it applies to some of the good old reliable box office slants on music store and other tie-ups.

A DISPLAY THAT SELLS SEATS!

Here is another beautiful and effective display in which the new season's fine product is properly emphasized. It is the work of Howard Jaudon of the Tampa Theatre in Tampa, Florida, under the supervision of Jack Fitzwater, the manager.

This display was spotted between the lobby of the theatre and the entrance foyer where it was bound to catch the eye of those who passed into the theatre.

The sensible use of tinsel and brilliant colors was an important factor.

AL SINDLINGER HAS SOME IDEAS FOR THE REST OF THE OUTFIT

It's been some little time since we last heard from Al Sindlinger, manager of the Astor Theatre, Reading, Pa., but a recent report of his activities discloses that this Round Tabler has been very much concerned with numerous and sundry methods of selling shows.

Take a squint at the mechanical man shown in the small photo. Al made the gadget all by himself and jams traffic every time he puts him out in front of the house. People are supposed to ask the alleged robot a question and receive an immediate answer, all of which is taken care of through a "mike" in the robot to earphones of a man in the office. The man makes reply through another mike and the voice is relayed to a loudspeaker hidden in the robot's mouth. A very simple matter for Al to rig up because he has a flair for building all kinds of sound equipment. Try the gag out yourselves if you like the idea and can build gadgets, or go into conference with your head operator and carpenter. Al's color scheme for the robot is blue coat and red pants.

Sound Truck Ballyhoo!

The other photo shows his sound truck, which, in the instance of a tie-up with the greyhound bus company during the run of "Week-end Marriage," preceded one of the large buses on a tour of the entire county. A big banner on the bus announced that the vehicle would carry people free of charge to the Astor Theatre. This stunt created a lot of good will and word-of-mouth advertising.

During the recent run of "Roar of the Dragon" Sindlinger gave patrons a novel trailer presentation. It opened with the word "Action" and as the word appeared on the screen a blast of flash powder was set off in the footlights. Right on the heels of this 10,000 watts of green light flooded the entire theatre, the lights being hidden in the grill work of the ceiling. Simultaneously a thousand or so circulars, bearing close-ups of five pairs of eyes of the principals in picture and descriptive matter on one side and appropriate selling copy on the other, were dropped from the grill work. The fader was then carried a bit higher. The punch delivered by this novel and exciting presentation had the desired effect of making the audience spread the word about town.

Another stunt that Al is successfully using at present with his evening shows is announcement over the public address system of last-minute news flashes, furnished through the cooperation of a local newspaper. In return for the publicity the paper receives at the theatre it gives free space and a generous amount of publicity.

All of which is very interesting and considerable evidence that Round Tabler Sindlinger is still hitting up his usual pace. He has been at the helm of the Astor for the last six months and the foregoing is but a sample of what he does to put his house on the theatre map. We will hope to keep in closer touch with him in the future.

May we also suggest that when he nexts dopes out another mechanical man gag, that he furnish us with the information on how we can all duplicate the idea at a minimum of cost. It's the real "All for One and One for All" spirit.

"CHANDU" PRESS BOOK!

When a group of real showmen band together for the purpose of doping out ways and means of helping put over certain pictures, then they are deserving of thanks from every exhibitor in the country.

BUT, when this same gang turns out a press book like the one on "Chandu"; chock-full of sensible, plausible exploitation ideas; crammed with gags easily adaptable to most any situation; containing news-stories that when rewritten and localized ought to be acceptable to the hardest boiled small-town newspaper editor; seat-selling ad mats; then it's well nigh time that someone moved for a rising vote of thanks to every man in any way responsible for this press book.

It's really worth its weight in gold, and if you're playing "Chandu" we earnestly recommend that you make full use of what the press book has to offer. You can't, and won't, go wrong. "CHICK"

THEATRE AD CONSTRUCTION!

Exchange Mat Material Still in Demand from Showmen Who Want Further Tips on Advtg.

By EDDIE HITCHCOCK
Publicity Director
RKO St. Louis Theatres

THE effectiveness of rules and well proportioned boxes is readily seen in the ad layouts chosen for this week. They are easy on the eye and help to make your ad stand out on the movie pages.

The mechanics of making up an intelligent ad is the most vital part of motion picture merchandising and it is surprising that it is so little understood. When you consider that there are thousands of theatres in the country, that means that there are supposed to be thousands of advertising men to put those theatres over. The fate of the motion picture industry is in the hands of these thousands of merchandisers and yet, in the majority of cases, there is appalling carelessness in this regard.

Do you know how long it takes to lay out six ads similar to those on the layout page? It takes about four hours—two hours on two evenings when your theatre is closed and you have a week's campaign all mapped out! You can send them all to your newspaper together and have your proofs on your desk all week for any last minute corrections.

The cases of carelessness referred to are chiefly due to fighting deadlines. Some theatre managers wait until the last minute to send their ads in for the next day's editions. The inevitable result is a botched up job. Your ad has to run whether you like it or not. It is too late to make any changes. Frankly, we have never worked that way. You will be more pleased with yourself and the results you will get if you sit down and line out immediately the week's work ahead of you. And you'll be amazed at how little time it takes!

Time Well Spent!

A couple of hours for two nights and you've got all the ads ready for the week ahead of you. A couple of more hours and your lobby copy is all set. You are free then to concentrate on your publicity and exploitation stunts—without worry or interruption. Try it and you will suddenly discover that you've systematized yourself to a remarkable degree. More than that, it will suddenly dawn on you that you're a one-man organization. And, what's more, you will learn that you actually have time on your hands! You can keep that luncheon engagement or take the wife out once in a while.

To show you how it works, this is number five in our series of layouts. When Chick said how about tackling the job we said sure, that's easy. Then we sat right down to go to it and the first thing you know we had five layouts finished, copy and all. Do you know what that means? That means that we can go about our business for five weeks and go to work on something else, and while we're attending to that something else somebody is bound to say, "How the hell do you manage to keep everything going at the same time?"

That's what makes it fun. It's a routine to which you become accustomed and which you execute with lightning precision. Because of it you can accomplish a week of intensive attention to a de luxe theatre in the short space of two days—and come through with as fine a campaign as it would ordinarily take weeks to plan.

You owe it to yourself and your employer to systematize yourself accordingly and out of it will come better business and better pay.

PAUL SWICKARD HAS A THRIVING RANGER CLUB OUT ON COAST

Inauguration of a Buck Jones Ranger Club at the Strand Theatre, Los Angeles, Calif., resulted in an extra performance of the current show, during which 5,200 paid admissions were checked in, with 400 people sitting in the aisles and on stage. Various promotional activities by Paul Swickard, owner manager of the theatre, featured the advance campaign.

One of the highlights of the campaign was a parade of 1,000 youngsters, consisting of a Boy Scout band, a Ranger band, 100 boys on bicycles, 40 mounted people and decorated floats. Trucks carried banners reading "Welcome Buck Jones," etc. Other features included the well known movie horse ballyhoo, three school busses loaded with the smaller youngsters, comedy vehicles and antiquated Ford autos. A "flying lion," famous for transcontinental trips, was supplied through courtesy of a local oil concern.

Two cooperative ads were promoted by Swickard on the strength of the occasion. Fully twenty-five or thirty merchants contributed to a double truck, all ads carrying small head cut of Jones, with centre space devoted to the theatre. Merchants paid for at least 75 per cent of the cost of the two pages. The other was a full five-column ad tie-up with 10 other merchants, with the theatre stealing three-quarters of the display.

Additional exploitation and advertising included the billing of 150 cards; distribution of 1,000 heralds; congratulatory telegrams from the mayor and governor; the personal appearance of Buck Jones, with horse Silver, at the theatre, in parade and on stage; the attendance of prominent people to furnish background of responsible sponsorship; use of imprinted paper bags and napkins in nearby stores, and a luncheon for Jones at a leading hotel. Following the boys' initial activities two tents were erected in front of the theatre labeled "Recruiting Office," where further information and application cards were made available to prospective Rangers.

Certainly, the above was considerable of a campaign, but, without a doubt, Swickard was justified in so doing when results are taken into consideration. 5,200 paid admissions at two performances cannot very well be laughed off, nor can the fact that he started a movement which is calculated to enlist future interest from the youngsters. We will be interested to learn of what methods he will use to keep the kiddies pepped up.

GENERALS ALL ! ! !

The "Hundred Percenter," West Coast theatre house organ, quotes the following excerpts from speeches made by district managers attending a general meeting in Los Angeles, Aug. 2.

"I have implicit confidence and faith in the ability of my men to 'Come Through.'" —Walter Kofeldt

"My District is moving forward with unified effort. We have a past record to overcome." —Hal Neides

"We cannot stand on past laurels. This Drive is a real test—Only results count." —George Bowser

"The extremity of any business is the man-power of that business. Our Company's responsibility is our own." —Dick Dickson

"We are employing selling methods of 1910. Hot weather, depression and similar complaints are not retarding our effort in Arizona." —Tom Sorerio

"Our slogan—'A Winner Never Quits —A Quitter Never Wins.' We will win because we will conceive and execute." —Norman Sprowl

"We are watching bookings. We are selling and minimizing expenditures. 'We will never fail Al Hanson.'" —Bruce Fowler

"If we go down, we will go down fighting—We are working out our own salvation." —Milt Arthur

It seems only just to include the remark made by Marshal Foch on the eve of the Battle of the Marne, who, in so many words, said: "My left has given away; my right is in retreat; I will attack in the centre."

NOVEL ADVERTISING USED BY LORENCE TO ANNOUNCE A CHANGE

Some effective newspaper advertising combining both the let's get acquainted idea and change of entertainment policy, was recently carried by Herman Lorence, newly appointed manager of the Strand Theatre, Niagara Falls, N. Y.

Ad copy was written in a chatty style, continuing the message in succeeding issues of the paper. Lorence stated that his conclusion, after looking over the situation, was that the combination policy was desirable; that it meant the employment of quite a number of residents of the city; that the theatre payroll would be increased $3,000 each week; that many business concerns would thereby benefit from the move, and that, consequently, a bid for patronage was being made.

In another ad he reminded patrons that he bore the reputation of "If He Advertises It You Will See It"; that no superlatives would be used to sell poor entertainment; that he would personally book all pictures and vaudeville, and never allow anything on the stage not fit for children to see.

The day following the presentation of the first combination bill he came out with a "thank you" ad, carrying thanks from the various performers and himself for the generous response from the community and, at the same time, mentioning the value of forming friendships. Policy of the house and guaranty of future quality of entertainment were also stressed.

Lorence's ad copy appears to strike a somewhat different note for announcements such as described above and perhaps this is due to the fact that he recently returned to the theatre management field after gaining valuable experience in other branches of the business.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

At the age of eleven years Arthur Charles Stock, present manager of the Alexander Theatre, Kapuskasing, Ontario, Canada, became bitten with the theatre bug when he started running messages and putting up advertising for a small theatre in his birthplace, Fulham, England.

Arthur Stock

Since that time, however, he climbed the several steps of the ladder that leads to a theatre manager's office, veering off at one time to become associated with the Vitagraph Film exchange and, at another, as assistant cameraman for William J. Craft, who is now with Universal. Stock helped Craft make pictures for the Canadian Government.

He has been connected with Wallaceburg Theatres, Limited, for some time and has managed the Vermont Theatre, Toronto; the Iroquois, Petrolia; the Alexandria, Kapuskasing, and the New Royal at North Bay. He is a member of the Rotary Club, the Recreation Club, and the Canadian National Revolver Club. Lodges and other fraternal groups do not have representation as far North as Stock resides, hence he had to give them up. He is married and the father of one child.

JAKE ROSENTHAL IS AFTER OLD MAN HARD TIMES IN HIS TOWN

After hearing and reading about hard times for the past year or so, when a man informs us that he's "enjoying this so-called depression and hitting the ball harder than ever"; that "the wheels in the old box office are turning over in good shape," it's like a ray of sunshine after a dismal spell of weather.

We refer to none other than Showman Jake Rosenthal, impressario of the Iowa Theatre, "Theatre Beautiful," and purveyor of what are claimed the "Best Shows" in Waterloo, Iowa. You've read of Jake's activities in past issues of this department and we don't need to state that his work is always interesting.

When he played "Dark Horse" a short time ago he ballyhooed this picture with a big parade of kiddies, an element of Waterloo always ready to go to bat for their Jake because he's ever on the alert to give the youngsters a break. Note the bannered truck that was filled to overflowing with kiddies at the time of the parade. They made a run for the theatre before the photographer arrived on the scene. Business was so good on the picture that things were switched around and the film kept for an entire week of bang-up trade.

On another recent occasion the whole city turned to help Jake out when entertaining 100 orphans from a home in a nearby town. Ice cream, gum, a trip through the local radio station and other attractions were accorded the guests by city officials, merchants and other prominent citizens. Every newspaper in his section of the state carried news stories of the event.

However, what we're more interested in than anything else at the present is that, though Jake took it on the chin as hard as most any one while business was toughest, he kept his head up all the time and continued to go after goodwill and whatever trade there was. Now he's getting a well deserved break and we sincerely hope his good fortune will always be in evidence. We'll be looking for further news from Waterloo.

PROGRAMS AND MAILING LISTS !

With the opening of the new show season many theatres are resuming the publication and distribution of weekly, semi-monthly or monthly programs. Those houses who make it a rule to cut this item from their overhead during the warm weather sometimes make the mistake of selling themselves on the idea that they no longer need this important form of advertising.

Programs can be made to mean a lot to any theatre. If you merely frame them to convey your current and coming week's attractions, it is still an important phase of your show-selling. On the other hand, if you make full use of the many possibilities then we do not have to tell you how valuable they can be for your house.

A large, and up-to-the-minute mailing list is one of the strongest wedges for any theatre. It gets your program and your announcements right into the home and that's an important angle that no one will argue about. It serves as a constant reminder that your theatre is waiting to amuse them. It emphasizes pictures that need such emphasis to get them over at the box office.

Some theatres find it advantageous and profitable to print up several extra thousand, above the amount they need for mailing and theatre distribution, to be used for house-to-house canvassing. But regardless of the methods you like or employ, we feel reasonably certain that if you are not using printed programs and a good mailing list you are passsing up an important method of reaching your public.

STAR DOUBLE STUNT SUCCESSFULLY USED BY RKO IN BROOKLYN

A star-double contest was recently used to excellent advantage in connection with the showing of "Bird of Paradise" at the RKO Albee Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y. The stunt was worked out by Dick Farrell, publicity representative, together with Charles McDonald, New York district manager, and Dr. Joe Lee, Brooklyn division manager, through a tie-up with a local newspaper.

Daily announcements in the paper and on the screen several days in advance of opening, informed readers and patrons of the inauguration of a contest to find a Brooklyn girl who most closely resembled Dolores Del Rio. Requests were made for photographs and each day one was featured by the paper on the amusement page, together with detailed information concerning the contest.

Owing to a dearth of Del Rio types, the contest was extended to the entire list of RKO Radio stars and featured players. Ten winners representing Constance Bennett, Ann Harding, Irene Dunne, Gwili Andre, Rochelle Hudson, Anita Louise, Arline Judge, Helen Twelvetrees and Dorothy Wilson were chosen from over one hundred entrants. Each girl received a cash award and the one selected for the Del Rio type was given an extra award. The 10 girls were also offered a tour of all Brooklyn RKO theatres on Monday and Tuesday nights and introduced to audiences as recognized doubles. A leading department also offered the group a week's employment as models in a fashion show presented the week after closing of the contest. The newspaper supported the stunt in whole-hearted manner.

According to results achieved in Brooklyn the above stunt appears to be a corker for obtaining newspaper publicity.

WOODIN FOUND OLD TIME SHOWMANSHIP GAVE BEST RESULTS

When Harry M. Woodin opened the new Leimert Theatre in Leimert Park, Los Angeles, Calif., he was up against a brand of chain and independent competition that demanded the finest type of constructive showmanship to make the theatre a success.

Finding that the lure of a beautiful new modernistic theatre, offering single bills was not appealing to the public, Woodin started to go after business in an energetic manner. First double bills were introduced, but the other houses were showing dual features and at a lower price. Then Woodin got down to old-time showmanship.

Booking in Captain Salisbury in person with his picture, "The Lost Empire," Woodin ballyhooed the feature to the skies.

Realizing that he had to spend money to make money, he used plenty of space in every available advertising medium and followed it up by purchasing a complete camping outfit—tent, cots, stove, blankets, cooking utensils, etc. The outfit cost him in the neighborhood of $100. For a week in advance he had the camping equipment on display in his lobby and gave out coupons for the drawing.

The stunt went over like wildfire. Fifteen minutes after the box office opened at 6:30 P. M., the house was packed to the walls. So it went for the following two nights. Packed houses. But on the final night—the night the camp equipment was given away—business was a revelation. The first night's jam was repeated and the accompanying photograph shows the crowd that waited for the second show.

That four days zoomed the Leimert to popularity. Since then, by continual novel, progressive showmanship, Woodin has kept the crowd coming and has his opposition at its wit's end trying to keep up with him.

DRESS UP THE STAFF !

An immaculate, snappy front will always have a long and pleasing effect on your patrons, and in this connection no single expenditure can match, in importance, the purchase of new uniforms.

The doorman, the ushers, page boy, and even the cashier should present a nice appearance at all times. It is difficult to do so when the uniforms are worn out or ill-fitting.

Since many theatres are going back to girl-ushers it represents a good time to purchase new outfits. And they can be bought today for much less than you paid a year or two ago. Why not start getting estimates? You'll find that a complete new set of uniforms will amount to but a small figure when spread over a few months. But it will give your patrons something to talk about for a while and pep up the entire house.

Incidentally, if you have an assistant, dress him up in a neat Tuxedo. Lacking an assistant, your head usher or one of the boys tall enough to make an impression should be so outfitted. These little touches will certainly do your house a world of good.

BAIR'S 'MOUSE' GAG!

Smart Showmanship Features Advertising of This Unique Short Subject in Liverpool!

SHOWMEN, it has been said, lead the world in advertising. They perhaps feel the public pulse more closely and more keenly than the regular advertising men. Certainly, it has been proven that E. E. Bair, of the State and American Theatres, in East Liverpool, Ohio, knows what the public will go for in the line of advertising.

His recent ads on Mickey Mouse were an example of this. It has long been known to Club members that "E. E.," as he is more intimately known, places a great deal of importance on his short subjects. Hence, with Mickey Mouse a big favorite, he plugs it big. And he plugs it over the feature picture if he thinks it deserves it!

This was done when he played "Mickey's Orphans" in conjunction with "Union Depot." But here he was confronted with a problem. He felt that his feature film was a knockout, too. So he finally hit upon a solution and decided he would announce an exceptional "Union Depot Program," but head off his ads with a Mickey Mouse catchline.

It proved a sensation! When readers opened the paper the first thing their eyes caught was the line: "WHAT! NO MICKEY MOUSE?" And then underneath: "Yes, Sir! There Is, and One of the Best Mr. Disney Ever Made. The Title Is 'Mickey's Orphans.' Mickey Mouse Is One of the Highlights on the Exceptional 'Union Depot Program.'" The rest of the shorts were plugged in a small box.

But Bair is not content with passing along just these catchlines to his fellow showmen. He has another angle that we believe will prove of great value to showmen having a spot for it.

The local newspaper runs a classified column section in which they offer bargains in exchanges, etc. Bair went to them with a plan on how to get more advertising, and you can bet the ad department lent a sympathetic ear. He suggested a "White Elephant" stunt, whereby the newspaper would run a series of small ads, and a large ad on a new idea called "White Elephant." Its purpose was to have the ladies advertise in the newspaper whatever white elephants they had around the house, say in the form of an old icebox replaced by a Frigidaire, and for which they no longer had any use; old beds, books, etc.

In order to stimulate interest in the new plan, Bair offered the classified department a number of tickets, to be distributed to readers of the paper who could find various "White Elephant" items scattered in the classified columns.

Here is a bit of copy on the stunt:

HOW TO WIN THEM

"What is a 'White Elephant'? You have heard this expression a lot of times. It is sometimes different, of course! The sooner you find out, the better chance you have of obtaining tickets. Scattered among the Classified 'Want Ads' you will find several small ads about 'White Elephants.' Find these ads and paste on a piece of paper. When these ads are pasted together, they form a complete story about 'White Elephants.' Also name and describe at least one 'White Elephant' you have about the house! Mail or bring to the Want Ad Department of the 'Review.' The fortunate names will appear on the Want Ad Pages each day scattered among the Want Ads. After you see your name listed call at the Want Ad Department of the 'Review' and get your tickets."

The rest of the copy plugged the theatre and the stunt. Here is an idea? Can you use it? It looks like a good bet for enterprising showmen.

Oh, yes, there's another point. Our friend Bair would like the Round Tablers to give him a little idea or a suggestion on a stunt he is planning. His one-sheet posters are pasted along the highways. He now wants to try a new idea and place on them:

There's a Beaten Track
STATE
—It's the Pictures

The top part is to be done in red. He believes it will prove an effective highway sign. What do you think? If you have anything to say on the subject or any suggestion to offer, why not drop him a line at East Liverpool and we are sure he'll be more than glad to hear from you. Right, "E. E."?

WALTER MORRIS AND HIS CREW VERY BUSY DOWN IN CHARLOTTE

News concerning Round Tabler Walter Morris comes from below the Mason-Dixon Line these days—down in Charlotte, N. C., where he manages the New Broadway Theatre. His fellow members will recall that he went there from the Warner division in Ohio, and since his arrival he and his associates have been as busy as the proverbial one-armed paper hanger.

We would like to call attention by way of the accompanying illustration to a sort of a standardized two-style front that he has worked out for two classes of attractions. The one on "Westward Passage" you will note, is the more conservative and was re-adapted from "Rich Are Always With Us." The other, on the more sensational "Blonde Captive," had a frame covered with deep green tropical cloth, which matched perfectly with the moss. By using the stationary backs he builds the fronts in small sections of heads, stills, photos, etc.. mounting them on the back and thus effects considerable economy in construction.

Among recent stunts employed by Morris was a novelty card gag on "Is My Face Red?" which netted him a lot of word-of-mouth advertising. One of the ushers, dressed in a Tuxedo, straw hat and his face painted red, passed through the business section five days prior to opening. He carried a large waste basket bearing a card reading, "Is My Face Red?" Another small card on his back bore the same copy. To every passerby he gave one of a set of five cards, one side of which bore burlesque carrying instructions for the reader to present a complete set at the box office and receive in return a guest ticket to the picture. The key card was of course controlled. One thousand of each card was printed.

As a climax to the Warner National Exhibit, in force at company exchanges all over the country during the latter part of August, Morris is staging the First Southern Premiere in Charlotte for the new season and bids fair to steal the occasion. "Doctor X" is the feature and a big campaign is in the offing. We'll be looking for complete details and will pass them along as soon as word arrives.

Midwesco Prize Winners

In the "Managers' Popularity" contest held by the Fox Midwesco division this summer, Elmer C. Rhoden, division manager, recently announced the winners.

The grand prize of a silver loving cup and a $50 check was won by Gerald Baker, of Murphysboro, Ill. Ralph Bartlett, of Benton, Ill., was awarded second district prize of $25. Other awards included $50 to Jay Wooten, Dodge City, Kas.; $25 to C. H. Zile, Newton, Kas.; $50 to Tom Steele, Otawa, Kas.; $25 to C. A. Steward, Marysville, Kas.; $50 to Steve Souttar, Boonville, Mo.; $25 to H. H. Siverd, Carthage, Mo.; $50 to Morrill Moore, Rockhill, Kansas City, and $25 to George Hunter, Warwick, Kansas City.

The division was diveded into five zones and awards were made on the basis of greatest increase of attendance during the week of the contest over the average take of the previous five weeks.

COMPTON D. JARRETT is the manager of the Paramount Theatre in La Crosse, Kansas, and we're taking this opportunity to acknowledge his application for membership in this Club. Jarrett has been following this department's activities for some time and now signifies his intention of doing his share to help the good work along. We're mighty glad to have him with us and hope he'll back up his application with reports from time to time on what's going on in showbusiness at the Paramount.

Wear Your Club Pin! ! !

BENJ. F. SMART is the assistant manager of the Rialto Theatre down South in Danville, Va., and it is our pleasure to welcome him to the ranks of the many assistant managers already enrolled in the Round Table Club. Ever since this organization was started we've had occasion to keep an eye on assistant manager-members who have diligently followed the many excellent suggestions sent this department by expert showmen in all sections of this country and have watched them climb to more important posts. We're wishing Smart the same sort of luck.

Wear Your Club Pin! ! !

P. H. MATTNER hails from 'way out West in the city of Fullerton, Calif., and his hand is also outstretched in greeting to all his fellow showmen in this great army of managers. Soon we'll be hearing how Mattner operates his house and as to what methods he employs to boost box office trade. Let the rest of the gang know what you're doing, P. H., for you may rest assured they will be glad to hear from you through the medium of this department.

Wear Your Club Pin! ! !

BYRON COOPER hails from 'way down South in Palatka, Fla., where he manages the Howell Theatre, one of the well known Sparks circuit throughout the state. The same cordial Club welcome is also due this new member from headquarters and the host of fellow showmen in this large organization and we want him to know that we're glad to list him among future contributors to this department. Come through, Coop', and let the rest of this outfit know what you are doing to pep up the old box office. We'll be awaiting your next communication.

Wear Your Club Pin! ! !

A. M. SAMUELS is the skipper of the Fox-Alcazar Theatre out in Great Falls, Mont. His application for membership in the Round Table Club is also at hand and we and his many fellow showmen extend him a most cordial welcome. Samuels is another man who has been following Club pages with interest for a long time and he, too, now wishes to help the good work along. We'll be mighty glad to hear from him about what he's doing to put the Alcazar on the theatre map. Shoot along an account of that last stunt you used, Samuels, so we can pass the word along to your brother showmen.

Wear Your Club Pin! ! !

E. SCHULMAN manages the Crescent Theatre in our own Metropolitan area at Astoria, Long Island, N. Y., and we're glad to list his name among the new applicants for membership in this ever-growing group of theatre managers. Like other neighborhoods in Greater New York, managers over in Astoria are aware that exploitation is not yet one of the lost arts, and they go out and do work that brings home the bacon. We will look forward to hearing what Schulman is doing at the Crescent.

EARLE HENDREN has charge of the Princess and Palace Theatres down in Greenville, Tenn., and he's still another new member ready to shake the hands of his recently acquired showman-friends in this big army of managers. He, also, has found Club pages interesting in the past and now wants to do his share toward making this department one of the livest things of its kind in existence. Okay, Earle, and we'll be awaiting your next communication. Shoot along your ideas on what it takes to bring 'em back alive these days.

Wear Your Club Pin! ! !

Q. K. FRAZIER is the manager of the America Theatre out in Sterling, Colo., and we're taking this opportunity to make him acquainted with his fellow showmen in this organization. A cordial welcome is also extended this new member from the West and we hope he'll become an active member of his Club. His old and new-found friends will be interested to know what methods he's using to put his house over the top.

Wear Your Club Pin! ! !

ANDRE F. DELVIGNE is located over in Belgium where he holds down the job of chief engineer of the M-G-M Belgium chain, with headquarters at Brussels. His application is another indication of the far-reaching activities of this organization and we're mighty glad to welcome Mons. Delvigne to this great army of showmen. We hope he'll find time to let us hear from him from time to time.

Wear Your Club Pin! ! !

ELIE J. SAUL'S application for membership came in the same mail as that of Andre Delvigne's and Saul is also a member of the M-G-M organization over in Belgium. He manages the Queen's Hall Theatre in Brussels and it will be very interesting to every one in the Round Table Club, we feel sure, to get a line on what brand of showmanship is used in his city to sell motion pictures. Saul's another recruit in the Foreign Legion of this showman's army and we want him to know that he's a welcome addition to the ranks. We'll be awaiting his next letter.

WILLARD GABHART is another from the Blue Grass to become a member of the Round Table Club and he's the manager of the Opera House down in Harrodsburg, Ky. With receipt of his application the already large Kentucky contingent is stepped up another notch and we want this new member of our Club to know that we're mighty glad to have him with us. All he'll have to do now to keep in good standing is to shoot along some news now and then about what's going on in showbusiness down his way. We'll be keeping an eye on Gabhart.

AL COOPER hails from out in Youngstown, Ohio, where he manages the Hippodrome Theatre. His town's name is synonomous with showbusiness and a lot of valuable contributions came to this department in the past from other local Club members, so we'll be counting on Cooper to help keep up the high standard. Let your fellow Round Tablers know about the last stunt you employed to boost box office trade, Coop', and you can do that by passing along the information to headquarters.

LAWRENCE RIDINGTON is located down in Conshohocken, Pa., where he operates the Riant Theatre, a Novelty Amusement Company house. A cordial greeting is also extended this new member of our organization and we want him to know that we'll soon be looking for word of what he's doing these days to boost the good old box office. What was that last stunt you used, Lawrence, to fill the house? Let the rest of the fellows in on it.

LE ROY KENNETH has charge of the Opera House over in Barre, Vt., and we also have his application for membership at hand. One of his programs here before our eyes discloses that Kenneth is using that medium for a variety of purposes. The front page carries name of theatre and three small ads from local merchants; it's also remembered, and we know you'll get what that is for. The second page carries more small ads and notice of a treasure hunt; the third, Monday and Tuesday's program and more ads; the next, more ads and house copy; the next, more ads, and Wednesday and Thursday's program, and three others likewise made up of ads, program and institutional copy. There's no doubt about it being self-supporting. Let's hear more from you, Kenneth.

San Francisco Golden Gate

Forty minutes of magic with Carter the Great is this week's attraction at the Golden Gate and the homecoming of this magician is little short of an ovation. The illusion bill of fare is varied, with much of it new. An Egyptian mummy hand answers everything and springs into Carter's hand from a pane of glass which bridges two chairs. Borrowing a few rings, the magician chops them up before witnesses, places the mass in a popgun and all of the rings but one are found in a small box inside several other boxes and all are intact. Going down the aisle Carter offers the audience a variety of drinks, pouring beverages of different colors from a bottle. When he breaks the bottle a guinea pig jumps out; tied to the neck of the rodent is the missing ring. Then by way of variety he supervises the "sawing of a woman in half."

Bert Nagle and Girls
New York Palace

Five girls open with a doll tap dance followed by a young lady whose contortion bit is well received. After a clever toe tap dance offering by a sixth girl, Nagle and another of the group, in cat outfits, portray a comical alley-cat fight. Nagle's entertaining antics as a tomcat proved hilariously funny. In the finale Bert dives through a hoop for a fast finish.—H. P.

Rexola Brothers
Detroit Hollywood

Roller skating, fancy and acrobatic with a little straight tumbling on the side, is the meat of this act. Both lads are young and probably haven't been in the business long enough to develop anything sensational, but what they do seems to promise a bright future.

Raymon and Gregory
New Orleans Orpheum

These two young men manage to get music out of everything from a tire pump to a rubber glove. They end up with a violin-guitar combination that is good, and bring out a vacuum cleaner which does "Sweet Mystery of Life."

Paul Jones
San Francisco Warfield

This chap has a skating act and cuts a lot of fancy figures. Comedy skating is his forte, however, and he gets a lot of laughs with his simulated awkwardness.

Owners Coming to Realize False Economy of Permitting Costly Instruments to Deteriorate from Non-Usage

by LLOYD HILL (WILD OSCAR)
Organist, Loew's Circuit, New York

Signs that many organists will return to the console before winter are unmistakable Two factors in this forward step are these: A thousand theatres, it is estimated, have reopened their doors since August; more and more exhibitors are coming to recognize the false economy that has permitted the pipe organ, a large investment, to lie idle and deteriorate when a few dollars would have maintained them in satisfactory operating condition.

If the theatre operator turned to the console as the first place to be vacated when the talking picture proved itself and later when the economic shoe began to pinch, the organist had himself to blame, in many instances. If the owner or manager curtly brushed from his thoughts the dollars and cents investment in the instrument and crossed off the organ music as a non-essential of the program, it was largely because the organist himself had permitted him to develop that belief.

Failed to See Possibilities

Amazing was the number of organists who, even in the face of approaching loss of their jobs, failed to conceive the possibilities of their instruments and talents as an integral part of the program. Many of them had been receiving comfortable salary checks without making their part of the entertainment stand out. To these, whose minds had become as lusterless as their work, the achievements of other organists who were making reputations for themselves and their theatres were either a mystery or a stroke of luck. Yet analysis and experience would show that the one certain road to success in the organist fraternity has been effort and originality.

While showmanship is an important factor in the worth of any performer, in no field does the individual case present its particular problems more forcibly than in the instance of the organist in determination of that showmansip. Appearance, person-

Ayres, Rene and Co. (4)
New York Roxy

Charlotte Ayres, M. Rene, Jack Martin and B. Rasch presented the most spectacular adagio dancing ever witnessed in the Roxy by this reporter. The entire routine is done on a darkened stage with a jet black background. Their forms are visible due to the use of a radium-effect dye on their clothing and wigs. One of the company is obviously garbed in jet black, and is discernible at only rare intervals. When Miss Ayres is tossed and apparently balances or floats through the air, it is this invisible member who holds her.—E. D.

John and Edna Torrence
New York Paramount

This pair of dancers opens with a graceful unison acrobatic waltz set to a group of old-time waltz hits, the dance featuring grace and ability. Later in the show, these two offer a very effective novelty dance atop a large drum, the setting made picturesque by the entire stage unit, forming a drum corps. It's a class act that pleases.—H. P.

Tom Patricola (6)
New York Palace

Here is a comedy and dance act that is chockful of entertainment, with Patricola making the customers laugh, while the Wheeler Twins, Louise and Andy Carr and Barbarina, offer specialty, tap and acrobatic dancing, respectively, each in turn earning a nice reception.—H. P.

Karavaieff
New York Roxy

The famous Russian dancer is worked into the show in a skillful manner and gets a good reception from the audience for his artistic Russian tap routine. In the many years this chap has been playing de luxe theatres this reviewer has always seen him "click" with any audience.—E. D.

Maurine and Norva
San Francisco Warfield

This pair offers a ballroom dance in a manner quite out of the ordinary. It is decidedly pleasing and is not just another dance.

Nice, Florio and Lubow
Baltimore Century

Two men and a girl present a general mixup routine of dancing including comedy falls, comic acrobatic antics and a "drunk" dance by the two men, with the girl joining and finishing with the three in acrobatics.

Organists Return As Houses Reopen

ality, sense of humor (or lack of it), talent aside from organ-playing—all are characteristics which should determine just what style of showmanship an organist should utilize in making himself most indispensable. Showmanship is not a gift from Heaven; it can be developed. Of course the prerequisite is playing ability. There are those who do not possess that asset, and among them may be found the loudest declaimers that their more successfull brothers are "over-rated." Nevertheless, there are many competent organists who found themselves without jobs because of the incompetents. And the competent players have problems enough.

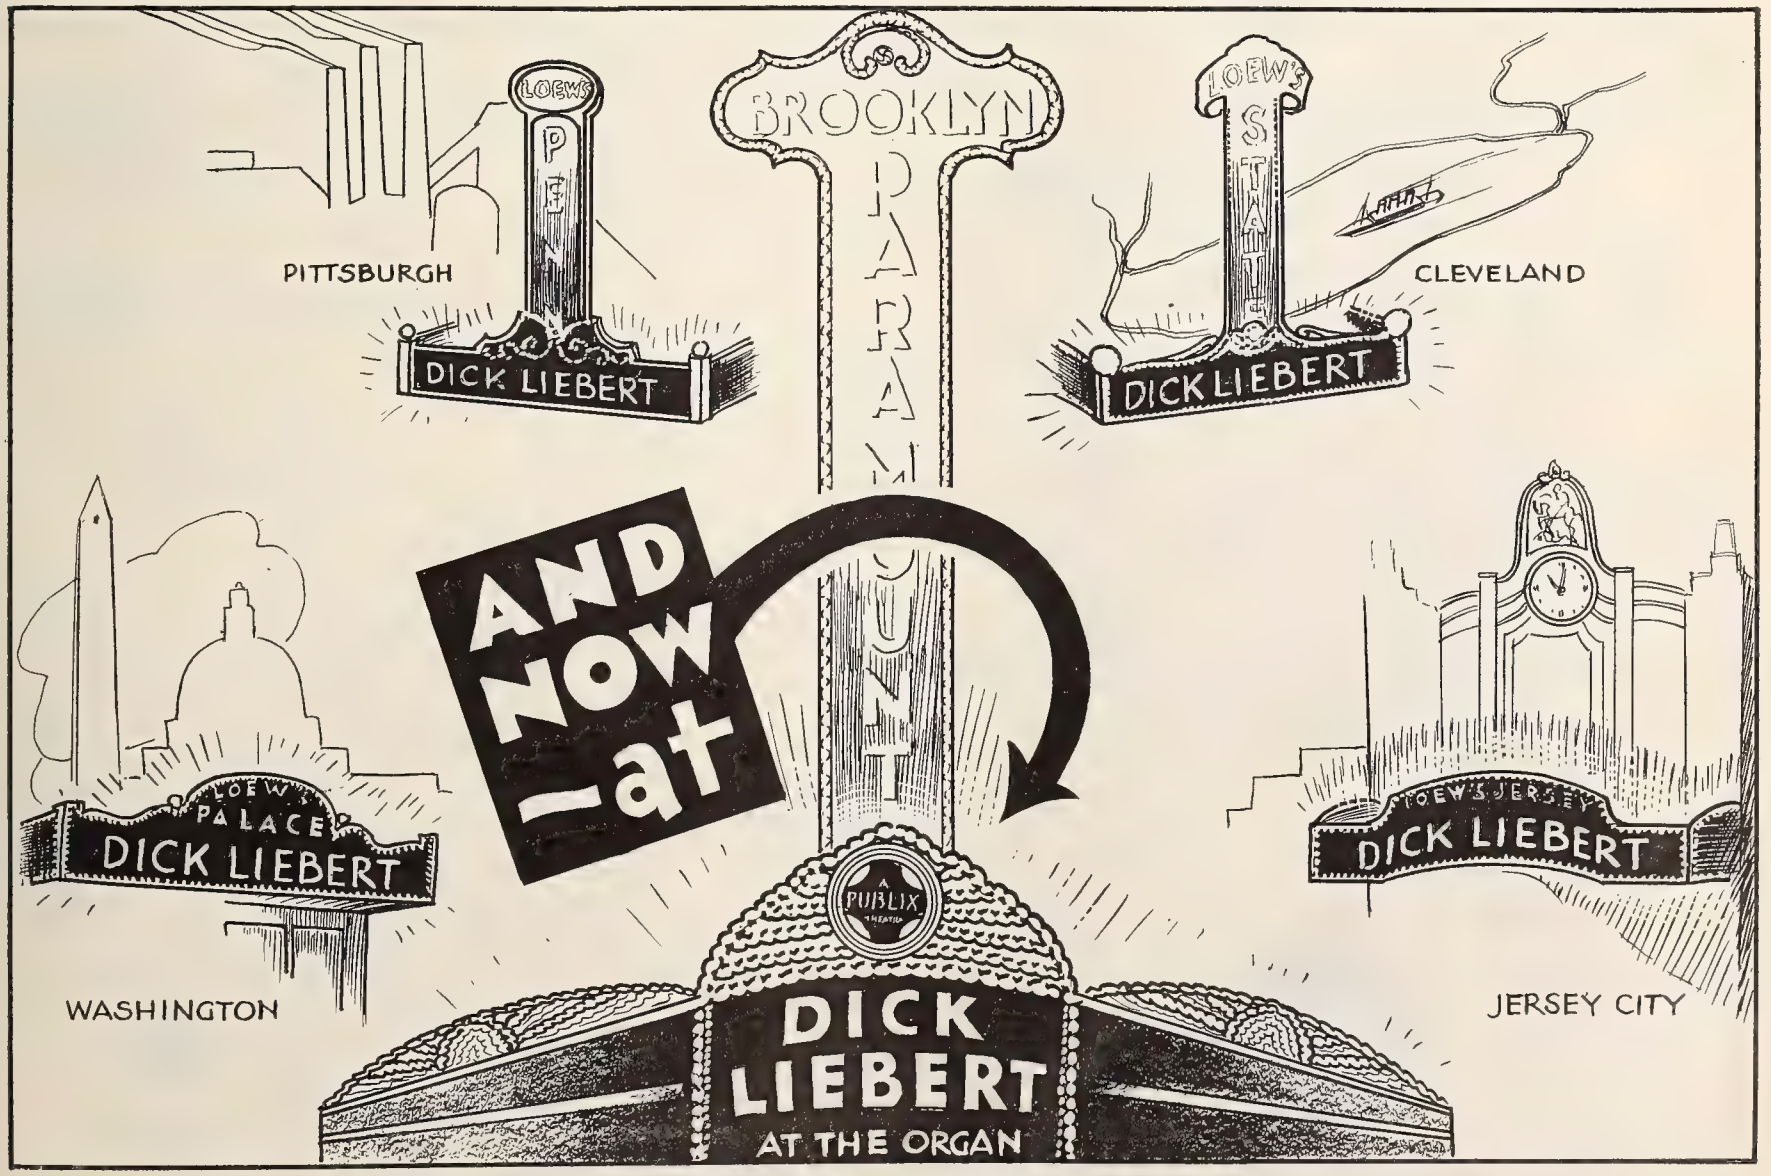
Different localities and different theatres present questions peculiar to themselves; questions which must be answered by the musician himself. One audience prefers community singing; another will not respond. This audience desires good music; that one likes jazz. Each want must be satisfied, though unquestionably community singing is the most universally satisfactory policy.

If the given community does not go in for community song, then the organist has a situation that calls for ingenuity, an opportunity really to "sell" the instrument. Work out attractive arrangements of everything. Pay meticulous attention to registration. Study the playing of those organists on the radio who are masters of interpreting the least attractive numbers so that they float from the loudspeakers as gems of music. Get the utmost out of the instrument. Utilize the traps effects—orchestral bells, xylophone, tympano. Embellish the arrangements and augment the harmony of numbers.

In situations where the audience refuses to sing it may well be that the organist himself is the cause. His style of playing may be anything but conducive to community singing. It is essential that the melody predominate, that a steady and distinct rhythm be maintained. No little degree of response depends upon proper phrasing of the melody to fit the words. There must not be interference with these three essentials, for example, in changing registration, turning music, or signaling the operator.

Nothing is sadder than a "gag" which does not get over, and usually it depends upon the "gagster" as to whether it does get over. Trying to be a comedian when not naturally one is only sad at best. If not adept at telling "gags," take no chances; instead, use slides and only tried and true humorisms.



Effect slides, properly used, are effective. Attractive and varied lighting can be worked out with the cooperation of the projectionists and stagehands.

Lloyd Hill (Wild Oscar), now 32 and an organist since he was 15, possesses a background which permits him to speak authoritatively on his subject. In 1926, Mr. Hill introduced the use of the microphone in the motion picture theatre.

Sees Return of Organist To First-Run Theatres

In line with the discontinuance by first-run houses of retrenchment policies, and their return to normal operating schedules, numerous organists have been recalled from a temporary retirement, in the opinion of H. A. Rosenberg, associated with Maurice Workstel in Standard Studios, New York. The company supplies novelty material designed to increase the value of the organist's program.

Mr. Rosenberg pointed out that first-run houses throughout the country are seeking to support the feature motion picture attraction with suitable entertainment matematerial, and organ interest is growing.

NOVELTY

Lewis Mack & Co. (4)

New York Triboro

Mack, a young red-headed "mug" comedian, and his company of two comely girls and a handsome man offer a comedy skit that incorporates songs, dances and clever comedy situations.

The turn opens to an attractive black and white scene of New York harbor in which Mack, as a U. S. customs inspector, puts over a lot of laughable business, with the assistance of the rest of his company. Then, in a good voice, he sings the novelty song, "Who's Your Little Whozis," to the attractive Miss Frances Logan, who favors, on the second chorus, with a snappily done rhythm tap routine. The scene shifts to an "airport" scene, the company carrying on comical business until the finish.

The entire act is received very well, and at the second curtain call Mack introduces his cast, namely: Johnny Haynes, Frances Logan and Alice Frost, and as encore they give a good rendition of "My Hero," from the "Chocolate Soldier."—E. D.

Fred Sanborn

Detroit Michigan

Abbreviated trousers, an oversize coat, a somber black derby, eloquent, bushy eyebrows and the general appearance of a born butler enable Sanborn to draw a round of laughs with his entrance. Assisted by a stooge magician and a xylophone from which he extracts tunes, bananas, eggs, marshmellows and pleasing nonsense, he gives the audience a merry time.

Novello Brothers

Baltimore Hippodrome

These two still retain essentially their usual routine but have enlarged and perfected the violin playing acrobatics and the 'bird" whistling and love making so that they register many laughs and get good applause.

DANCERS

Mitzi Mayfair

Detroit Michigan

This former Follies star has a full stock of audience winning points, including youth, pulchritude, personality and dancing abilty. She is scarcely 17, and as vivacious as a modern girl of that age is expected to be. The apparent facility which characterizes her acrobatic dancing suggests years of intense training.

Black Pearls (3)

New York Roxy

These talented colored boys prove themselves "dancing fools" in their routines of tap and challenge dancing. Their act is fast, snappily done and short, and drew heavy applause.—E. D.

Four Queens

Baltimore Hippodrome

These four attractive girls present a fast moving tap routine. They go through their initial steps in unison and then for encore do solo steps.

Mr. Exhibitor . . .

Be sure to read the story by "Wild Oscar" appearing on page 78 of this issue. . . . There's plenty of truth in this popular organist's discussion and it surely would be to the advantage of every exhibitor to read what he has to say. . . . Knowing possibly more organists and most of them even better than the writer of that fine article, I do want to say that he sure hit the proverbial nail on the head. . . .

REVIEWS OF ACTS FOR PICTURE THEATRES

SINGERS

Joseph Griffin
New York Roxy

Mr. Griffin, who is to be permanently featured as tenor soloist, continues to please the audience with his gorgeous voice. In the current presentation Griffin appears in two of the scenes, singing the introductory song for each, and leading the Roxy Singing Ensemble in both of them. Griffin possesses a certain appeal to the audience, besides his beautiful singing, that bids fair to make him an outstanding attraction and a popular favorite.—E. D.

Radio Rogues (3)
New York Palace

Three talented young men offer 12 minutes of clever radio mimicry, their subjects being famous personalities of the air. Their satirical twisting of theme songs proves very funny, while the impersonation of "Amos 'n' Andy" by James Hollywood earns him a nice hand. Ed Bartell and Henry Tailor, the other two, round out an act that will please any audience.—H. P.

Benay Venuta
San Francisco Warfield

This radio star pleases with her good looks and delightful voice, offering several selections heard frequently over the air.

Charles King
New York Palace

Assisted by Marion Chase at the piano, King opens with "I'm Yours for Tonight" and "The Lady I Love." Miss Chase plays an old-song medley consisting of "Just A-wearyin' for You," "Alexander's Ragtime Band" and "Hold My Hand," playing well and getting a good applause. King, singing several hits from some of his pictures including "Singin' in the Rain," "You Were Meant for Me" and "Broadway Melody," wins applause.—H. P.

Beehee Rubyatte Company (6)

This colorful troupe of acrobatic "pirates" draws heavy applause for their skillful tumbling and pyramid building. Showmanship and ability to entertain are the outstanding qualities of the act, and though they are on for at least fifteen minutes, their appearance is all too short.—E. D.

Pasquali Brothers (3)
Denver Denver

Three huskies throw each other about with abandon and grace. They can do a run, flip flop and land on the other's shoulders. They keep the action going rapidly right to the end.

COMEDY

Archer and Jackson
New York Triboro

The two men make up in comedy what they lack in novelty. The act opens with a speech by Jackson, supposedly spoken for the management, and listened to attentively until Lew Archer makes his appearance. Archer is a "natural" as a comedian, and his bashful boy characterization is good for lusty laughter throughout the act. The boys not only have an act full of running laughter, but surprise with vocal harmonizing that is good for fine applause.—E. D.

STAGE ATTRACTIONS

ORGAN SOLOS

MR. AND MRS. JESSE CRAWFORD (New York Paramount) offer this week an organ recital entitled "Echoes of the Gay Nineties," Jesse opening with "East Side West Side," followed by alternate vocal choruses by Richard Dennis, tenor, and Sylvia Miller, soprano, who respectively sang "Daisy Daisy" and "On a Sunday Afternoon." After this Mrs. Crawford solos with "Lazy Moon." Dennis takes the chorus of "I Love You As I Never Loved Before," answered by Miss Miller, who sings "My Sweetheart's the Man in the Moon." The Crawfords then follow with a duet of Chas. K. Harris' immortal "After the Ball," the two voices joining for the finale.

DICK LIEBERT (Brooklyn Paramount) whose intimate manner of talking and whose good showmanship are rapidly making him the popular attraction at this house, continues to please with another of his organ novelties. This week Dick offered as his opening selection "In the Palm of Your Hand," followed by "Shanty Town," a laughable gag about a church announcement, "Somebody Loves You" and "Love Me Tonight." Just before the closing number, Liebert announced the popular Elsie Thompson, who had just returned after an illness. Miss Thompson got a good hand at her appearance at the twin console, but the song, "Love Me Tonight," of which she sang a chorus, seemed unfitted for her type of singing, though she gained a fairly good reception.

ARTHUR MARTEL (Boston Metropolitan) tied up famous international, national and local men in his organ novelty entitled "Songs of Famous Men." The program was introduced with special lyrics explanatory of songs best fitted to each character. These were mostly popular numbers, but they were enhanced and built into a thoroughly enjoyable presentation by the use of specially written lyrics which, judging from the laughs and favorable applause, proved highly entertaining. Martel's masterful handling of the organ and the novelty of the solo easily proved why he is so popular in this house.

MR. AND MRS. HERBIE (Buffalo at Buffalo) again got a great hand with the double consoles, the Mrs. presiding at an organ on the stage. Both are good entertainers and showman, and Mrs. Herbie's personal attractiveness and costuming add to the effect. This week's sketch, "In Cuba," introduced "When Yuba Played the Tuba," "The Peanut Vendor" and "La Paloma," with solo by Mrs. Herbie on the second number and adroit duet work on the others.

JOHN HAMMOND (Brooklyn Strand) recently presented a well-chosen group of songs. Hammond continues to play his solos from his movable stage console. This week he opens with an oral introductory to the first number, "Hearts at Ease," which he played more in a concert style than for singing. His next number was "Kitten on the Keys," played in varied and pleasing combinations. Following this he introduced Fred Marrith, "the singing barrister."

TED MEYN (Jersey City, Jersey) is back at the largest de luxe house in the state, and what an opening! For the entire week before his opening his trailer received hearty applause at every show. And at the first show his appearing in person drew tremendous applause which just about broke up the popular organist's routine. After the applause subsided, Ted surpri ed the audience by singing a "glad to be back" number with special lyrics. The audience joined heartily in the singing of "Lullaby of the Leaves," "Just Couldn't Say Goodbye," a whistling chorus to "Turkey in the Straw," an exceptionally clever special, made up with 26 titles to popular songs played to the tune of "Human Thing To Do," two or three choruses of "Minnie the Moocher," with Ted singing the "hi-de-hi's." Ted closed the solo with "Road to Mandalay."

RUSSELL BICE (Detroit RKO Downtown) rambles through "Three Rooms and Bath," picking up numbers en route. In the attic he finds "A Million Dollar Baby from the Five and Ten." In other rooms he finds "The Night When Love Was Born," "I'm Humming to Myself," "Dinah" and "Paradise." The audience sang everything.

EGON DOUGHERTY (New York Triboro) opened his solo with a speech, referring to requests for selections from "The Student Prince," with which he followed. For his popular selections, for the audience to sing, Dougherty gave them "Lullaby of the Leaves," "Holding My Honey's Hand" and "Is I in Love, I Is." His closing number was "Chloe," with effects that lent class to the number, and wholehearted applause.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1931, unless otherwise specified.

PHANTOM PRESIDENT' HAS ALL THE ELEMENTS OF A HIT

Cohan Looks Good; Durante A Riot

"THE PHANTOM PRESIDENT"
Paramount

Direction .....Norman Taurog
From Story by.....George F. Worts
Screen Play.....Walter DeLeon, Harlan Thompson
Music and Lyrics.....Richard Rodgers, Lorenz Hart
Photography .....David Abel
Cast: George M. Cohan, Claudette Colbert, Jimmy Durante, George Barbier, Sidney Toler, Louise Mackintosh, Jamieson Thomas and Julius McVicker.

Here is a natural for any ailing box-office, provided you are enough of a showman to go out and SELL those fireside sitters who have been sitting you almost out of the business. Shades of P. T. Barnum and ballyhoo, of the razzle-dazzle and the old medicine show, what an exploiting gem this baby is! It's red hot for showmen because of its timeliness, of its great god, HOOEY; because of George M. Cohan and Jimmy Durante; because its an out-and-out, down-in-the-belly, pie-slinging, kick-in-the-pants laugh-getter.

And about the entertainment.

If you have a laughing audience, then put out the fire lines. If those ticket-buyers go for almost all the tricks that have ever made any comedy funny, then you are in for a run. For they have used everything to bring on the laughs, brushed them up, put them in a new dress and have served them on a silver platter. You have Jimmy Durante at his funniest.

You have situations that start a chuckle even before they begin to unravel.

The story is right up to the minute. It concerns politics; presidential nominations and elections. It shows the maneuvering of a political clique that out-maneuvers any and all of those fast-thinking politicians. They elect a president through the campaigning of a phantom, a dead ringer for the bird who is actually running. The "phantom" dances, sings and gags his way into a nomination and, later, an election, while old sour face sits at home, puzzled at everything that is going on around him.

You will like George M. Cohan even more than you thought you would like him in pictures. He has a picture appeal unlike any we have ever seen. His voice is swell and his personality even better than his stage portrayals. Jimmy Durante has never been better; has never had so much to do; as a matter of fact, he almost has too much to do in this one. Claudette Colbert looks and acts the part in the best of fashion. The rest of the cast are all good.

Norman Taurog did an excellent job on the direction. The yarn was no pushover and required just what Taurog had to give.

The lyrics and music of Rodgers and Hart add another feather to their already befeathered caps.

MOTION PICTURE DAILY

"Phantom President"

(Paramount)

Jimmy Durante wins by a schnozzle in "The Phantom President" race between the comedian and George M. Cohan for top acting honors. Durante carries the picture with his personality and his brand of humor. Cohan gives a grand performance. Claudette Colbert is pleasing as the heroine and what little she has to do is handled with finesse. The preview show was held at the Astor yesterday morning.

It is a comedy-drama with comedy characters is hurdled, it gathers momentum for a bang-up finish. There is a charming fugue pervading with other lilting tunes by Rodgers and Hart interspersed.

The story concerns a foursome fostering T. K. Blair for the presidency of the United States. They find he has no personality for the campaign and are stymied until Peter Varney, Blair's double, and his partner Durante, enter the picture with their medicine show. Varney is sold the idea by "The Big Four" to impersonate his prototype for the presidential campaign and after the election bow out.

Varney is so successful in portraying the original candidate that for a time he even deludes Miss Colbert, Blair's fiancee, in believing that her future husband had changed to suit her ideas. Prior to the election, the heroine learns the truth about the deception and Varney is about to reveal the fraud over the radio when Miss Colbert persuades him not to go through with it.

Believing that he is being double-crossed, Blair plans to get rid of the impostor after the election. With the aid of Schnozzola, Varney is elected with flying colors and Miss Colbert, having taken the "personality" man se-

Blair, instead of her new lover, sent to the isolated island for safe keeping.

Cohan has the opportunity to do his song and dance act as the medicine show performer, but it is Durante who masters the comedy situations.

Supporting the headliners are George Barbier, Sidney Toler, Louis Mackintosh, Jameson Thomas and Julius McVicker, all of whom do creditable work. Norman Taurog adds another spoke to his wheel of successes with "The Phantom President."

ORNSTEIN

THE Film DAILY

"The Phantom President"

Paramount has a sure-fire candidate for a quick and heavy b. o. cleanup in this political satire. It's ace entertainment any time and anywhere. George M. Cohan and Jimmy Durante are the whole show—not forgetting shrewd direction by Norman Taurog, clever photography by David Abel and a swell semi-musical comedy book. Cohan, playing a dual role in fine style, carries the human interest, giving the story a nice touch of sentiment, and does a couple of new routines in fine waving. Durante, as his comedy side-kick, panics 'em as he never panicked 'em before. Claudette Colbert is part of the love interest. It's a picture that moves all the time, mostly with a rhythmic swing that is pleasantly different. It should be a ... over. GILLETT

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Here's a load of good old hokum; just a lot of entertainment, without any rhyme or reason, other than to produce continuous laughter. It's like an old-fashioned vaudeville show. In fact, it takes Peter Varney, an old-time medicine show man, and elects him president of the United States.

It is timely, topical and the kind of a picture that during the next couple of months, while the presidential campaign is gripping the interest of the nation, should enable exhibitors to reap a harvest.

Paramount reached deep into the bag of tricks of a kind of motion picture production that is dead but never will be forgotten, the good old silents, and has thrown into this feature the things that made them laugh in other days. It has the farcical comedy of an old-time burlesque show, some of the thrills of a circus, and a lot of that "surprise" that seemed to pass out of existence with the deaths of the old-fashioned carnival and medicine show.

It is alive with those things that smart showmanship can sell. If you can get over the idea that this picture is as big as the national campaign, as timely as the election and as funny as a politician's promises, you have the whole thing in a nutshell.

This kind of fun should be readily appreciated on Broadway as well as on Main Street. As it's a burlesque, burlesque your advertising, all the while guaranteeing your patrons downright good entertainment.

ACE ENTERTAINMENT WITH COHAN, DURANTE AND TIMELY ANGLE MAKING IT A BOX-OFFICE NATURAL.

This is an in-the-bag affair on three counts in particular: (1) it is all-around swell entertainment plus a timely story which will not be any the less enjoyable even after election, (2) the admirable dual performance of George M. Cohan and the knockout comedy by Jimmy Durante (3) the clever conception and effective directorial handling of the semi-musical comedy background.

Besides comedy and timeliness, you have unusual name to sell in the person of Geor M. Cohan. Because he has confined his acti ties to the stage and the bigger cities, he almost a legendary figure with the country large. But for your own information, Jimm Durante practically steals the picture. Neve before has he been as ludicrous. Yet, thoug Cohan and Durante predominate, they are n the whole show.

Cohan plays a dual role—his own as a glib tongued medicine showman, whom the machin has picked to substitute for the nonentity it has chosen to run for president, and the actual candidate.

The picture can be sold to any kind of audiences from the tiniest children up to the oldest adults. There's plenty of fun for both men and women and there isn't a risque line or sequence in it.—McCARTHY, Hollywood.

Vol. 109, No. 2 — October 8, 1932

THE PART NOT THE EGO

THERE is an actor in the motion pictures and his name is John Barrymore. This will be in the nature of news, we regret to state, to a considerable proportion of the production community and sundry other sectors of the industry.

Unhappily and ridiculously, it is because Mr. Barrymore is so much an actor, so completely the artist, so conscientiously engaged in doing his work and otherwise attending to his own business, with so little concern for what is known as "playing the game" in Hollywood, that he is being subjected to the cooling indifference and negative attitude of what may be termed the movie mind—using the word "movie" in contradistinction to the term motion picture.

Mr. Barrymore's performance in the current triumph of "A Bill of Divorcement" gives special occasion to this utterance. In that production we observe Mr. Barrymore engaged not at all in being John Barrymore but in playing completely and skillfully the part in which he is cast. His art does not consist, therefore, in the color of his hair, his personal mannerisms or any of the typical posturings and posings and struttings which all too often go with the stardom which insists on being itself and not the part.

In another manner of putting it Mr. Barrymore does the job he was employed for, and in that job serves the customers and consumers of the entertainment offered. The principle makes him a great actor, one of the few that the screen has seen. An application of the same general principle more broadly in production would perhaps also result in some great pictures.

SAYS MR. SMITH

IN his declaration of provocations and principles in the first issue of The New Outlook, Mr. Alfred Emanuel Smith, editor, asserts among other reasons for this monthly magazine of political survey the necessity for "some form of deliberate and mature expression." He remarks on the limitations of the spoken word, the radio, the press and the screen. "The newsreel picture is seen by only a limited group for a few days. Although it has value, it passes quickly off the public stage and is as quickly forgotten. . . ."

Mr. Smith's evaluation of the newsreel screen as a medium for statesmen is undoubtedly accurate. Further, being a New Yorker and exposed to the newsreel theatres of Broadway, which run specials, it is likely that even he has an exaggerated idea of how much political pabulum gets into the national releases of the reels.

The motion picture exhibitor and his audiences set considerably less esteem by the picturization of speeches by weighty public names than some of the newsreel impresarios appear to perceive. A picture of a man standing up talking is just a man standing up talking, and the greater the cosmic importance of his message the less business he has in a theatre.

DOG AND ROOSTER

BIG business moves in mysterious ways its wonders to perform. Once upon a time one of the world's greatest trade marks was that Victor talking machine dog, listening to "His Master's Voice." By and by came the radio business, and in time the Radio Corporation of America in its might. His Master's Voice became a mere whisper, and presently when RCA encompassed and assimilated the Victor concern it was silenced and lost, lost, lost. In a succession of events closely kindred in pattern, when Radio went picturewards with RKO, another of the world's great trademarks, the aggressive Pathe rooster, was overtaken, subdued and faded close to the vanishing point. Now about a month ago the Victor dog turned up again, and mayhap Radio thinks he may be a pretty good pup after all. He ought to be. He cost millions and millions knew him. All this implies that there is just a chance that maybe someday Radio will call the little red rooster back to crow again. He had his public.

NOT PRECISELY

ONCE in a while a misstatement can be so utterly in error as to achieve delectable charm. In The Era, London, under the signature of Mr. G. A. Atkinson, the editor, in the issue dated September 21, appears a discussion of Rita C. McGoldrick's remarks on the acceptability, to Catholics, of current motion pictures, in the course of which Mr. Atkinson says: "Mrs. McGoldrick's organization is attached to the National Board of Review, a concern which works under the auspices of the Hays organization."

WASHINGTON'S LOW

RKO NOW, the able house organ "voice of RKO Theatres," records for the information and discipline of managers, the distribution of passes all over the circuit for the week ending September 16, 1932. One is amazed to note that in Minneapolis a total of 1,028 passes were issued, while Washington had only 586 free admissions. This is probably to be accounted for by the absence of congressmen on campaign errands.

ALONG WITH HAMS & EGGS

IT becomes our joyous duty to record that the house organ of the Daniel Reeves grocery chain now carries film reviews, with ratings for family acceptability. The reviews are by Harry Evans, who is film critic for Life. Now if a newsreel, for instance, went to making remarks on chain store coffee—then what?

How Theatres Help All Business

1 "Going to the movies." Dramatizing a phrase popularly adopted to designate the most popular amusement. Appealing to both sexes and all ages. But during the day when the shops are open, appealing especially to women, who, according to statistics, do most of the buying for the family.

2 She might have stayed home (as, in a day of fewer outside attractions, she probably would have done), but she doesn't, and as it commonly happens, a taxicab company profits thereby. In a city, some medium of transportation is necessary. "Going to the movies" means spending to get there.

3 And on the way to the theatre a shop display attracts. Hadn't intended to do any shopping, perhaps. But window-shopping is part of the fun of "going to the movies." And how reasonable those prices! (If the merchant can't get her now, it's quite probably his own fault.)

4 Or she drives her own car, and with a friend, starts for the theatre showing the motion picture both have been planning to see. Well, after all, you can't operate a motor car on free air. You can get air free, but you have to buy the tires yourself!

5 And that isn't all. Tires once in a while. But almost every trip to the theatre means a stop for gas. Rather too often, oil. No single item amounting to much, of course. But as with "the movies" themselves, it's the frequency of patronage that counts.

6 Money the exhibitor won't get. Perhaps she intended to do some shopping when she started for the theatre, since the prospect of enjoying a screen play makes necessary shopping less a chore. That is why she shops where an attractive theatre is reasonably nearby.

This pictorial sequence was conceived by S. Charles Einfeld, director of publicity and advertising for Warner Brothers-First National.

JOINT EXHIBITOR COMMITTEE WILL MEET IN CHICAGO ON CONTRACT

Proposed Washington Session to Discuss Federal Regulation Is Canceled Again, But Leaders Deny Plan Is Abandoned

The proposed joint Washington conference of leaders of Allied States and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America to discuss a campaign for federal regulation of the industry and also a new standard contract has been cancelled, and instead a joint committee will convene in Chicago, October 13, to work out a new exhibition contract for submission to distributors. Announcement of the change was made at Minneapolis on Tuesday by W. A. (Al) Steffes, president of Allied, who said the committee will "remain in session until the contract is completed."

Mr. Steffes' announcement did not mention the legislative situation and in view of recent developments it appeared that plans for a joint drive by Allied and MPTOA to obtain federal regulation might not be discussed at the second Chicago conference. However, Mr. Steffes and Abram F. Myers, chairman of the board of Allied, later denied that contract discussions will be substituted entirely for a legislative program. "The omission of legislation plans (in Mr. Steffes' announcement) was 'an oversight', said Mr. Myers. "You have my assurance that the plan adopted by the joint committee has not and will not be abandoned," he continued. "The only thing that could stop it would be for the industry to voluntarily adopt the necessary reforms and give adequate assurance of a square deal for independent theatres in the future. Obviously, there is no disposition on the part of the industry to better the condition of independents. My prediction is a finish fight in which independents will prevail because of the inherent justice of their cause."

Program Not Dropped, Says Steffes

The federal legislation program agreed to on September 19 and 20 in Chicago at the first meeting of Allied and MPTOA will not be dropped, said Mr. Steffes. "No doubt the committee will devise ways and means to carry the program to its final conclusion," at the meeting next week, he declared.

When M. A. Lightman, president and acting on behalf of the MPTOA, announced following the Chicago session last month that his organization would abandon its highly conservative policy for the more aggressive platform of federal regulation for which Allied had been campaigning, the news reacted surprisingly in the industry. Allied and MPTOA committees, headed respectively by Mr. Steffes and Mr. Lightman, adjourned with the understanding that a second conference would be held in Washington September 29 to formulate plans for the legislative campaign and also for a new contract. Later, Mr. Lightman telegraphed the Allied group that he would be unable to attend and subsequently a communication was sent out to exhibitors from MPTOA headquarters in New York, signed by Mr. Lightman and M. J. O'Toole, secretary, urging theatre owners to guard against any possible attacks against the industry in forthcoming legislative sessions.

The MPTOA warning is said to have been based on the fact that 44 state legislatures will convene next January. Admission taxation, measures for or against Sunday closing and state censorship are among the principal subjects which usually attract attention of legislative bodies.

All states hold regular legislative sessions in January except Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi and Virginia. Most of the January meetings take place every other year—in the odd year. Next year most of the state lawmakers will convene on the first Monday in January; a few on New Year's Day, at noon. There are no bills pending, as adjournment of a legislative body causes automatic cancellation and necessitates reintroduction at the next session.

"In normal times there is little or nothing to worry about," said Mr. O'Toole, "but in times like these we are likely to get the hook from any side. When legislatures are in session our business is wide open to attack."

The current MPTOA communication from Mr. Lightman and Mr. O'Toole, which obviously differs from the stand Mr. Lightman adopted in conjunction with Allied at Chicago, said to exhibitors:

"In the past your work and the united efforts of all constructive forces within our industry have saved it from many burdens, if not complete collapse. We must continue these protective efforts.

"Already attacks on our business, under the guise of taxes and regulation, are being prepared. We must meet these situations in a determined way. When we show that we are interested in our own affairs, Congress and state legislatures will always treat us fair.

"That has been the experience of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America for over twelve years of this great protective work. We earnestly advise all theatre owners to stand solidly within the ranks of organization so as to work unitedly and constructively in the interest of the exhibitor and our whole industry."

Finish Fight Predicted by Myers of Allied States; Lightman and O'Toole Warn of Legislative Attacks on Industry

Mass Meeting Call Awaited

The various units of the MPTOA are expected to decide shortly in favor of a mass meeting of exhibitors, to be held in Chicago, probably early in November.

G. W. Erdman, business manager of the Cleveland MPTO, has declared himself in favor of one strong national exhibitor organization rather than the two now functioning. He also favors federal control as being necessary for the salvation of the independent exhibitor.

Exhibitor leaders in Kansas City have approved the movement for federal regulation initiated at the recent Chicago conference.

The action agreed upon by the two bodies and MPTOA's willingness to support Allied in seeking Government intervention have a deeper significance than appears on the surface, in the opinion of E. Van Hyning, president of the MPTO of Kansas and Missouri, who attended the Chicago conference as a member of MPTOA's executive committee. Mr. Van Hyning said that both organizations are in agreement on ultimate aims.

Jay Means, president of the Independent Theatre Owners of Greater Kansas City, also favors the bill. "If the bill can do what it is designed to do, it will be a great thing for the independent exhibitor, and I am heartily in favor of it," he said.

H. M. Richey, leader of Allied in Detroit, opened a local campaign last week to arouse active support for the enactment of the federal control bill proposed.

Endorsement of the action taken at the recent MPTOA-Allied meeting at Chicago has been voted by the MPTO of eastern Pennsylvania, southern New Jersey and Delaware, following submission of a report by David Barrist, president of the unit. MPTO members in this territory received a full report of the Chicago meeting on Thursday. It is expected that weekly meetings of the unit will be held throughout the coming season.

DIVERSITY AND THE MISSING MILLIONS

Mooring Suggests Hollywood Will Be Less Wrong Guarding Against Insularity in Concepts

by WM. H. MOORING

W. H. Mooring, formerly London correspondent of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, speaks with the experience gleaned in years in the business magazine field of the industry in England when he considers the Hollywood scene. Mr. Mooring was for five years editor of The Bioscope, of London, and has been on the Coast for two months as Fox special press representative for the picture "Cavalcade," now in preparation.

Half the film-wise will tell you that Hollywood is all wrong: the other half that it is all right.

The great communities of civilization, seldom if ever consulted, have a grand story to tell if Hollywood cares to listen. It may be the voice of the motion picture buyer we shall hear, and not that of the man who calls himself the motion picture maker, but it will say something.

I am an Englishman, a reporter of some years of experience in picture work: in all that time I have been more intrigued by the "still small voice" of the picture public than by the thunder of the publicity minions, or the chirping of the "clever" critics.

Both these busy classes could get good value for money if they would patronize the box-office and chat with the big public who buy film entertainment, to give us our daily bread, as we so often suppose.

I am told that Hollywood just now is keen to increase her hold upon the theatres of far away Europe: English, French and German stars are being sought; Continental stories are being bought; European directors are being signed: England is Hollywood's greatest concern. I am not surprised.

Ever since the talkers came, Hollywood has been making better and better films: that is not the same as making more suitable and more salable films.

Too often when Hollywood gets any information concerning England's reactions to her output, it is one tiny corner of London that does all the talking; that is where the "espionage" system is at fault. Mr. and Mrs. Picturegoer in the small towns are not allowed to speak up according to their box-office size. If they were I think I know some of the things they would say.

I have traveled England! no brass band or ballyhoo; my only passport to picture knowledge a pocket of English "dimes" and a tongue to get me a glance at the money-sheets afterwards. How many times have I sat on a ten cent "bench" in a country cinema and heard more commonsense at one elbow than I could have got out of the whole of a London theatre let at a dollar or two a loge?

This country public counts but never shouts. If it did, Hollywood would learn that British mass audiences are tired of pigeon-hole star patterns; of peroxided imitators of an original blonde who has been dead for so long no one can remember her name, and of dolled up, kittenish heroines who owe the beauty specialist not a thick wad, but a thick ear.

The wax-masked, brow-penciled, puckish-lipped hip-swinging heroines should be asked to take a rest. Synthetic beauty is out of date.

The movie moguls have carried the art of illusion far enough to disillusion their public: they are now making too many pictures for themselves.

Why not send the chocolate-box heroine to the discard, and save in the three D's—Dentifrice, Dirt, and Divorce?

Does Hollywood realize how nauseated are the British masses by the constantly exaggerated film treatment of marital and other sex themes? The English family still takes root: time does nothing to undermine the traditional oak.

The typical English tough still beats his wife, perfunctorily or with painstaking regularity according to domestic conceptions of esteem and respect, but ask him to divorce her or to betray her trust and you probably will be staggered by his reply.

These people do not resent Hollywood; they are not anti-American or pro-British; they have no repressions to work off like the "clever" critics; that is all.

They do not begrudge Americans their expensive diversions or their easy divorce: they wish neither for themselves. They are easily and cheaply entertained; they love simplicity because they can understand it.

I never have heard one person in Hollywood ask why Janet Gaynor, her tousled head set on a straight, cotton-clad figure, can wean more money from the British cinema crowd than a dozen of Hollywood's most gorgeously groomed sofa-loungers put together. But the fact is she can and does.

Marie Dressler's wrinkles mean box-office riches which the velvet-faced damsels and flower-faced heroes of many a reel of Hollywood sophistry cannot garner.

Such women stand for something; that is the reason.

The unspoiled charm of girlhood represents the Englishman's ideal: unashamed age touches that something inside him which is his Mother.

The English "Sue" is taught from the cradle that the magic of the make-up box is potent only as advertisement for that brand of charm which has a price: she tries it only till parental ridicule sets her fumbling for a face duster, and then she realizes that she never really cared for it at all because it made her look "cheap."

These people can draw no vicarious enjoyment from a set of screen "idols" whose world is related in no way to their own. They want to see themselves on the screen, if not as they are, at least as they would desire themselves to be. Glamorous maybe, but not gaudy: artful and seductive perhaps, but never artificial or salacious.

This Hollywood art of creating stars, by re-creating personalities, has gone too far.

Real screen discoveries are not so common that it becomes either necessary or profitable to classify every new artist of promise in one or other of three prevailing Hollywood star types. Standardization of beauty and personality may be easy work for the Californian artisans: it is not so simple for the film salesmen to sell in the theatre. Hollywood is neither all right, nor all wrong. It will be less in the wrong when it has sufficiently appreciated the dangers of that insularity which is the penalty of its colonization as to stop trying to make every new star a second Joan Crawford, Greta Garbo or Norma Shearer, and when it has allowed one or two Jane Smiths and Polly Joneses to flourish.

I would not say these things if I had not heard them from the very people you are apt to forget: the people who buy your film —and yours—and yours. Diversity will bring back the missing millions to the box-office. Nature and Art should be given a chance for a bit.

Film Section of Toronto Trade Board Names Officers

Representatives of exhibitors and film exchange organizations were elected officers of the film section of the Toronto Board of Trade at the annual meeting of the section last week, during which there was a general discussion of taxation problems in Canada. The outcome was the appointment of a committee on taxation with Colonel John A. Cooper, president of the Motion Picture Distributors of Canada, as chairman. Colonel Cooper was empowered to discuss the taxation question with other motion picture organizations. Members of the committee are T. J. Bragg, Famous Players Canadian Corporation; Oscar R. Hanson, general manager of Allied Exhibitors of Ontario, and J. P. O'Loghlin, general manager of Fox Film Corporation of Canada.

Officers of the film section of the Board of Trade are Mr. O'Loghlin, chairman; vice-chairman, J. J. Fitzgibbons, Famous Players Canadian Corporation; secretary-treasurer, F. D. Tolchard; executives, Mr. Hanson, Colonel Cooper, M. A. Milligan, general manager, Famous-Lasky Film Service Limited, Toronto.

Kirkpatrick Asks Leave To Regain His Health

A. S. Kirkpatrick, vice-president of Educational Pictures, following illness of more than a year, has applied for a leave of absence in order to regain his health. E. W. Hammons, president of Educational, in making this announcement on Monday, said the leave had been granted effective October 10.

U. S. SUIT VS. ELECTRICS HALTED: CONCESSIONS SPLIT UP, IS REPORT

Would Give Each Company Exclusive Rights to Engage in Certain Fields of Sound, Radio or Electrical Industry

by GEORGE L. PATZER
Wilmington Correspondent

The United States district court in Wilmington, Del., will be the battle ground for the United States Government's anti-trust, anti-monopoly suit against the Radio Corporation of America and its affiliates which, scheduled to open on Monday, October 10, was suddenly postponed indefinitely, for at least three or four weeks. It is perhaps the greatest anti-trust suit in the history of America's big business.

The Government's objective is to smash the alleged all-powerful radio trust which the Department of Justice says RCA and the others have formed, monopolizing at least 90 per cent of the radio manufacturing industry in the United States. This control, the Government contends, extended not only into the radio receiving apparatus field but stretches deep into the "talkies."

14 Companies Defendants

Fourteen companies make up the group of defendants. They are allied through stock ownership or binding contracts, the Government charges, and, by pooling the patents and patent rights they each control, they have forced competitors, the independent radio companies, to accept licenses and rights at their terms and have restrained and prevented competition in the radio field.

All these allegations are pure nonsense, RCA retaliates. The corporation and its associated companies and other defendants together are doing less than 20 per cent of the total business in radio receiving sets and less than 40 per cent of the total business in radio tubes. RCA has given favorable consideration, the company states, to the creation of an open patent pool as had been suggested by the Department of Justice.

"All this was done to the end that prolonged and expensive litigation might be avoided," RCA says, "that the cost of such litigation might be saved to the corporation's shareholders and the Government, that the energies of the officers and experts of the companies concerned might be devoted to constructive work in the interest not only of these companies and their stockholders but as well in the interest of the radio industry as a whole."

Story Goes Back to World War

But in spite of the surprise of RCA that the anti-trust action continues, the Government is settling down for its "crusade." When the case does open, the small room of the U. S. district court in Wilmington will be thronged with the country's most brilliant radio financiers, engineers, experts and most able patent attorneys.

Judge John P. Nields will sit on the bench. John Lord O'Brien, assistant to the attorney general of the United States, and Warren Olney, Jr., special assistant to the attorney general, will lead the Government's corps of attorneys. Veterans of the patent suits that have raged in the courts since 1919 in defense of RCA and the allied companies will be there for the defense.

It will be perhaps the greatest anti-trust suit in the history of America's big business and will last at least three months.

Aside from the complicated features of the agreements between the defendant companies, the grand panorama of the American radio business, the blue chip in American industry and endeavor, will unroll with its romantic and almost thrilling rise. The story will go back to the World war when the United States Government learned the value of wireless and the Navy Department looked with envy upon the American Marconi Company.

On the sidelines will be the independent radio companies which for years have appealed to the Federal Government for assistance from what they called "the reign of terror in radio," and from paying royalties on what they made and sold. In May, 1930 the Government filed its first suit against the RCA and others, and these independents rushed to the courts with damage suits, crying for triple damages because of the alleged monopoly. Their bill rose into the millions and bit by bit their claims were amicably settled. In March, 1932, after no action had been taken since the first bill was filed, Attorney General Mitchell had filed a supplemental bill of additional complaints.

It will be a bitter trial with the Government attempting to show the RCA patent pooling of 1920 is a combination in restraint of the radio trade. Should District Judge Nields find the defendants guilty of violation of the anti-monopoly laws, there will be no other choice than to order RCA to dissolve its pool and return the approximately 4,000 patents.

The sharp edict of the lower court will not rest there. The fight will continue on into the U. S. district court of appeals at Philadelphia and thence on to the U. S. supreme court, all a matter of at least three years, and the final outcome, lawyers say, a compromise.

The story of U. S. vs. RCA et al (as the case will go down into history) begins perhaps in the fall of 1919 when the General Electric Company had perfected a wireless apparatus known as the Alexanderson alternator. This had been invented in 1915 by Dr. Ernest F. W. Alexanderson. The alternator then was quite essential to wireless transmission but is obsolete.

In the fall of 1919, General Electric was on the verge of selling this alternator to the American Marconi Company, a New Jersey corporation which controlled wireless patents owned by the British Marconi Company. Thereupon, the story goes, Franklin D. Roosevelt, then assistant secretary of the navy, wrote to Owen D. Young, vice president of General Electric, to conclude no deal with British or American Marconi until the U. S. Navy officials were consulted.

These officials consulted, General Electric and the American Marconi Company agreed that the latter would sell its assets and business to the corporation to be organized by General Electric and so was born Radio Corporation of America on Oct. 17, 1919. Upon its organization, the bill of complaint sets forth, RCA purchased all the assets and business, with certain minor exceptions, of the American Marconi Company and from that time on, General Electric has continuously held a large proportion of RCA capital stock and has been the largest single stockholder and has been represented on its board of directors and has largely controlled its policies and actions. An admiral of the U. S. Navy always attended the RCA board meetings and so the subsequent patent pooling might have had approval of the Navy, but the Department of Justice certainly does not think so. The Department says that upon the organization of Radio corporation, RCA and General Electric engaged in a conspiracy to restrain trade and commerce not only in this country but in foreign nations in the manufacture, use and sale of radio apparatus and devices and in the transmission of messages by telegraph and telephone, both by radio and wire.

The means for accomplishing this monopoly, the Government charges, was first by limiting and restraining the activities of the participants themselves and others by agreements whereby the parties were debarred either wholly or partially from the use in that field of any patent or patent right; and secondly by the use of exclusive traffic agreements.

The offenses charged are numerous and com-

A split-up of the highly complicated and far-reaching cross-licensing agreements which are participated in by the leading electrical corporations may be consummated, bringing about a complete realignment of the various important and profitable concessions which would give to each the exclusive rights to engage in certain fields of the radio, sound or electrical industry without fear of competitive interference by any corporate member of the treaty.

Reports from Washington sources said that the old interlocking agreements would be dropped in favor of a new set which already had been drawn in order to halt the federal suit of monopoly which is pending against Radio Corporation of America, RCA Photophone, Inc., RCA Victor Company, Inc., RCA Radiotron Company, Inc., General Electric Company, Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company, American Telephone and Telegraph Company, Western Electric Company, Inc., General Motors Corporation and General Motors Radio Corporation.

Details of the new agreement could not be learned, but it was reliably reported that it would give all the electrical interests more complete cross-licensing agreements with the elimination of provisions for exclusive special rights in various sectors of motion picture and communication activities.

The new agreement, it was said, was to be presented to the Department of Justice, which, it was hoped, might dismiss certain or all of the charges against any one or all of the defendants if it decided that the new agreement would eliminate alleged violations on which the monopoly suit is based. Whether such an agreement was presented to the Government could not be learned, but on Tuesday it was decided suddenly to postpone the trial, originally scheduled for October 10, to an indefinite date within one month. The reason given for the postponement was that Judge John F. Nields was indisposed but would be well again in a few weeks.

WHAT LED UP TO THE ELECTRICS SUIT

plicated. The first, according to the Government, was Agreement A wherein General Electric granted RCA exclusive right to use and sell radio apparatus under all its patents and patent rights, either then possessed or which might be acquired up until January, 1945, the life of the agreement.

In turn, RCA granted General Electric the exclusive right to manufacture, as distinguished from the right to use or sell, radio apparatus and devices under its patents and patent rights just acquired from the American Marconi Company. RCA also sold, it is said, to General Electric the manufacturing plants and other property just acquired from American Marconi Company. And General Electric agreed to make radio apparatus and would sell such only to RCA and RCA in turn would buy such apparatus only from General Electric.

Thus, the Department of Justice summarizes, the practical effect of this agreement was to restrain General Electric from trading in anything not intended for RCA and restrained RCA from purchasing anything unless made by General Electric.

Jumping a few years ahead of the foundation of the alleged combine, one finds Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company in 1920 engaged as the principal competitor of General Electric and with the International Radio Telegraph Company, born in 1920, Westinghouse prepared to compete with General Electric in the manufacturing and selling of radio apparatus and radio communication.

Westinghouse Enters

But—a year later, Westinghouse and General Electric agreed that Westinghouse enter the RCA family through stock purchase and RCA acquire the International Radio Telegraph and have exclusively the field of radio communication by telegraph and telephone subject, however, to certain restrictions imposed by three agreements that existed between RCA, General Electric and American Telephone and Telegraph Company. The Westinghouse-General Electric agreement further held that they too should pool their production, the Government alleges, of radio apparatus with General Electric manufacturing 60 per cent and Westinghouse 40 per cent, and their joint production sold exclusively to RCA.

And so, the Government says, here was another instance of dampening competition—International Radio Telegraph no longer competed with either RCA or the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, in the communication field; Westinghouse did not compete with General Electric in the manufacture and sale of radios and it was the understanding, so the Government interprets the agreements, that each would refrain from engaging in activities in competition with the others.

Returning to the important year of 1919, one finds three important foreign companies engaged in transoceanic wireless communication and in the manufacture of radio apparatus, the Marconi Wireless Telegraph Company, Ltd., of Great Britain; the Compagnie Generale de Telegraphie sans Fils of France, and the Gesellschaft Fur Drahtlose Telegraphie, m.b.H., of Germany, otherwise known as the Telefunken Company. Each company had virtually a monopoly at its home country in radio communication, it is charged.

The Government alleges that simultaneously with the acquisition of the American Marconi Company, RCA made an agreement with the British company (General Electric assenting), whereby the world was divided into four territories:

> Radio Corporation of American territory defined as the United States and its territories and possessions and Cuba;
> British Company territory to include all the British possessions in the Western hemisphere;
> "No Man's" Land comprising all countries of Continental Europe, (except Belgium, Switzerland, Balkan countries and Turkey), Japan, China and the Argentine.
> The rest of the world was said to be the rest of the world.

In the summer of 1920, American Telephone and Telegraph Company and the RCA-General Electric group joined in the alleged conspiracy to restrain wireless and telegraphy competition. AT&T was interested in electrical communication but had also, valuable wireless patents held through its subsidiary, Western Electric Company, Inc., but in 1920 neither of the two companies was engaged in radio communications.

Stock Transaction Cited

On the other hand, RCA and General Electric were, and the use of radio communication was rapidly increasing. RCA-General Electric entered into an agreement, the Government charges, with AT&T-Western Electric whereby RCA and GE would have protection from competition in radio by AT&T-Western Electric, and AT&T-Western Electric would be protected in competition in wire telegraphy by the first two companies.

Pursuant to this agreement, the Government states, the Telephone Company acquired 500,000 shares of RCA preferred stock and 500,000 shares of common stock, paying about $2,500,000 and the practical effect of this agreement, the Government charges, was to debar General Electric and RCA from engaging in the business of transmitting messages by wire telegraphy or by wireless telephony on land and from making or selling wire telegraph apparatus in competition with the Telephone Company; and the Telephone Company was restrained from competing with General Electric or RCA in radio communication.

It is further charged by the Government that RCA and General Electric were to "enjoy" all the patents and radio inventions of the British Company for use in American territory; the British company was to enjoy all the RCA and General Electric patents and inventions in British Territory; no rights were to be granted or received by either side for "No Man's Land," and as for the neutral territory, with certain exceptions, each side granted the other non-exclusive right to use and sell under its patents and patent rights.

The Government also charges there was a monopoly on the transmission of messages between the United States and Great Britain, whereby neither party should receive or send messages except from or to the other.

The "Consortium"

A contract with the French company is said to have had the effect of debarring the French company from competing with RCA and General Electric in the field of transmitting messages and an agreement was said to have been made with the German company controlling the transmission of messages between Germany and the United States and also controlling the manufacture and sale of radio apparatus in the two countries.

On Oct. 14, 1921, the Government's allegations continue, RCA, the British, French and German companies agreed to exploit the South American field of radio communication and sale of radio apparatus jointly through what was said to be known as "the consortium."

And so, bit by bit, the other defendants came into the alleged combine, under agreements that crossed and almost criss-crossed, until finally 4,000 patents were controlled, it is said, and the Government charges this accumulation or pool has been used to dominate control and monopolize the manufacture and sale of radio devices in the United States.

Prior to 1927, it is charged, RCA refused to grant licenses to outside firms but in 1927 it started to grant licenses to third persons to manufacture and sell limited classes of apparatus but refused to grant licenses under patents of any one of the defendants alone. There was a standard form license, it is said, whereby the licensee should pay a royalty, on every piece of apparatus sold, of 7½ per cent of the licensee's gross selling price with, in case the licensee used parts purchased from RCA, a deduction proportionate to the cost of such parts.

RCA is said to have received $7,000,000 annually under this royalty contract.

Each licensee for the manufacture and sale of receiving sets was required to pay to RCA a minimum of $100,000 a year and each licensee for the manufacture and sale of vacuum tubes had to pay at least $50,000 a year. However, since the Government instituted its suit, this requirement has not been insisted upon in all cases.

Charges Monopoly

The Government claims that by means of these cross agreements, the American Telephone and Telegraph Company acquired a monopoly in the wireless telephone field; the United Fruit Company acquired a complete monopoly of public wireless telegraphy communication between the United States and Central Americas, General Motors Radio Corporation and the others won a monopoly of the manufacture and sale in the United States radio receiving sets for use in automobiles; National Broadcasting Company restrained competition in the business of broadcasting on a nationwide scale with the single exception of the Columbia Broadcasting Company.

To smash the alleged combine, the Government asks the court to decree that all these various agreements and acquisitions of companies and transfers of assets had been done with the view in mind to obtain a monopoly of the radio telegraph and telephone business; that each grant of exclusive rights of the patents involved are null and void; that General Electric and Westinghouse dispose of all their stock in RCA (with certain exceptions) to firms other than any of the other defendants; to enjoin A. T. & T., General Electric, Westinghouse and RCA from making any combination, agreement or joint endeavor whereby the freedom of any of the defendants to grant licenses under their patents is in any way restricted; to enjoin any of the defendants from refusing to grant to a third person by reason of any agreement with any other defendant.

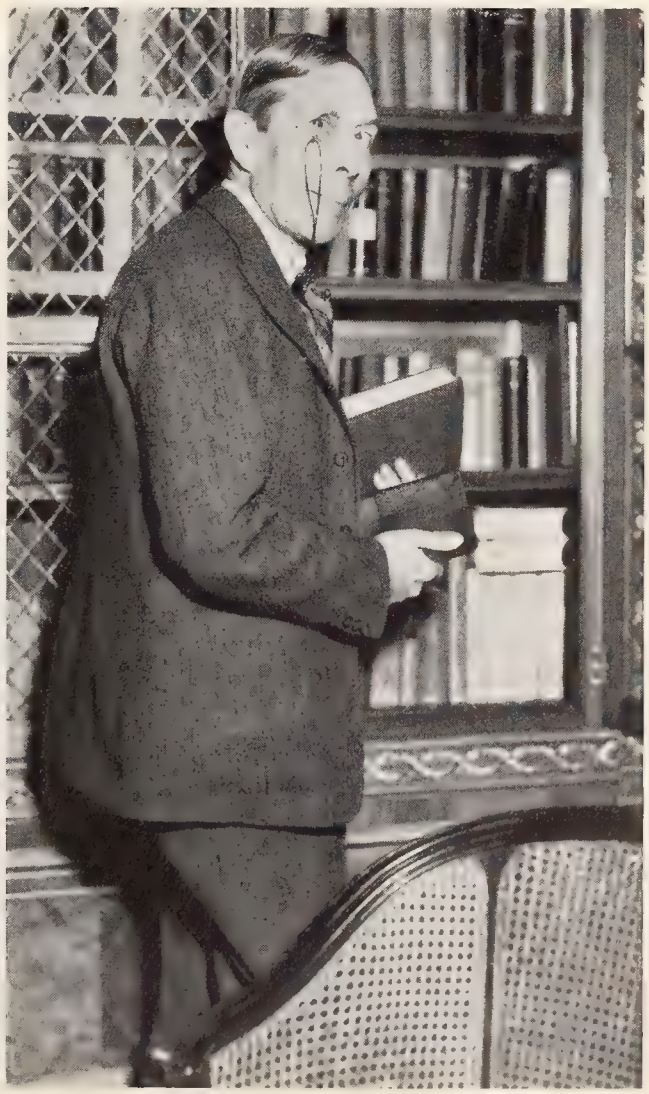
So much for the Government's views. When the supplemental bill of complaint was filed in March of this year, RCA issued a statement, saying:

"We are unable to understand the action of the department in persisting in doing unnecessary things. The Radio Corporation of America and its associated companies are doing less than 20 per cent of the total business in radio receiving sets and less than 40 per cent of the total business in radio tubes.

"The patent cross licensing contracts made legally possible the manufacture of radio apparatus. They did not restrain trade—they created it."

THE CAMERA REPORTS

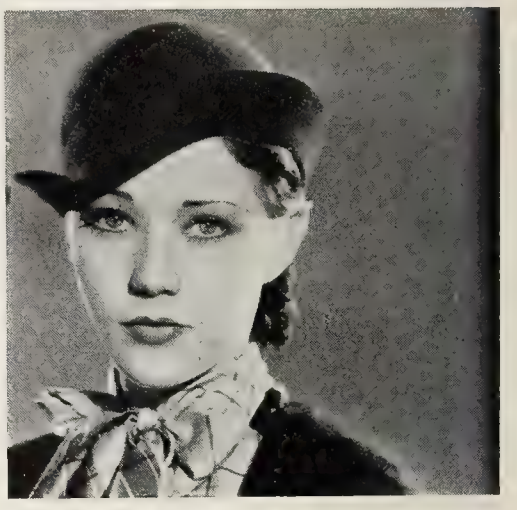
AT BENEFIT. (Left) Will Hays, MPPDA head, and David Sarnoff, president of RCA, arriving at the Mayfair in New York for the opening of RKO Radio's "A Bill of Divorcement." Proceeds went to Mrs. William Randolph Hearst's Milk Fund.



ALL THE BARRYMORES. Including the latest additions. United as Ethel joins John and Lionel in MGM's "Rasputin," they are pictured together for the first time. Seated: Lionel and his wife, Ethel, Mrs. John Barrymore (Dolores Costello) and John with their daughter and son. Standing: Ethel's children, John, Ethel and Samuel Colt.

CHARMER. (Below) For such she is in "Match King," which sets forth the machinations of an international financier, in business and in love. Juliette Compton is shown here as she appears in this First National production, in which Warren William plays the title role, with Lili Damita in the feminine lead.

VACATION OVER. (Right) After a summer of leisure on his estate in England, George Arliss has returned to Hollywood. The Warner star is shown in the library of the Mauretania, nearing New York.



THE MARCH OF YOUTH. Vibrantly it goes across the screens of the world, parading the spirit by which that world shall ever be remade. Here are four jaunty fellows on the Fox lot, linked in a vigorous goose-step across the grounds. From West to East: Phillips Holmes, Monroe Owsley, Ben Lyon and James Dunn.

IMPORT. Charlotte Susa, German actress who has arrived in this country to appear in MGM product. Her first role in this country is expected to be announced soon.

STARLET. So called by Warner Brothers, who recently awarded her a contract. She is Alice Jans, one of several extras given contracts.

IN AIR INTERVIEW. (Left) Reginald Denny, the lead in Allied Pictures' "The Iron Master," ready for his recent broadcast from an airplane in flight.

WITNESSING THE FIRST YANKEE VICTORY. Joe E. Brown and Edward G. Robinson, Warner stars, with Mrs. Robinson and S. Charles Einfeld, Warner advertising director, at the initial World Series game in New York. Besides entertainment, the event supplied sequences for Brown's next picture, "Elmer the Great," baseball story.

AUTHOR ON HAND. For the beginning of work on "Strangers of the Evening," Tiffany Thayer's popular novel which is being brought to the screen by World Wide. Shown at the Tiffany studio are Warren Duff, scenarist, who adapted the book for film production; Thayer, and Samuel Bischoff, the producer.

DIRECTOR NOW. Remember Lupino Lane? The former star of American comedies has become a British director, and here he is at work on Powers' "Maid of the Mountains."

NEW HAIRDRESS. (Left) Mitzi Green with her voluptuous curls all frizzled and (so they say!) blonded for her portrayal of "Little Orphan Annie," RKO Radio production.

SIGNED. (Below) Jack Oakie, who has been engaged by World Wide for the leading male role in "Uptown New York," story by Vina Delmar. KBS is producing.

A BUSY PREVIEW WEEK

Mae West Scores with George Raft in "Night After Night"; Five Other Films Discussed

by LEO MEEHAN
Hollywood Staff Correspondent

It looks as if "Diamond Lil" were set for a stay in Hollywood. After previewing "Night After Night," Paramount officials immediately announced that the option had been taken up, that Mae West would stay on the payroll. It surprised no one who saw the picture, which is, by the way, the first starring vehicle for George Raft, that slick gentleman who registered so heavily in "Scarface." Mae West came near stealing the show, even with Raft, Alison Skipworth, Wynne Gibson and other good troupers in the cast. She is the typical Mae West who played on the stage, but her peculiar personality stands out vividly on the screen. There is a sequence between Miss West and Alison Skipworth that would save any picture.

It seems to be the consensus that if George Raft continues to play heavy leads with the suavity and polish he does this first one, he will be a favorite in the No. 1 spot. This time he is a speakeasy proprietor, with Park Avenoo aspirations. A girl haunts his place, because it used to be her home. He goes in a big way for her, even though she is socially far above his level.

A Great Vaudeville Show

Paramount also came through this week with "The Big Broadcast," it's headliner featuring popular radio personalities. A production such as this can scarcely be judged by customary standards. It is, after all, a great vaudeville show, with an incidental story threaded through it. The audience at Santa Monica, where it was previewed, gave it a big hand—and our preview audiences out here don't do that unless they are entertained; previews are too common to be thrilling in themselves. When you have people in the cast like Bing Crosby, Kate Smith, Burns and Allen, the Mills Brothers, the Boswell Sisters, Donald Novis, Vincent Lopez and Cab Calloway and their orchestras, well, there is plenty to draw in the shekels at the box office. Certainly the millions of radio fans will welcome the opportunity to see such air-favorites as these. And the entire production is done on a magnificent scale, including some intriguing music.

Two real thrillers in the week came from Fox and Universal, Fox with "Wild Girl," and Universal with "Air Mail."

"Wild Girl" is a rather liberal interpretation of a famous Bret Harte story called "Salomy Jane's Kiss." It features Charles Farrell and Joan Bennett, and the two probably never have appeared to better advantage, particularly Joan. Instead of the languishing, bored creature of the penthouses and wild parties, she is seen in a primitive role, extremely melodramatic at times. She does splendid work throughout. There is uproarious comedy provided by Gene Pallette. No production in recent days has had more magnificent natural backgrounds, the mighty redwood forests of California. There is gorgeous pictorial beauty—the real thing, not studio manufactured. It is well worth stressing, this beauty. Although laid in a post Civil War period, the production treatment is such that never for a moment does it appear "old fashioned." It is good melodrama, down-to-earth entertainment from start to finish. It is another proof of the fact that those who talk of certain perennially popular stories being "old fashioned" just lack the imagination to give them proper modern treatment. "Wild Girl" is mass entertainment.

The same may be said of Universal's "Air Mail," though its subject and backgrounds are as modern as your new fall hat. It tells a thrilling story of the life and hazards of the men who carry the air mail across the trackless wastes of desert and mountain. It is full of sensational flying, has strong melodrama, good comedy and pretty romance.

Blood-Rare Meat Here

"Kongo," from MGM, is only for those who like their meat blood-rare. It is gruesome in spots, cruelly so, and features a derelict group of men and women whom the feverish tropics have made bestial in their depravity. Men may like the picture, providing they like heavy entertainment. The outstanding thing in the picture is the extraordinary characterization done by Virginia Bruce, who lately married John Gilbert and announced she was retiring from the screen. It seems too bad, in a way. Here was an extremely difficult part, one to tear the very heart out of an actor by its mental and spiritual strain alone. She does it magnificently, though the character she plays is almost repulsive at times. If Miss Bruce never does anything else, she has proved her ability as an actress. William Cowen, who directed, never missed an opportunity to make his story seem real. It is the story itself that has a dark-brown taste. Walter Huston, as usual, delivers a great portrayal, but we sometimes wonder if it is good business to ask, or permit, a man of his ability to create such a sodden, depraved, hideous character, even for the purpose of proving he is a fine actor.

Hoot Gibson is a comedian of no mean ability in his latest western for M. H. Hoffman's Allied. There is a lot of good, clean fun in this picture, which also has plenty of the regular western stuff and background. The idea of putting a lively farce comedy into a western locale proves highly successful in this instance, suggesting possibilities for a change from the routine western line that should be attractive to everyone. This production is called "The Cowboy Counsellor," with Hoot in the role of a smart-cracking book agent, who lives on his wits.

Educational previewed Arvid Gillstrom's first Harry Langdon two-reeler. It is a riot of fun called "The Big Flash," with plenty of good old gag hokum, and Langdon doing his stuff like a house-afire.

The Month's Best Sellers and Renters

Terry Ramsaye Declares Engineer Can Enlarge Motion Picture's Service; Suggests Industry Emulate Laboratory

A suggestion that the sharp-cut efficiency and conscientiousness of the research laboratory might well be carried over into the general practice of the motion picture industry was made by Terry Ramsaye, editor of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, speaking before the Society of Motion Picture Engineers at the annual banquet Wednesday night at the Hotel Pennsylvania in New York. Mr. Ramsaye observed that the serious failures of the industry "have been moral failures." He urged the engineers to work toward a reduction in cost and a wider dissemination of motion picture technology.

Mr. Ramsaye is a member of the society and a member of various committees concerned with history and archives.

Suggests Enlarged Field

Declaring that from the present on the motion picture industry will be engaged in creating for itself "the real structure of a modern industry," Mr. Ramsaye warned against carrying over "too many heirlooms."

"It is evident enough," he said, "if there are any lessons in the evolutions of the arts and the industries, that the motion picture is inescapably destined to a much larger field of service than that in which it is now employed. It is common alike to public and speakers and to the public mind, and most of us in the industry, to think of the amusement business as being the motion picture. The very obvious fact is that the motion picture is the chief instrument of the amusement industry and that amusement utilization of the motion picture is merely thus far its dominant activity of service. There are a great many things for the motion picture to do and it has begun to do them.

"It is, of course, admittedly ridiculous to think that this great new medium for the re-creation of events for narration and record should be exclusively engaged in recording the antics of platinum blondes for the masses. That is, I am sure, a valuable and praiseworthy activity, but the people who are now saying it with pictures are not the only people who have something to say. A very much wider dissemination of motion picture technology is a controlling necessity to the future of the industry. A very considerable part of the responsibility for that dissemination rests with you motion picture engineers. Civilization, the arts and the sciences follow the tools, and you are the makers of the tools. The motion picture mechanism, both in terms of sight and sound, requires vast technological improvement.

"Meanwhile the equation between the old motion picture industry of pre-sound days, and the agencies and corporate instruments of the new technology is to be written and calculated in terms of component forces, which forces include capital, experience and social consciousness, which is another way of saying conscience. The laws of mass and inertia apply even to such imponderables.

"The motion picture industry, paradoxically as it may seem, needs sufficient expansion of personnel, and a sufficient reduction of production costs, to permit it to make a great many more mistakes. A great deal of progress always comes from what someone has called the 'lunatic fringe.' If mechanisms and raw stocks and distribution can be sharply reduced in cost and widely disseminated, the motion picture can achieve some fraction of that sort of service which is rendered to the art of literature by the portable typewriter. The art of literature to which the motion picture is, in some degree, comparable because it is also quite as closely akin to publication as it is to the stage, has achieved its status of attainment largely through the endeavors of hungry men pecking at manuscripts in attics. A million dollars never wrote a novel, and no thoroughly contented man ever created a play. The important, profitable, money-making literature of the industry of publication has had its creative origin in minds struggling for expression and ham sandwiches, not in the maintenance of arabesque architecture reflected in turquoise-lined swimming pools, and bungalows at Malibu.

Social Adjustments Advised

"If you will endeavor to evolve the tools which will in some degree make it possible to make a motion picture where men with dreams can dream, and for something considerably less than a quarter of a million dollars per dream, you will have importantly served the future of this industry and perhaps your own."

Advising a serious endeavor on the part of the motion picture to adjust itself to the standards of American life, Mr. Ramsaye yet asserted that the record in the film industry "will enjoy a favorable comparison with some of the more recently evidenced erraticisms in other great industries.

1933 OFFICERS AND GOVERNORS

Officers and governors of the SMPE for next year were chosen Wednesday night at the banquet at the annual Fall meeting, held at the Hotel Pennsylvania, New York, following a business and technical session in the afternoon.

The officers for 1933:

Alfred N. Goldsmith, president. (Re-elected.

J. I. Crabtree, past president.

E. I. Sponable, vice-president. (Elected.)

W. C. Kunzmann, vice-president. (Re-elected.)

J. H. Kurlander, secretary. (Re-elected.)

H. T. Cowling, treasurer. (Re-elected.)

The board of governors:

W. C. Hubbard and R. E. Farnham were elected to the board, succeeding F. C. Badgley and W. C. Kunzmann. The board also includes P. H. Evans, O M. Glunt, R. F. Mitchell, D. MacKenzie and L. C. Porter.

Goldsmith Asks New Recognition Of SMPE Work

Making argument to the industry for broader recognition of the work and significance of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, Dr. Alfred N. Goldsmith, president, told some few hundred film technicians, engineers and electricians assembled at the fall SMPE banquet in New York Wednesday night that the Society is beginning to feel it is steadily coming to be regarded as the major exponent of organization and of systematic analytical endeavor in the field of motion pictures by all of the important manufacturing and production interests. Dr. Goldsmith, vice-president and chief engineer of the Radio Corporation, was re-elected to the Society's presidency for the second time by the ballot counted at the semi-annual dinner which was held at the Hotel Pennsylvania.

Overlook Society's Value

Some of the important producing and manufacturing interests "have, unfortunately, been slow to recognize fully how important the SMPE could be to the industry," said Dr. Goldsmith, and "some of them have developed their own individual organizations within their own companies, to a very high degree; but they failed to understand that this is not sufficient. It is necessary also to organize the entire industry.

"The internal organization of each individual unit," he continued, "must be followed by the over-all organization of the units, so that one may not interfere with the progress and development of the other; but rather that each unit shall contribute to the advancement of every other unit, and that the progress of any individual unit shall not be hampered by the activities of any other.

Organization Lacking

"Until quite recent years," Dr. Goldsmith said, "the art of producing and exhibiting motion pictures, although lacking nothing in vigor and the will to grow, nevertheless lacked several aspects that are now becoming increasingly important in motion picture engineering, namely the stability of the art and the logical justification of every step made in engineering it, and the skilled organization that is requisite for encouraging and making possible such steps, and avoiding needless waste and duplication of effort.

"Whatever can be done to coordinate, or bring into line the various activities of the individual units of the industry will obviously assist in expanding business and in accelerating the return to normalcy," Dr. Goldsmith said.

"MAKINGS OF GOOD FILM PUDDING"

That's De Casseres' Rating of "Lilly Turner"; Other Stage Plays From a Screen Viewpoint

By BENJAMIN DeCASSERES

LILLY TURNER

You've seen them—those "free" health exhibits in empty stores. The fellow with the muscles as thick as the legs of the girls in a Fourteenth street burlesque show. The hip-flipping beauty, as athletic as a mollusk. And the old Doc who sells you a pamphlet that shows you the Road to Wigor at 90.

Well, that's the theme of "Lilly Turner," by George Abbott and Phil Dunning, based on a story by Frances Fox Dunning. And there's going to be a picture come out of it—some corking entertainment. For here are all the makings of a good cinema pudding: melodrama, comedy, sentiment and vivid characterization.

That grand old medicine man, Jimmy Cruze, might handle this as a labor of love.

On a pin's head, here it is: Lilly Turner is a girl with a past that includes a baby whose father might have been Hamlet or Barney Google—no one knows.

She's married now to the heavy boozer in the Health Show. He's the barker.

Lilly's weakness is strong men. Keeping a mother's eye on her weaker half, she takes on a German with great biceps.

He goes insane for love of her (Dorothy Hall as Lilly is certainly no gland-killer to look at!). Then she goes in for his successor, a high-hat strong man.

Meanwhile the first strong man breaks out of the asylum and throws the stewed husband through a window (no damage can ever happen to a man in the plastered third-and-a-half dimension).

This brings Lilly—her maternal instinct jelling once again—back to her legit. He needs her, you see.

This show in no way approaches the Abbott-Dunning masterpice, "Broadway," but, mainly because of the excellent all-around acting and also because of the delicious Dorothy Hall, it is a good entertainment.

THE BUDGET

This play is for family picture trade. You can take grandma and Aunt Hester to see it and it would never bring shame to the pinkest-cheeked Boy Scout.

It is by Robert Middlemass, the author of the most-played one-act play in captivity, "The Valiant," done in pictures by Paul Muni. There is one quick throat-gulping scene in it, if you remember.

Well, "The Budget" is nothing like "The Valiant." Middlemass' latest play is built on the Depression. It is one of those restful, homey comedies, a good antimacassar for this head o' mine filled with all the tinkle, din and dingle-dongle of the Broadway showshop.

Nothing much happens in "The Budget," but it is easily recognizable, the characters are well set up and there was enough humor to chase away the flies from my mouth when it started a-yawning.

The budget is the family budget. Pete Harper is out of work. He has $750 in the bank. The bank blinks out.

Relatives come to visit him, not knowing the Harpers are on the rocks except for a gallon of gin.

They make a desperate attempt to win a radio prize of $5,000. That goes boom, too.

They attempt to rent the house which they own when one of the relatives blows this to atoms by inadvertently speaking of the mosquitoes.

Now, the bumming brother-in-law wins the $5,000 and peels off $800 for the Harpers and beats it, just at the time the colored servant girl announces she is to be a mother.

Peter gets a job. Hunky-dory. Kiss-out.

A nice, quiet, laughable picture could be made out of this. The cast, which consisted mainly of Lynne Overman, Mary Lawlor and Raymond Walburn, were all snappy.

ONLY THE YOUNG

Only the brave deserve the fair and "Only the Young" deserved Sutton Place.

I joined the carriage-trade, the sophisticuties, the Last of the Capitalists and the barebacked nine o'clock toe-treaders in the trek over to the Sutton Show Shop, which is at First avenue and Fifty-sixth street, where Mike the Spike used to herd his gang, the River Rats, those doughty proletarians who are now the leaders of our Fifth Estate, the bootlegging aristocracy.

The Vere de Veres have built up this section and now piddle-puddle with the Muses and Aesthetic Ventures.

The opener was "Only the Young," a British opus from the pen of Cecil Lewes. But I fear the wild bells of Hollywood will not ring forth when this script gets to Vermont avenue and Olive Hall.

You see, it's for the top-hats. But its theme is a kind of strip—or what your Uncle Will Hays would pronounce un-Indianian.

The play is laid around the Italian Lake country and Ronny falls in love with a week-ender who is the old man's mistress. (Bah Jove!) Well, Ronny has a loving sister, Kit, and a mother, the "Squirrel" (Hilda Spong).

The sister is upset. But the Squirrel knows something. This Ronny is only their adopted son (Gar blimme!)—and so Ronny gives up the old man's judy and marries the girl who was his sister in the first act (Cricket!).

Well, you could ha' slew me!

But the carriage-trade had a great time.

Picture value—well, what do you think about it, Tom Geraghty?

TRIPLETS

Mark Lindner, who gave us that Epic of Bolony, "Diamond Lil," in which the Sarah Bernhardt of America, Mae West, shone like a black rhinestone in the battered crown of Broadway, littered for us another play called "Triplets."

He got away with "Diamond Lil" for a good box-office frisk and Ann Nichols did the miraculous, as you recall, with "Abe's Irish Rose" in the face of a critical barrage that screamed its Everlasting Nay all over New York. So he might make "Triplets" go, although as a show it isn't even terrible.

Carbondale, Pa. O'Day is the Mayor. He's got to be elected. He looks for a publicity stunt.

He bred the stunt. I mean he offers his triplets (sons) in marriage to the Schindleheims' triplets (girls). But they must produce kids within two years or it is all wet. What? I don't know.

Well, the play rolls on. Quarrels; attempts to break the contract—and I plunge into the night looking for a good picture and a gin-rickey.

Paramount Features a New Hollywood Billboard Display

Paramount has recently been experimenting on the Coast with a new type of billboard display placed on Hollywood's Wilshire Boulevard to attract attention to its productions currently playing at Hollywood theatres. The painted display features a large "book," with four pages which may be turned by hand.

Each of the four double leaves advertises one production, the "pages" being turned by two girls elaborately costumed. When the advertised pictures have completed their run, the "pages" are removed and others substituted. The display was designed by Foster and Kleiser Company, San Francisco.

Waxman Resigns from Roxy; Ben Atwill to Succeed Him

A. P. Waxman has resigned as director of advertising and publicity of the Roxy theatre in New York. A disagreement with the management of the house is reported as the reason for the resignation.

It is understood Mr. Waxman will be succeeded by Ben Atwell, for many years a publicity representative for Broadway legitimate theatres, and the first publicity representative at the Capitol theatre.

Schulberg to Make "Glass Key"

B. P. Schulberg will produce the "Glass Key" as the second of his independently made films for Paramount release. The film is an adaptation of the mystery drama by Dashiell Hammet. The first feature, "Madame Butterfly" is in preparation.

CHICAGO FOLLOWS KANSAS CITY, DETROIT IN BANNING DOUBLE BILLS

300 Houses in Illinois Center Swing Back to Single Features Almost Overnight and Find Attendance Maintained

The trend away from double featuring gained substantial headway this week. Exhibitors of Chicago—hotbed of the practice for two years—voted unanimously to return at once to single features and to short subjects. Balaban and Katz and Warner Brothers, principal circuit operators of this second largest territory in the country, resumed single bills late last week and on Sunday 90 per cent of the ciy's theatres went back to the old policy. Kansas City theatre owners have agreed to curb the practice, while the first three weeks of a ban in Detroit finds a voluntary agreement working satisfactorily in that territory. Bookers of Warner Theatres throughout the country have been ordered by the home office to reduce the number of dual bookings.

300 Drop Double Bills

In Chicago, double feature programs, a movement started by several exhibitors as a means of stimulating attendance at the expense of their competitors, and subsequently adopted by the competitors until, in an ever widening circle, the practice ultimately became citywide and grew into a business monstrosity that threatened the very existence of many theatres, was defeated by the exhibitors who mistakenly had nurtured it.

Not in recent years have Chicago exhibitors taken such a unanimous stand as was witnessed Sunday when almost 300 circuit and independent theatres in the city and suburbs voluntarily switched overnight to a single feature policy. Every other consideration, admission prices, protection and other causes of possible differences were set aside for later adjustment to insure the demise of the so-called "evil." Sunday newspapers, carrying the program of 125 theatres showed only four houses failing to fall in line.

One of the immediate results is a return of short subjects to the city's screens in numbers not paralleled in several years. A study of various theatre programs shows as many as five short subjects used in connection with the single feature. And not only are the short subjects finding wide demand but they are being given very definite selling value in program advertisements in newspapers.

Also, the theatre organ, which in many houses has been accumulating dust over a long period, again promises to become important, especially in the larger neighborhood houses. The organs at Balaban & Katz' Marbro, Granada, Southtown, Harding and Gateway were placed in use immediately.

The history of double features in Chicago started as a neighborhood proposition and the sponsors enjoyed a pronounced degree of extra business. Others adopted the method until virtually every theatre in the city was double featuring. With this condition prevailing, exhibitors suddenly discovered that, from the standpoint of competition, they were all in the same boat. Yet the situation was not entirely disagreeable and double feature programs came gradually to be accepted. Balaban & Katz, with de luxe neighborhood houses in all parts of the city, professed opposition on the grounds that the practice was bad for the business, and were the last to adopt them. It was a matter of self protection, according to B & K officials.

But whatever the reason, B & K was not displeased when, to its surprise, executives discovered that the double feature policy at such houses as the Marbro and Granada suddenly jumped the weekly gross between $5,000 and $6,000. Able to make advantageous bookings assuring two features of good drawing power, B & K rode the double bill crest high. In the meantime, subsequent runs discovered that the twin bill was not drawing as it did at the outset and film rentals were mounting. In several meetings the independents agreed that double features were no longer useful and that it was highly desirable to eliminate the practice, which was then described as the root of all that is evil, unsound and impractical in local theatre business.

Women's Clubs Protest

Having reached this conclusion the smaller exhibitors found themselves loath to take any action until they were assured Balaban & Katz also would return to single features. But B & K officials saw no reason for making a change and thus the situation remained for several months—in fact, it is said, until novelty and drawing power of two features had worn itself out in even B & K houses. Dissatisfaction grew until the question was taken up by the motion picture committees of women's clubs who came out publicly as opposed to double features.

Business on the first day of the return to single features indicates that the public is ready to embrace the change, exhibitors reporting that attendance held up well and that there were few complaints.

Exchanges in Chicago selling short subjects are rejoicing at the sudden sensational spurt in sales and the increase already has reacted in the short subject departments of the home offices in New York.

Kansas City Tries Again To Observe Agreement

In Kansas City, subsequent run exhibitors tentatively have agreed to curb double bills by reinstating a "gentlemen's agreement," adopted several months ago but recently violated by a number of exhibitors. Under the agreement, termed a "code of ethics," theatres agree to use dual bills only one day weekly, on Sunday.

While many Kansas City exhibitors favor banning doubles entirely, and the Independent Theatre Owners Association looks toward permanent and drastic restrictions, it is said that the extent of regulation will depend on the protection which distributors will allow this season. Also, it is said that if local exhibitors fail to abide by the restrictions, the distributors will make double protection mandatory for double bills.

About 40 houses in Kansas City use double bills at least once a week. Several downtown "grind" houses show doubles as a regular diet at 10 and 15 cents, but they will not be affected by restrictions as they are not considered competition to other runs. Theatres charging 10 cents admission are allowed two doubles a week, provided the change is two weeks behind the date of availability for 10-cent houses and provided the exhibitor advertises but one double bill change a week in newspapers.

Single Feature Decision Functions at Detroit

The first three weeks of a ban on double-billing in Detroit finds the single-feature rule operating in highly satisfactory manner. A check up reveals only a few of the 139 exhibitors in the district openly defying the ban. Local Allied leaders say that about 7 per cent of the theatres that signed the agreement have violated it since it went into operation, but they hold that most of these violations were due to misunderstanding and that exhibitors who have been warned agreed not to repeat their violations.

There is, of course, still considerable double-billing in Detroit, due to the fact exhibitors are allowed to show two features on one change a week.

Short Subject Sales Bound Upward with Change of Policy; Kansas City Returns to "Gentlemen's Agreement"

Sees Box Office Receipts Better

Evidence of improved theatre business has been given by Major Louis Lazar, general zone manager for Warner theatres in New York State, who reports a 30 per cent increase in the attendance at the houses under his supervision. Theatre receipts, according to Major Lazar, reached their lowest point during the last two weeks in July and the first two in August. Since then the upward trend has been slow but steady, with adverse weather conditions making the rise notable.

"The improvement in theatre conditions is of particular interest to merchants in every line of business," said Major Lazar, "because business men and economists have observed a direct relation between attendance at theatres and retail sales.

"Our confidence that the present improvement is a sure indication of a more optimistic turn of mind in the public and a greater willingness to spend money for things aside from the bare necessities of living will be reflected in the increased amount of money spent by Warner Brothers in advertising the offerings of their theatres. Events of the past three years have definitely indicated that motion picture theatres are the last to feel the effects of an upset in economic conditions—and the first to react to an upturn," Major Lazar said.

KATZ PUTS PRODUCING ON DEFINITE PROGRAM

Paramount Production Executive Revamps Studio Organization, Takes Stock of Creative Assets, and Eliminates Uncertainties

by LEO MEEHAN
Hollywood Staff Correspondent

We suspect that most every exhibitor, at one time or another, has wished he might try his hand at making a motion picture. Perhaps it was after he took it on the chin playing a bad one, consoling himself with the thought, "if I couldn't make a better one than that. . . ." Possibly it was after he read about all the money directors and production executives are supposed to be paid. Or, it may have been when he was on a little trip to Hollywood, where he caught the romance and glamour of studio life.

Strangely, perhaps, there are not so many former exhibitors to be found in the ranks of active production executives. There are some who have been through the mill, who have sold tickets, even ushered. By and large, however, these executives seem to come from other fields.

But right now the Boss of the Works in one of the largest producing organizations in the history of pictures is an exhibitor. He is Sam Katz, who sits behind the big desk in the inside front office at Paramount. Although on this job only a few months, he has almost completely revamped the entire organization, its policies, its operating routine, its plans. That is a man-size job even in normal times; with things the way they have been of late, it is a tremendous task.

Yet Sam Katz has not lost his sense of proportions, his good humor, his incurable optimism. When I asked him the other day how he liked the production end of the business he answered, "Well, I really don't know, to be perfectly frank about it. I seem to have been so busy I haven't had a chance to sit back and ask myself whether I like it or not."

But that isn't the answer. No one could be so engrossed in planning and executing the making of 65 motion pictures, and not like the job. Furthermore, he has the task of reconstructing an entire production machine.

But Mr. Katz is a natural builder—probably he played mostly with blocks when he was a youngster. And he is methodical. He looks over his materials first.

He believes that in mass production there must be a definite direction in which each unit is headed. One of the first things he did was to call for a list of creative production assets, and liabilities: actors, directors, writers, technical experts, production executives and the like. He analyzed what they had done and might do. As quickly as considered judgment dictated, he began dropping those whom he could not see as possible assets, and shaping up specific programs for those who had something useful, salable.

With him it was not a case of shooting a picture starring Chevalier, and then proceeding to look for another story. He wanted everyone concerned to know what Paramount was going to do with Chevalier for the next year, or more. The same with Lubitsch, or Wynne Gibson, or George Raft—any of those whom he considered assets. He wanted to eliminate as much uncertainty as possible for each employee in the whole studio organization, to feel that he was headed for some definite objective.

Mr. Katz says he isn't trying to make million dollar pictures, or $200,000 pictures. He says a thorough survey of the market indicated that Paramount might reasonably expect a certain estimated amount of revenue during the coming season. Therefore, a certain amount of money could be spent on production. So with him it isn't so important whether this picture is costing a million dollars as it is to know that a couple of others are coming along which will balance up the budget—and that all three are worth every dollar expended upon them. In other words, he believes a line of moving pictures must have "leaders," like any other line of merchandise.

He knows it isn't in the cards to produce an epic once a week. But he knows there must be several smash hits in the year, and that the patrons expect first grade entertainment every time they lay down their money.

Mr. Katz believes Paramount has a group of A-1 players, as well as first class writing, directorial and technical talent. He is trying to smooth the way so that all this talent can work on definite production plans.

Fox West Coast Named in 3 Suits

Southern California independent exhibitors, following meetings for several months, have made good their threats to take legal action against Fox West Coast and distributors, on the basis of alleged inability to purchase film until Fox West Coast had completed its buying. Three suits have been instituted in Los Angeles federal court within the past two weeks against the circuit and distributors, charging restraint of trade and conspiracy to "ruin" independent exhibitors.

The first suit, brought by the Long Beach Theatre Company, asked damages of $750,000 and an injunction to prevent further alleged illegal practices. A second action, filed by Pacific National Theatres, Inc., operators of the Mission, Superba and Plaza in San Diego and the Nile in Bakersfield, asked damages totaling $780,000 on practically the same allegations. The third and most recent was brought by Glendale Capital Theatres, Ltd., operators of three houses in Glendale, against Fox West Coast, RKO Radio Pictures Corporation and seven other distributors. Asking damages of $345,000, the plaintiff contends that since the first of the year the defendants have illegally combined and "refused to sell first run quality pictures to the plaintiff, with the result that its theatres have suffered irreparable losses."

Richmond-Mayer Sues Publishers Of Sheet Music

Suit for $1,125,000 damage against the recently organized Music Service, Inc., was filed last week in the United States district court in New York by Richmond-Mayer Music Corporation of New York and Chicago, which charges violation of the Sherman and Clayton anti-trust acts. Defendants are Ager, Yellen and Bornstein, Inc., Irving Berlin, Inc., Con Conrad Music Publishers, Ltd., DeSylva, Brown and Henderson, Inc., Donaldson, Douglas and Gumble, Inc., Harms, Inc., Famous Music Corporation, M. Witmark, Inc., and John G. Paine, organizer of Music Dealers Service, Inc.

Charging that the new jobbing concern has "maliciously" impaired the business of music jobbers, the plaintiffs argued that the companies named entered into a conspiracy for the purpose of "wrongfully and unlawfully dominating and controlling the sheet music industry in the United States and wrongfully and unlawfully destroying the lawful trade of the plaintiffs in the several, and driving the plaintiffs out of business."

An unusual triangle exists in the fact that Maurice Richmond, who is general manager of the defendant, Music Dealers Service, Inc., is still technically president of the Richmond-Mayer interests. Although Mr. Richmond cast his vote against the suit, it is said that he was overruled by his partners, Max Mayer, treasurer, and Jacob Marcus, secretary of the plaintiff company.

Mr. Richmond stated on Saturday that the Music Dealers Service is a "non-profit operating unit bent upon economizing for the public by cutting out the expense of the middleman."

"Instead of each company shipping its sheet music to dealers from their own offices as before," Mr. Richmond explained, "the new central shipping point is merely an attempt to economize in keeping with general business conditions. The individual publishers have kept the rest of their businesses intact. They still go out and get famous crooners to plug their songs. They're still fighting each other as hard as they ever were."

Music jobbers are watching the suit with a great deal of interest. Prominent among them are Jenkins Music Company, Kansas City; Lyon & Healy, Chicago; Sherman, Clay and Company, San Francisco.

B. B. Kahane Is Elected to MPPDA Board of Directors

B. B. Kahane, president of Radio Pictures, was elected to the board of directors of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, as the RKO Pathe representative, at the third quarterly meeting last week.

The meeting had been postponed from September 2, due to the absence of Will H. Hays. The election of Mr. Kahane gives the RKO organization double representation on the board, since Merlin H. Aylesworth, president of RKO, was elected some time ago to represent that company.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

A MURDER or suicide halted the awarding of a Nash automobile by the St. Louis Amusement circuit in a tieup with 350 merchants who are members of the St. Louis Independent Merchants Sales Plan.

A capacity audience had gathered the other night in the Florissant theatre to learn the winner. But no award was made because Arthur Floescher, sponsor of the citywide giveaway, was not on hand. Morning papers, in explaining Mr. Floescher's sudden disappearance, said he had been found shot to death in a wooded thicket near House Springs in Jefferson County. Beside the body was a new single-barreled shotgun and near it lay what appeared to be a note torn to bits and undecipherable. The coroner's jury returned an open verdict, after friends of Floescher recalled that two racketeers had attempted to "muscle in" on the merchants' sales plan, whereby dealers paid the promotor $3 a week as a service charge, a weekly total of $1,050, and also $1.60 for each 1,000 coupons which they gave to customers. The first two cars of a group of eight were paid for and duly awarded.

Balaban and Katz have utilized the photo-electric cell at drinking fountains operated at certain of its Chicago theatres. A sign over the soda bar urges patrons to "Bend over and drink—the electric eye does the rest," and as the dubious theatregoer follows this advice, the fountain sends up a cooling stream of water, giving the effect of some mysterious but beneficent force at work. The patron interrupts an invisible beam when he bends over the fountain, thus setting the wheels in motion.

PUBLICITY writers at National Broadcasting provide us with this choice bit of merriment which might also explain certain phases of celluloid osculation:

"Alexander McQueen, who tells 'Nothing But the Truth' over NBC networks, once kissed 100 girls in the interests of science. Someone asked Mr. McQueen why a girl closes her eyes while she is being kissed. After a week of intensive research, he announced these results: 72 per cent of the girls closed both eyes during the entire period of osculation; 3 per cent closed one eye; 4 per cent started with eyes open, but soon closed them. The other 21 per cent kept both eyes wide open all the time."

"In the interests of science," NBC explains, "McQueen asked the girls why, or why they did not, close their eyes. Representative answers, McQueen says, were: 1—Said she habitually closes her eyes because her boy friend is not very good-looking. 2—Closed her eyes because his mustache tickled her. 3—Said she always closes her eyes because she likes to imagine she is being kissed by Rudy Vallee. 4—Said she closes her eyes because a kiss with her is a very serious matter and she wants to shut out from her mind everything but the fact that she's been kissed."

He says that "potentially-great players are wasted on petticoat-dramas, rooster-kissing, and displays that are not nice."

Though gross business of RKO'S nationwide theatre circuit is still at a lower level than last year, improvement because of economies has set in. In the past four weeks, receipts have increased between 12½ and 15 per cent. It was tough on a few individuals, Mr. Stuart reported, "but we must think of the company right now." The present regime plans to reduce cost of operating the circuit by $3,000 per day.

COSTLY GIFT AWARDS DENOUNCED BY THEATRE LEADERS OF NATION

Circuit Executives and Local Theatremen Say Drawings for Expensive Articles Result in Ruinous Competition

Local theatre operators and executives of national circuits joined this week in a general denunciation of the current practice of awarding large prizes, usually by means of ticket stub drawings on theatre stages, as a lure for box office patronage. The system was pronounced impracticable when used over a period, reacting as a boomerang and causing ruinous competition because of ever mounting costs.

Last week MOTION PICTURE HERALD published a detailed analysis of the situation as it exists in principal key cities, comprehensive reports showed that the practice in its present extreme form is considered an evil and efforts have been launched to curb it. Unfavorable reaction of theatre owners was directed to the awarding of expensive gifts such as automobiles, refrigerators and cash, and did not embrace the time-honored custom of "giveaways" of small gifts and novelties as door prizes. Exhibitors for the most part believe there is and always will be room for gifts for exploitation tieups, gifts which in general are presented at the door to everyone, and in which no stage drawings or lucky number selections are involved.

Results of the key city reports indicated that:

1. Expensive gifts as a steady diet are ineffective.
2. Exhibitors are turning their attention from the false stimulus to the merchandising of pictures.
3. Most steady patrons revolt at having their entertainment cluttered up with ballyhoo about raffles and stage awards.
4. Large circuits and small theatre interests in many locations were engaging in a costly competitive battle as a result of the practice.
5. Many exhibitors adopted the plan in order to meet reduced admission prices of local competition, others because of a protection situation.
6. Some local merchants said their business suffered and decided to refuse further aid to theatres in exploitation tieups and window displays.
7. Extremities of awards ranged from $2,500 in cash weekly to three automobiles given away each week and to a complete home fully furnished.

Among the circuit operators who have decided against the plan is Sam Dembow, who said that Publix is practically eliminating large gifts. This circuit engaged in the practice on a wholesale scale during the summer. H. M. Richey is leading Allied exhibitors of Michigan in a vigorous campaign against them, and P. J. Nolan, of Ottawa, said that he suffered no drop in business after doing away with a gift policy. Lee Ochs declared that gifts are a failure, and Walter Vincent, head of Wilmer and Vincent, concurred. A few operators favor the plan. M. A. Lightman, president of the MPTOA, did not condemn it when used moderately, nor did George Skouras, vice-president of Skouras Theatres Corporation, which operates the nationwide Fox theatre interests. One of the country's oldest and most important theatre operators, who asked that his name be withheld, said: "Under normal conditions give nothing but the show, and any deviation always leads to a prostituted show business, as is now going on nationally. However, the poor showman must eat, as do all others, and who can say that banking is banking today, in the common sense of the word?

"Prizes can be as damaging as the so-called de luxe operations have been to show business, which advanced us from show business to the window-dressers' association, as a substitute for poor attractions."

Expressions of opinion of some 32 other leaders of exhibition follow:

System Differentiated from Tie-ups with Films, Using Inexpensive Articles as Business Builders; Local Situations Factor

HARRY ARTHUR, President, Arthur Theatres Corp., New Haven

The practice of awarding prizes, gifts, or anything else in the theatres always has been and always will be detrimental, and it is simply a question of when we will become cognizant of the ill effects.

The fundamental principle of the theatre is to furnish entertainment, and any time that the theatre digresses from this established policy it is on dangerous ground.

The only permanently successful theatres throughout the United States are those that have adhered strictly to the policy of: "Give the best possible entertainment at the lowest possible admission price."

SAM DEMBOW, JR., Vice-President, Publix Theatres Corp., New York

In times of depression, exhibitors are inclined to resort to every conceivable means of bringing people into the theatres, and we, like many of the other circuits and independent operators, used the medium of giveaways and prizes in order to stimulate business. While in some instances such methods resulted in improved grosses, still, in other situations, they meant absolutely nothing.

Wherever we employed such media, we usually did so in connection with local merchant tieups, which tended to stimulate business generally in the locality.

However, with the advent of the new product, and more seasonable weather, we are practically eliminating giveaways.

H. M. RICHEY, General Manager Allied Theatres of Michigan, Detroit

The giveaway proposition is like a cancer. Once it starts, theatre owners start vying to see who can give away the most.

Naturally with a lot of money spent on gift nights, costs had to be cut. If it had continued, film rentals would have to come down.

All in all, when carried to the extreme that it was carried to in Detroit there is no money in this sort of thing and eventually every one loses. The trouble is they start normal as a little business booster and end up by almost giving away the theatre.

HARMON YAFFA, Vice-President Lee A. Ochs' Theatres, New York

When we observed a number of theatre owners apparently stimulating their business by giving away various types of gifts, we followed suit.

This included not only items which we purchased outright for "merchant tie-ups" but really valuable articles that were worth a considerable sum.

With every bit of emphasis at our command, we want to tell you that all of these socalled "giveaways" proved to be failures over a period of time.

I feel that the sooner our fellow exhibitor realizes that all we have to sell the public is entertainment with no gadgets attached to it, the sooner our business will increase.

WALTER VINCENT, Vice-President Wilmer & Vincent Corp., New York

As far back as 1907, this company learned that the gift policy at the theatre was worthless.

The theatre has something to sell, i. e., entertainment. If it cannot give the type of entertainment that the public will patronize, we have not found that any gift policy will intrigue them to the extent of minimizing losses or increasing profits.

FRED S. MEYER, President, MPTO of Wisconsin and Upper Michigan, Milwaukee

This association is unalterably opposed to any form of lottery. The association recently instructed the president to assure the district attorney that hereafter its members will rigidly observe the provisions of the state lottery law insofar as theatre drawings are concerned.

P. J. NOLAN, Theatre Owner, Ottawa

Only recently Mr. Nolan announced the abolishment of gift nights and said he did not have one complaint. At the start, he said, gift nights did attract capacity crowds on the two off-nights of the week. The prizes were of good quality. Mr. Nolan pointed out that he is now making more money.

HAROLD B. FRANKLIN, President, Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corp., New York

The practice was an evil the day it was started, and the managements that resort to these methods or other artificial stimulants acknowledge their incapability to operate theatres. There can be no future to a theatre that has to stimulate business through artificial means. If there is to be any future for the motion picture theatre, and there is, it must stand on its own. Fortunately, most of the theatres in the country are being operated as such, and not as merchandise marts.

While temporarily the practice of such dubious devices may help the box-office, it is not of a lasting quality.

D. J. SELZNICK, MPTO of Western Pennsylvania

Found that during a period of 52 weeks the cost of the premiums more than offset the difference in business, and therefore would go on record saying that the giving away of premiums at the theatre is really a menace to the industry.

E. M. LOEW, President, E. M. Loew's Theatres, Boston

In New England, if a theatre turns into a grocery or furniture store or gambling place, it ceases to receive the patronage of the better class of people. It is understood, however, that only second or third run theatres practice this policy. Those theatres are badly suppressed by the producer-controlled theatres, which have bargain matinees at ten cents and reduced balcony prices evenings which are equal to the regular admission prices of the second or third run theatres. That exhibitor is surely in a bad position and in order to hold on to his investment he is compelled to try everything. And I do not blame anyone for trying to hold on.

URGE A RETURN TO SHOWMANSHIP

ARTHUR LUCAS.
Theatre Owner, Atlanta

We are unalterably opposed to lotteries, prizes, etc., it being our opinion that there is something radically wrong when patronage cannot be secured on the merits of the offerings presented.

R. A. McNEIL, General Manager, Golden State Theatre Corp., San Francisco

If we could show our pictures in our district theatres within a reasonable length of time after first run, we probably would not have to give away prizes to our patrons.

If the exhibitor were not forced to buy the entire product of a company to get one outstanding picture, I believe it would go a long way toward solving this problem.

GLEN W. DICKINSON, President, Dickinson Theatres, Kansas City

I think it is a decided detriment to the business and, as far as our circuit is concerned, it is not being used. I am also against merchant tieups of any kind.

TONY SUDEKUM, President, Crescent Amusement Co., Nashville

During this period of dull business we have from time to time tried various giveaways of automobiles, gold money, etc., and after every campaign we think we will not repeat it, but we find ourselves trying it again.

Frankly, in our opinion, we do not believe these things are really a help.

H. S. GALLUP, General Manager, Delft Theatres, Marquette, Mich.

I am glad to say that the theatres I operate have never gone in for this sort of advertising extensively; as a matter of fact, over a period of 20 years I don't believe we have indulged in the practice over two or three times, and in my opinion each and every one of those times was a complete failure. It is not going to happen any more.

LAWRENCE BOLOGNINO, Consolidated Amusement Enterprises, New York

They have become a waste of money. I had fairly good results years ago when I was trying to push a new house, but I don't believe that at the present time they bring in the cost. In fact, they have a tendency to cheapen the theatre.

H. ROSENFELD, Sidney Lust Theatres, Washington

Our experience has proven that each theatre must handle the matter according to the situation and merit of the giveaways.

At our theatre in Washington all prizes, raffles and giveaways are out. They have been nothing but a source of trouble. The same applies to the adult situation at our houses in nearby Maryland.

However, we have found that free candy to children at Saturday matinees and prizes to members of our boosters' clubs are very profitable to us.

MART COLE, General Manager, Cole's Chain Theatres, Rosenberg, Tex.

We have used giveaways and consider them of some benefit to our business because the practice is not overdone. The majority of theatres have let this go on until they have spoiled their patrons by expecting something for nothing every time they attend. We believe that with good box office pictures all that is necessary is to use sensible and effective exploitation.

I do not think there is any evil in raffling, nor do I think as a rule it is a box office help in the long run. We find other ways of getting the business.

C. L. NOLTE, General Manager, Durkee's Enterprises, Baltimore

We believe that giveaways of any description, including drawings, lucky numbers, etc., are one of the evils of the industry and unquestionably prove a boomerang at the box office.

In our judgment theatres attempting this policy are doomed.

M. A. LIGHTMAN, President, MPTOA, and Operator of Theatres in Tennessee

This whole thing about double features, bargain nights, giveaways, lotteries, etc., etc., etc., reverts right back to the old story that anything done or taken in excess is harmful and that most anything done or taken moderately is not only not harmful but frequently beneficial.

The only "evil" that generally results is that the exhibitors will run each thing into the ground almost invariably.

I would compare getting rid of a lot of our "weak sisters" that we have under contract to the same status as the merchant cleaning up his merchandise. We have to play the product and we know we are sunk if we don't resort to something to help get rid of it.

JOHN DANZ, President, Sterling Chain Theatres, Seattle

Methods of this nature help a great deal getting the people in the habit of going to shows again because the prizes do draw a great many more people than otherwise would come, and while they are in the house it gives marvelous opportunities for exploitation of future shows. Therefore, I consider it a great help.

It is natural to believe that individuals are bound to differ in opinion, because the manner of approaching, handling, and presenting these various stunts accounts for the results of success or failure. Such being the case, no one can give a definite opinion for all theatres in general.

Our experience to this day has been such that we believe it is necessary to get from the simple refinement of motion-picture and stagecraft, an outside influence to stimulate the desire of the people to patronize the theatres.

E. VAN HYNING, President, MPTO of Kansas-Missouri

Patrons learn to expect them and wait for the occasion; this puts the theatre in the merchandising business and lessens the value of the motion picture, which is or should be the theatres' stock-in-trade. I feel, also, that the policy tends to antagonize the local merchants.

JOHN F. SCHOEPPEL, Manager Warners' Midwest, Oklahoma City

People come to A houses primarily to be entertained, and do not as a rule like to have their entertainment program cluttered up with slides and drawings. However, the drawing plan is not necessarily an evil. If merchants are not willing to donate for the sake of the extensive screen advertising they receive, it is not worth while, for the buying of A prizes will offset the increase in business. The temporary increase in business in some quarters may lose some customers until the contest is closed.

JAMES J. LONG, Manager, Warwick Theatre, Kansas City

Drawings serve as a stimulus for business over a two or three-week period, depending on the length of the contest. Giving chances with admissions for two weeks insures an increase during the two weeks, and the drawing on the opening night of the new week bolsters that week.

FRANK McCABE, Manager, Publix Capitol and Criterion, Oklahoma City

You get an entirely different class of people on gift nights. They are not regular patrons, but attracted by the lure of getting something for nothing.

HARRY WEINBERG, Manager, A. H. Blank Circuit, Des Moines

Giveaways have not been used by the houses of the A. H. Blank chain for the past several years. There is also greater difficulty at this time to make tieups with business concerns on prizes.

JAY MEANS, President, Independent Theatre Owners Association, Kansas City

If you give them something desirable, the gift night will be a success. In some locations giveaways prove a benefit. That also depends on how it is handled.

L. B. SPONSLER, Mokan Theatre, Kansas City

I have had 15 years' experience with giveaways and I have found that they are largely a losing proposition. The motion picture business ought to be dignified and less of a "racket."

HERB GOLLADAY, Linwood Theatre, Kansas City

I conducted a radio gift night recently. We had a better than usual picture. We did a bad business. People figured if we had to give something to make them see the picture, then the show was rotten.

A. BAIER, Manager, Lindbergh Theatre, Kansas City

One woman accumulated about 20 coupons for a drawing at the theatre. She didn't win the prize. She made all kinds of accusations, tore up the coupons and hurled them in my face. She had been a regular patron before that incident, but I haven't seen her since. I know of others who haven't come back.

PROPOSED REDUCTIONS FOR FILM TRANSIT WOULD SAVE THOUSANDS

Plan for 25 Per Cent Cut or General Halving of Rates on All Freight Considered by Railway Express Company

Motion picture theatre owners of the country stand to save several thousands of dollars yearly in express charges on film shipments, if plans for reduced tariffs, now being formulated, become operative. A reduction of slightly more than 25 per cent each way on express film shipments, or a general reduction of 50 per cent on all kinds of freight, are among the plans now being discussed by the Railway Express Agency (the name taken when the several national railway express companies were merged) for submission to the railroads of the country, permission of which is essential to obtain lower tariffs. It is expected that a decision will be reached by the first of the year after the railroads and state commissions have had opportunity to consider the various R. E. A. proposals.

An application for rate reduction on film shipments, now pending before the Arkansas Railroad Commission, is that of exhibitors in Arkansas, Mississippi and Tennessee and is an independent movement apart from R. E. A.'s plans for lower tariffs. A hearing in the tri-state case is scheduled for this week.

Reductions Granted in Southeast

Rate reductions have been granted in the last year or two in the southeastern territory by the Railway Express Agency and the Southern Railway, which serves the area south of Washington, D. C., and west to the Mississippi River. A reduction of 50 per cent on return shipments, granted by both the R. E. A. and the Southern Railway, has been extended by the R. E. A. to Jan. 1, 1933. Another rate reduction also was effected in Texas some months ago.

Figures compiled some time ago by A. S. Dickinson, of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, show an approximate total of 120,815 shipments of film made weekly—or 240,000 movements, from exchanges to exhibitors and return, each week. Shipments by motor delivery service amounted to about 60 per cent; express shipments, 25 per cent, and parcel post, 15 per cent. Although the total number of film shipments is smaller now, the percentages of the total number remain approximately the same for the various services used. Air service frequently is being used in rushes from laboratories and for negative and first print shipments from Hollywood to home offices in New York.

New York, followed by Chicago, leads in poundage of all kinds of express traffic forwarded and received through the air express division of the Railway Express Agency, according to that company. Los Angeles is third and San Francisco fourth on the list of 85 leading cities on the route of United Air Lines, Northwest Airways, National Park Airways and Western Air Express, over which R. E. A. operates its air service, totaling an air mileage in excess of 10,000 miles.

During September, it was said, there was a noticeable increased use of air shipping for the swift movement of news films from cameramen assigned to record national events to New York for development and quick release to theatres. Following extensive filming of the Olympic Games at Los Angeles, the presidential conventions in Chicago, the American Legion convention in Portland, Ore., and Governor Roosevelt's campaign tour of the west, pictures were on theatre screens in the east within two days of the actual taking of the pictures, R. E. A. said.

In view of the proposals for rate reductions now being prepared by the Railway Express Agency, the MPPDA contact men, located in St. Louis, Chicago, San Francisco and several other key cities, will be advised to halt temporarily their activities in connection with campaigns to obtain film rate changes until the R. E. A. obtains a final decision from the railroads.

An organized effort to bring about rate reductions throughout the country was begun by the MPPDA a little more than a year ago, when J. H. Butner, branch manager of Educational Films in Atlanta, Ga., took up the question. The reduction now in effect in the southeastern territory was put through after six months of intensive work by southern exchange and theatre interests.

When the MPPDA organized its special crew to campaign for express tariff reductions in film shipments, their first contact with the R. E. A. was with operating vice-presidents of the Agency, who are located at important territorial centers from New York to the West Coast. As far back as December, 1931, the Railway Express Agency called in its five operating vice-presidents for conferences on rate reductions.

The exhibitor pays freight on film shipments both ways, from exchange and return. Motor delivery predominates in large key cities, having superseded express and parcel post service within the city because of its convenience. Usually in small towns in using express shipments by railroad, the exhibitor must deposit the film at the local freight station after his last show. Also, he must pick up the film. The post office branch of the federal government is now seeking to raise its charges on parcel post.

Admit Evidence in $1,000,000 Suit Against Distributors

Documents and evidence said to be relative to procedure against theatre owners were admitted on Tuesday by Judge C. C. Hincks in the United States court at Hartford, Conn., in the hearing on the $1,000,000 damage suit brought by Allan C. Morrison, former owner of the Majestic of Hartford against Fox, Vitagraph, United Artists and the New Haven Film Board of Trade. Mr. Morrison claims that his business was ruined by an illegal combination of film companies.

Albee Estate Is $3,276,012 Net

Edward F. Albee left a net estate of $3,276,012 on March 11, 1930, the date of his death. A tax appraisal was filed Tuesday in Westchester County.

Mrs. Albee, who is the recipient of the major portion of the estate, gets $1,000,000 outright, the Mamaroneck home and furnishings and the residue, which amounts to $846,661. The Actors Fund of America and the Percy Williams Home, New York, receive $100,000 each. Variety Artists Benevolent Fund and Institution, London, receives $50,000 and St. John's Episcopal Church in Larchmont, N. Y., $25,000.

Additional personal bequests included those to Edwin G. Lauder, Jr., a son-in-law; Reed A. Albee, a son; Percy F. Albee, a nephew; Grace Rose, a niece; Mabelle Rose, a grandniece; Edna Hurd, a niece; Charles Page, a cousin; Abbie Dickey, a cousin; Edward Oakwood, a grandnephew; Amy Oakwood; Ethel Lauder, a daughter, and Mary E. Smith, a sister-in-law. The executors are Mrs. Albee, Reed A. Albee, Mr. and Mrs. Lauder and Mr. Walter.

Johnston to Coast to Push Monogram Program

W. Ray Johnston left New York Tuesday for California to map production plans for Monogram Pictures for the balance of the season. Monogram studios are completing this week "Strange Adventure," and are now shooting "Guilty or Not Guilty." The Bob Steele unit, under the direction of Robert Bradbury, Sr., started work this week on "Young Blood," while the Rex Bell unit starts work next week, under the direction of Harry Fraser, on "The Rangers Ride Again."

William T. Lackey starts production the week following on "Man's Law." Immediately following the E. H. Hoffman unit will start shooting "West of Singapore," to be directed by Albert Ray. Richard Boleslavsky will join Monogram to direct "Black Beauty." Following this the Lackey unit will start "God's Country."

Poster Exchanges Discard Bureau and Protest Plans

The plans of independent poster exchanges in all key cities to organize central poster bureaus and to hold a national protest meeting against the practice of Paramount and Fox in refusing to sell the leasing companies accessories have been completely dropped.

Neither Fox nor Paramount contemplates legal action, both ignoring the poster rental concerns as regards the sale of advertising material. Fox had threatened such action recently, but had been dissuaded.

Hiram S. Brown Is Chairman of General Pictures

Hiram S. Brown, former RKO president, has been appointed chairman of the board of General Pictures, Inc., organized by the executives of Beacon Films.

It is expected that General Pictures will contract for twelve films annually from independents and undertake the establishment of approximately 17 exchanges in key cities.

Beacon Films, which was organized about a year ago to service the non-theatrical field, will be permitted to lapse when the new company commences operations, it is understood. All of its officers will become active in General Pictures. Roy Gates is president of Beacon Films.

New Lasky Firm Is Incorporated

The state of California has granted Jesse L. Lasky, former Paramount official, permission to incorporate his new company under the name Jesse L. Lasky Productions, Inc. In addition to Mr. Lasky, directors named are Lloyd Wright and Charles E. Willikan.

Interviewed in New York Tuesday night, Mr. Lasky refused to talk about his plans at present other than to remark that when he was able to make an announcement it would be "a good one." He expected to complete final arrangements within the next few weeks. Mr. Lasky also refused to comment on the report that he will make one or two pictures for United Artists release or on the question of whether his claims against Paramount have been settled. He expects to be in New York for six or seven weeks.

McCarthy's Salary Suit Settled by Paramount

Suit for $1,750 of salary, which was in arrears, was brought recently against Paramount by Charles McCarthy, advertising chief, but since has been dropped following settlement in full by the company.

Mr. McCarthy, in filing the suit, claimed that this amount was due him since Paramount ignored its contract with him in forcing a salary cut. A check making payment in full was sent Nathan Burkan, plaintiff's attorney. Mr. McCarthy's contract with Paramount runs until March 1, 1935.

"What will happen between now and then remains to be seen," said Mr. McCarthy, who still occupies an office on the fourteenth floor at New York headquarters.

Majestic Has Coast Exchanges

Heavy Columbia Production Set

Columbia's Coast production is geared to a high point of activity with 20 features, said to involve an expenditure of several millions, scheduled for completion between now and January 1.

Ben Pivar has been relieved of the supervision of the Buck Jones series of westerns and will supervise six features on the regular schedule. His first will be "Obey the Law," with William Collier, Jr., and Joan Marsh. He also will continue in charge of foreign productions.

Eight Columbia features already completed include "Washington Merry-Go-Round," "The Bitter Tea of General Yen," "Virtue," "Vanity Street," "The Double," "That's My Boy," "Wild Horse Stampede," "Fighting for Justice." Among the 20 scheduled for the balance of the year are "No More Orchids," "In the Jungle," with Wheeler and Woolsey; "Child of Manhattan," "East of Fifth Avenue," three Buck Jones features and three with Tim McCoy.

Skouras, Bondholders to Settle Roxy Name Impasse

Spyros Skouras will meet with bondholders for the Roxy Theatre early next week in another effort to iron out the name situation of the house. Mr. Skouras has decided that the name should be changed to "World's," but bondholders are opposed to a change, calling the present name an asset.

The name "Roxy" has already been put on one of the Radio City houses by RKO, which plans to sue if bondholders maintain their present stand.

Warner to Repeat National Exhibit With New Films

Warner has announced plans to follow the "Warner Brothers National Exhibit" of August, at which completed product for the new season was shown to exhibitors and the general press, with a similar affair some time in January or February. The "exhibit," held in various key cities over the country, will include previews of 15 features, completed by that date and set for release in March, April, May and June. The success of the first showings is said to have dictated its early repetition.

As before, exhibitors and their guests will be accommodated at hotels in the screening cities. A national publicity campaign in daily newspapers will precede the showings.

The 15 features to be shown, now in various stages of production or preparation include: "The Adopted Father," starring George Arliss; "The Match King," starring Warren William; "Lawyer Man," starring William Powell and Joan Blondell; "Parachute," starring Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.; "Wax Museum," with Lionel Atwill and Glenda Farrell; "Common Ground," starring Ruth Chatterton; "Employees Entrance," starring Loretta Young, Warren William; "Sucker," starring Richard Barthelmess; "Radio Girl," starring Bebe Daniels; "The Adventuress," starring William Powell and Kay Francis; "Grand Slam," "Women in Prison," starring Barbara Stanwyck; "42nd Street," with Richard Barthelmess, Bebe Daniels; "The Inside," and "Blondie Johnson," with Joan Blondell.

Lutheran Group Will Ask Federal Film Supervision

A resolution calling for federal supervision of motion pictures is to be introduced at the biennial convention of the United Lutheran Church in America, to be held in Philadelphia October 12 to 19. The resolution states the present system of censorship has shown itself to be ineffective.

The proposed supervision, the resolution states, "should be applied by federal inspectors before the proposed pictures are filmed, and should extend to interstate and foreign commerce." The resolution also indicts the present system of block booking, by which the large companies force "upon the communities of our land a dangerously high percentage of pictures that are salacious and inciting to crime."

Paramount Follows Other Reels, Signing Union Pact

Paramount News this week signed the union newsreel agreement designed to eliminate labor trouble for the next year. Pathe News, Fox Movietone News and Hearst Metrotone have already signed the one-year agreement with cameramen's unions in New York, Chicago and Los Angeles.

The terms of the contract in part provide that newsreel companies may transfer cameramen from one city to another within the respective jurisdictions of the locals concerned.

VICTORIA'S PREMIER WOULD ADD $500,000 TO ENTERTAINMENT TAX

New Measure Would Take Nearly a Million and a Half from the Industry, and That on Top of Federal Levies

by CLIFF HOLT
Sydney Correspondent

Unduly heavy already, amusement taxation in Victoria will be considerably increased if the proposals of the premier, Sir Stanley Argyle, meet with the approval of the Victorian Parliament. Under a new bill, the government hopes to raise an additional $500,000 a year from the various branches of outdoor and indoor amusements. In the last financial year, the Victorian government drained the entertainment industry of $903,735; this financial year, the new bill would take from it nearly $1,500,000, and on top of that, federal taxation must be paid.

A protest from the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association declared that such an added burden would throw hundreds more people out of work. The premier's statement that the entertainment business was not an industry might be regarded as farcical if the position were not so serious. The entertainment business—which is not an industry—has given employment to 3,200 Victorians at an annual wage of $1,875,000.

The secretary of the Australian Theatrical Employees Association, A. E. Huckerby, declared he would recommend to theatre proprietors that they close up their shows for a week as a protest; while the Trades Hall Council passed a resolution calling the proposed levies "a class taxation, imposing further burdens on the workers."

Politicians still seem to be disillusioned of the old myth that the amusement business is one of huge profits. If they are, it's time that myth was completely and for all time dispelled.

The big companies didn't pay dividends last year, and probably won't this year; the smaller companies are in worse straits. Yet governments go on taxing out of existence the industry that was declared essential during the war.

Free Rein to Managers

N. Bernard Freeman, chief of MGM in Australia, and Charles E. Munro, managing director of Hoyt's circuit, have returned to Sydney after visits to New York. Their statements are worthy of a little thought.

Mr. Freeman says: "There's nothing in the business that good pictures cannot cure. A good picture will still bring pre-depression figures to the box-office."

Munro says: "Standardized theatre operation will be discarded by Hoyt's. In future, each house manager will be given his head. It will be up to him, by his own showmanship and ingenuity, to turn his theatre into a profit-maker. If a man can't show a profit for the company, as he might do for himself, then his job is outside the picture industry. We will, in future, give free rein to managers. Receipts will determine their success or failure."

We knew that good pictures will still draw; we knew that standardized theatre operation was impracticable; in that respect neither Mr. Freeman nor Mr. Munro has told us anything particularly new. But they have emphasized two points that should no longer be doubted, or misunderstood, by any one in show business.

Self-Styled Moralists

Silly censorship!

How often has this game of amusing people been subjected to just that! Here in Australia we have a censor, Cresswell O'Reilly, who has received so much international publicity that the newspapers have tired of printing any more copy about him.

Now in New Zealand there comes an outburst against Censor Tanner, who has censored pictures for a long, long time. It's all over "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde." Mr. Tanner allowed its exhibition, while those people, who, as W. H. Mooring writes, are not so intent on cleansing theatres as closing them, object to the whole film. For the last week or so, New Zealand papers have devoted columns of space to protests against this very excellent picture, most of it along the same lines as this piece of utter balderdash: "And from the silver-screen—heaven help us, the silver screen!—the whispered suggestion of inverted morals, the plain talk of evil done or to be done, the sigh of satiated cravings, the loud laugh or sniggering sneer at emaciated virtue—the chorus from a spate of men and women hurtling to the devil!"

What sheer nonsense!

It is noticeable that there are few, practically no, replies in defense of the picture—far better to ignore this sort of rubbish—and that, significantly, it has been drawing record attendances wherever it has been shown in the Dominion.

Bound for a Record

Many pictures bearing the hallmark of success have reached Australia in the last 12 months; but none has carried with it that assurance of big attendance quite so strongly as George Arliss' "The Man Who Played God." Here is a picture that will very nearly, if not altogether, gross more than any imported picture for the last season. It has made only one appearance in Australia, but that appearance has been so sensational that Ralph Clark, head of Warners in this country, is justified in feeling confident that he has the picture of the year. "The Man Who Played God" has just commenced an extended season at the Plaza theatre, Sydney, a house which considers itself doing pretty well if it takes $6,000 in a week. That would be doing particularly well, in fact. The Arliss film attracted $10,250 worth, or 70 per cent above what is generally called "pretty good" business. There never has been a week at the Plaza like that which accompanied the premiere of "The Man Who Played God." There were queues, turn-aways, even complaints from patrons that they were unable to gain admittance. What need is there to tell us that good pictures are the solution?

Russian Comedies Next: FitzPatrick

James A. FitzPatrick, short subject producer releasing through M-G-M, has returned from Russia, where he made two travel shorts which he calls the first neutral, uncensored pictures to come from that country since Sovkino decreed against promiscuous filming by foreign producers.

Mr. FitzPatrick said he had a little difficulty in getting material in Moscow and Leningrad, largely because Soviet officials feared the pictures might give a misconception of Russian conditions.

"I saw no terrible depression or, for that matter, any bad cases of mal-nutrition," he said. "The food shortage in Russia has been brought about because of the necessary exchange of her agricultural products for machinery."

Mr. FitzPatrick noted that Russian pictures in a lighter vein are just coming into evidence.

"About eight out of every ten pictures are propaganda," he continued. "They are designed to show the people how the Plan works. Naturally, the heroes are always the supporters of the Plan."

In the current FitzPatrick travel series, being released through M-G-M, are "Romantic Argentina," "Barbadoes and Trinidad—gardens of the Caribbean," "Moscow—Heart of Soviet Russia," "Rio the Magnificent," and "Leningrad—Gateway to Soviet Russia."

Another series of thirteen pictures, "Musical Romances," is in preparation for 1933-34.

RKO Circuit Transfers Blumberg to Chicago Post

Nate Blumberg has been assigned to supervise the Chicago and Omaha territories for RKO with Morgan Ames as his assistant, in one of several important personnel shifts within the circuit. James Christy will accompany Mr. Blumberg, whose headquarters will be in Chicago. Harry Goldberg, manager of the Albee, Brooklyn, has been named city manager in Chicago. Bruce Powell has rejoined the company, on Herschel Stuart's staff.

The central division area includes 19 houses in Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul, Minneapolis, Des Moines, Omaha, Denver, Kansas City, St. Louis, Springfield, Champaign, South Bend. The transfer of Mr. Blumberg will not affect present division upstate managers in Greater New York, upstate New York and New Jersey.

To Make Winchell Series

William Roland-Monte Brice Productions has signed Walter Winchell, New York columnist, for a series of short subjects, each short to picture actual occurrences of Mr. Winchell's Broadway experiences. Universal will release the series.

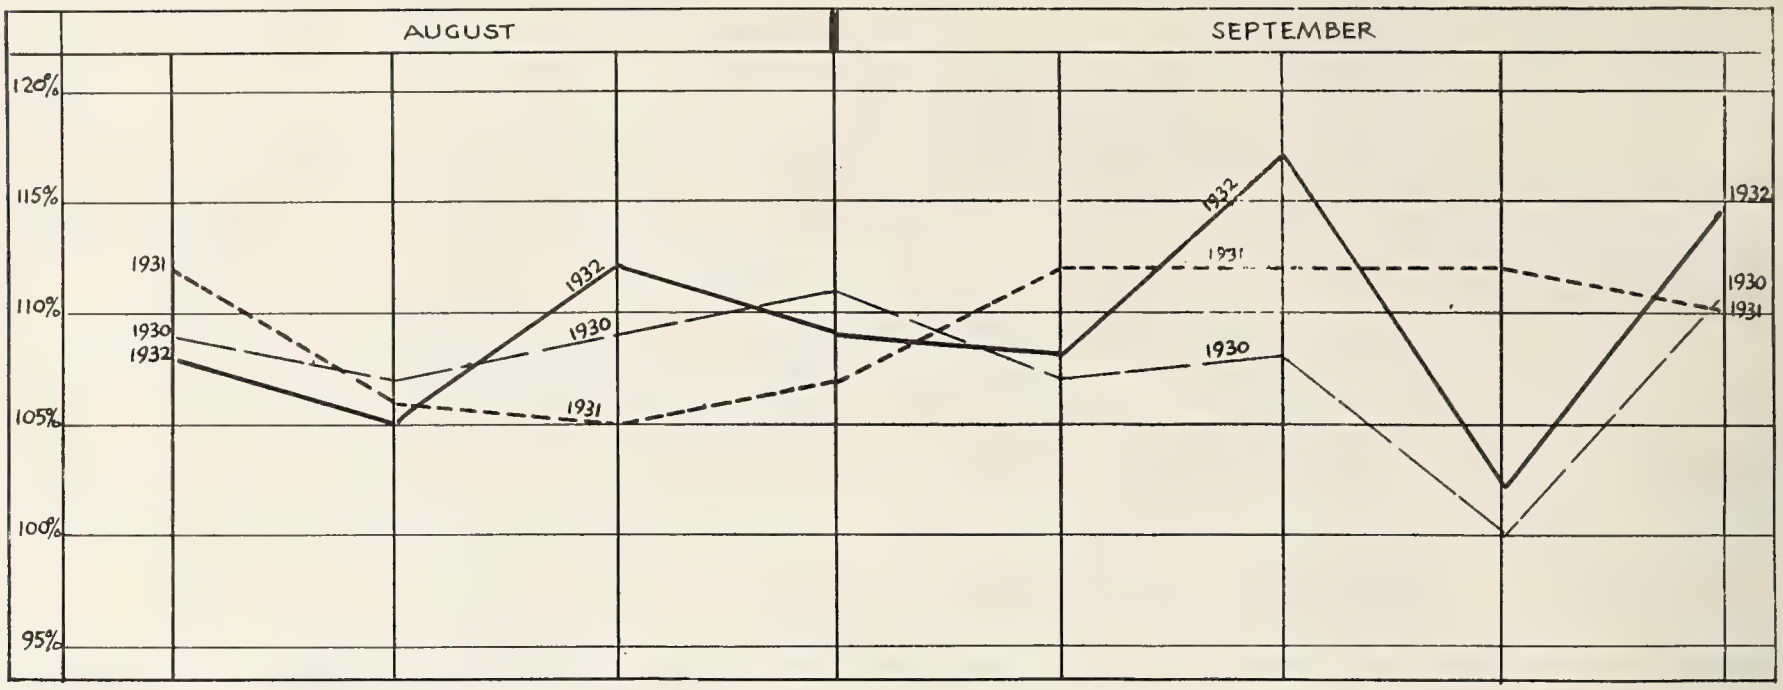
"FALSE FACES" CERTAIN HIT

TOP HONORS GO TO SHERMAN

Story, Production, Get Major Rating

. . . Here's one that any producer or distributor would be happy to tack his name on. It is another hit from K. B. S. for release thru World Wide and it is our guess that Mr. E. W. Hammons and Mr. Joe Brandt will rub their hands, slap each other on the back and start talking turkey to the big ace houses of the country as soon as they see it.



"FALSE FACES" is a new idea to the screen hatched in the brain of Kubec Glasmon, the same brain that gave Warners many of their clickers of the past two years. The Glasmon idea is a winner and this picture will positively do business anywhere there is business to be had.

Did He Take The Women-Including Queens And Shopgirls!

This chart, based upon MOTION PICTURE HERALD's listing of box office grosses, shows the relative changes in business in twelve cities during August and September for the years shown. The gross for the twelve cities for the last week in July of each year is taken as the 100 per cent figure for that year. The cities used are: Boston, Chicago, Cleveland, Hollywood, Kansas City, Los Angeles, Minneapolis, New York, Oklahoma City, Omaha, Portland, and San Francisco.

ASKS MOVING SHOTS IF USED JUDICIOUSLY

But Race of Directors, Writers and Technicians Brings an Orgy of Movement, Says Cinematograph Expert

by J. A. DUBRAY, A.S.C.

I read with much interest last summer Mr. Leo Meehan's article on "Moving Camera Shots." (Issue of July 30). I favor this rather new technique of screen production, providing it be used judiciously and as a means of reaching an end, not as the end that must be reached by any means.

As the matter now stands, it seems the industry started to move the camera around, and thus fell into the common fault of exaggerating the application of a new principle which is, however, excellent in its fundamentals. What the cinematographer advocates is the elimination of unnecessary (and unnecessary in this case means detrimental) and exaggerated moving shots.

It isn't because a moving shot enhances one scene that it will necessarily enhance the next one. It isn't because audiences like these moving shots that they have to be used regardless of story and photographic quality.

If any one of us was forced to eat chicken at every meal, no matter how fond he might be of chicken, he soon would tire of it, especially if he should be served from time to time an old, tough, tasteless hen. It is a characteristic of our people that they are usually carried away by their own enthusiasm (and, believe me, without enthusiasm it would not be possible to produce good pictures), and overdo what would otherwise be perfectly legitimate and even beautiful. Let a producer know that moving shots are liked by audiences, and the word is passed on to directors, writers, technicians, "the camera must move,"—and the camera does move. It is a race among directors, writers and technicians to see who can make it move the most by devising new tricks, new ideas, new movements. Finally, the poor camera not only moves, but soars, jumps, skips and slides in an orgy of movement.

A cinematographer has never protested against any physical exertion which may be his lot at any particular time, and never will protest. What the cinematographer does object to is to be unreasonably deprived of the essential means of producing consistently good photography. The main duty and aim of the photographer is to create a photographic record exalting beauty. Aside from possessing a thorough knowledge of the technical principles, a cinematographer must be endowed with an artistic nature to enable him to sense and reproduce beauty—beauty of scene, beauty of settings, beauty and charm of performers. The only means the cinematographer has at his disposal to reach his goal is the proper distribution of lights and shades. Lighting equipment is used to this effect when equipment is placed in proper position with meticulous care and rare judgment.

It is evident that "moving shots" greatly restrict the cinematographer's freedom in the use of lights, and many times place him in the physically impossible position of arranging them so they will even approach the semblance of an effort to obtain not only artistic but even ordinarily good photography. No one would ask a painter to paint a miniature with a broom instead of the fine brushes which are essential to his work, and this is as clear a parallel as I can find to reasons for my objections to some moving shots.

So let the camera roam around whenever its roaming enhances the dramatic values of the picture. Let the cameraman ever perform "acrobatic feats," if these feats create proper suspense at the proper instant, but do not lose sight of the "professional comfort" that is essential for the cinematographer satisfactorily to perform his duties. If I were a director I would gladly sacrifice the doubtful thrill of a hair-raising, high-flying camera in order to secure and maintain the loveliness of features and character of a Ruth Chatterton or a Norma Shearer, whenever this loveliness was an intrinsic part of the story.

The cinematographer does not want to immobilize the camera. What he wants is to be given intelligent cooperation. Allow him to make a distinction between what is possible and what is impossible, or perhaps I should say inadvisable, when photographic problems are confronted. This will result in more harmonious relations between director and cinematographer, in better pictures, and in a considerable saving of valuable time.

Loew Signs Cleveland Protection Agreement

Loew's, Inc., and RKO have signed the agreement which settled the recent Cleveland independent exhibitors' action against major circuits. Neither Warner nor Publix has signed as yet. The Loew signing is seen as virtual assurance of the disposal of Cleveland protection troubles, as this circuit was principally involved in the original suit.

The agreement concerns a reduction of the protection formerly granted major circuits in Cleveland. It was drafted by representatives of the circuits involved and independent exhibitors. Amounting to a settlement out of court of what was originally intended as a monopoly suit, the agreement was signed by all but three independent exhibitors of Cleveland and sent on to New York for circuit approval. Warner is expected to come into line within a short time.

Wafilms Drops Depot

Wafilms, Inc., has temporarily discontinued its New York shipping depot for negative raw films, the Hollywood facilities having been enlarged to handle the service.

28 BOOKS AND PLAYS PURCHASED IN SEPTEMBER FOR 1932-33 PICTURES

Paramount Leads with Nine, MGM and Radio Next with Six; Studio Scouts Busy; 130 Acquired in Seven Months

Fiction and play purchases reached a high mark for the new season in September when 28 vehicles were purchased for motion picture production. Paramount negotiated screen rights for nine stories or plays; Metro and Radio each bought six; Remington Pictures acquired two, and Allied Pictures, Columbia, Fox, United Artists and Warner purchased one each.

In line with increased activities at Hollywood studios, Columbia appointed A. Everett Riskin as special studio representative and immediately assigned him to New York to buy a number of vehicles for production. Jake Wilk, of Warner, also left on a scouting trip for material. Mr. Wilk recently issued a call to writers to "open their trunks" and dig down for unpublished works of merit which might be lying forgotten. Warner said it is in the market for "off-the-beaten-path" stories. Of the 17 pictures to be released by that company from September to January, eight are based on originals, seven on recently published books and novels and two on Broadway stage plays.

Radio launched its new plan whereby studio executives will be rotated to New York in order to maintain a constantly fresh viewpoint on story material and to gauge more accurately the trend of public taste. The company plans to have at least one studio executive in New York at all times. "The experience will broaden their views," it was said. Story editors are included.

One hundred and thirty published books and plays were purchased in the seven months from March 1 to September 1 by the larger and the independent producers. These purchases for the most part will constitute 1932-33 releases. March was the runner-up in total number of story buys with 25 deals closed at that time. Seventeen were bought in April, 21 in May, 12 each in June and July, and 15 in August. During the seven-month period Metro led all buyers with 29 manuscripts purchased. Paramount bought 24; Warners, 15; World Wide, 14; RKO Radio, 13; Universal, 12; Columbia and Fox, 7 each; Remington and United Artists, 2 each, and one each for Allied Pictures, Chesterfield, Goldburg Productions, Monogram and Paradise Pictures.

Purchases for September follow:

Exempt Film Makers

Attorney General Landis of Florida has ruled that the manufacture of film in the state is exempt from taxation for a period of 15 years. A 1929 law exempted certain types of industrial plants, among them cotton fabrics. Since celluloid is a cotton composition, the attorney general is of the opinion that manufacturers are exempt.

Seat Tax Brings Million Monthly But Falls Short

Admission tax changes carried in the revenue law enacted at the last session of Congress are now providing more than $1,000,000 a month in new revenue, but have not yet come anywhere near the amount estimated for them while the bill was under consideration.

Internal Revenue receipts from the admission tax in August, representing admissions in July, totaled $1,322,695, according to figures just compiled by the Treasury Department at Washington, compared with $205,216 in the same month last year, an increase of $1,117,479. July collections, representing admissions in June, with the new rates in effect only 10 days, were $343,692.

The August figures represent the first full month of operation under the 1932 revenue act, and show that the government's receipts are many millions of dollars under the estimates. Total receipts for the month, from all sources, were $79,940,310, whereas to balance the budget they should be in excess of $100,000,000.

The situation is further accentuated, however, by the fact that, even with the new taxes, collections for the month were but $11,546,170 greater than those for August, 1931, with many of the new levies returning less than half as much as was anticipated from them. At the present rate of collection, revenues for the fiscal year will fall some $200,000,000 or more below the Treasury estimates.

Rivoli Repeats "Juvenile Day"

United Artists will arrange for a second "Juvenile Day" on Saturday at its Rivoli theatre on Broadway in connection with Douglas Fairbanks' "Mr. Robinson Crusoe." Last Saturday, the picture was available to children for the entire day at a special rate, through contacts established with various social and religious groups. One thousand ministers, 500 public schools, 300 YMCA groups, 1,000 parochial schools and a similar number of leaders of women's clubs were notified, in addition to boy and girl scout associations. This was done by letter and through radio broadcasts.

Seider to Open New House

Joe Seider will shortly open the new Smithtown, at Smithtown, L. I., bringing the total of his Prudential circuit to 39. The Northport, in Northport, will open November 1. Many of the houses are merely booked by Seider, being operated by the original owners.

GREEN TAKES ISSUE WITH EMPIRE STATE

AFL President Urges Support of Operators' Local 306; Farkash Says National Independent Movement Is in Abeyance

Taking cognizance of the controversy between New York operators, which reports indicate may soon lead to the formation of an independent national association of local unions affiliated with the Empire State Motion Picture Operators, William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, issued a formal statement Tuesday night in which he urged "full support and recognition" for Local 306 of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and Motion Picture Operators and placed full support of the AFL behind Local 306 in its bitter battle in New York with Empire. The American Federation rarely enters into local controversies involving branch affiliates.

The statement by President Green dissipated all hopes of operators dissatisfied with conditions in Local 306 that a new union might be chartered by the Federation.

"The Empire State M. P. O. Union is not recognized by or affiliated with the American Federation of Labor," Mr. Green declared. "It is not regarded as a bona fide union by the officers and members of the American Federation of Labor. It is regarded as a dual movement, having no relation whatever to our organization or those affiliated with us. We do not regard it as a union in any sense of the term."

Arthur Farkash, president of Empire, said that his interests are not prepared to take action at this time regarding the formation of a national organization. Such an association would bring in dozens of other independent unions now operating in many key cities in competition with IATSE locals.

"I am waiting right now in order to see the outcome of the local situation," he said on Tuesday, referring to the picketing of New York theatres by Local 306 and his own group. "About three weeks ago we held a meeting, attended by representatives of independent local groups from Boston, Hartford, Providence and towns in New Jersey and Pennsylvania, and the idea of organizing a national association was taken up then. However, the idea has been held in abeyance."

During recent months Empire State M. P. O. Union has obtained a number of injunctions restraining Local 306 from picketing theatres signed by Empire. In August, however, the previous decision was reversed by another court, which held that picketing is legal. Much of the union difficulty at that time centered at the Stillwell, Windsor and Rugby theatres in Brooklyn, N. Y. Both Empire and Local 306 are now picketing each other's theatres—50 to 60 in each case. Paramount, Roxy, Mayfair, Capitol and Loew's State are among the New York houses being picketed by Empire.

"Many exhibitors are flocking to us because of the fact that IATSE and MPO tries to dictate how they shall run their theatres," Mr. Farkash said, adding that "if this national plan goes through it will take a severe rap at both that organization and the American Federation of Labor."

Regarding the legal battle now pending, Mr. Farkash said that Empire was ready to take the decision reversing the injunction against picketing to the United States Supreme Court, if necessary. The matter is now in the New York State Court of Appeals for re-argument.

"We claim," said Mr. Farkash, "that picketing is not legal where a contract is in force."

CONSTRUCTION SPURT REFLECTS OPTIMISM OF BRITISH INDUSTRY

Ten Thousand Seats Added by New Houses Opened or About to Start as Business Emerges from Lethargy

by BERNARD CHARMAN
of London Correspondent Staff

The British public is being tickled by the lay press to a state of optimism, and the national dailies have been proving from their detailed analyses of trade and finance in the big world centers that affairs are on the upward trend.

In the cinema trade there appear to be those who share this optimism, for there has been enough activity in the theatre construction field alone in the last several weeks to suggest resuscitated confidence in the power of the box office to draw hard cash from the thinly-lined pockets of the masses. New theatres just open or about to open add an aggregate of well over ten thousand seats to the national total. Among these are two in the industrial Midlands, two in London suburbs, and two at South Coast seaside resorts, which allows the foreteller of better times a wide enough area on which to base his assumptions.

The Gaumont Palace, Wolverhampton, latest link in the Gaumont-British chain, is among the more important of the new group, as indicating that the faith in the future of the large circuit is in no way clouded or abated. Strictly, this 2,000-seater palace represents the glorification of a former smaller house, but its importance lies in the fact that the reconstruction was first put in hand at a period when industry was heading for its recent low ebb, and that its completion comes at a moment when commerce is thought to be snapping out of its lethargy.

A similar story of venture undertaken at a time when the signs were most unpropitious can be woven round the Avenue theatre, at Ealing, West London, on which construction started late in the black autumn of 1931. Opening of this house brought 1,600 new seats to a district by no means poorly served already. In respect of a third—the Regal, Golders Green (a good-class London suburb)—the significant factor is that the theatre is built in the shell of an erstwhile popular ice rink, marking the cinema's conquest of yet one more of those modern attractions which were once considered its dangerous rivals.

And to conclude the tale here is an example of how the motion picture theatre asserts itself. Phil Hyams, director of the 5,000-seat Trocadero, challenged by a critic to show a three-reeler entitled "The Dump," admittedly a "highbrow" subject, was successful to the extent of attracting to a Sunday performance more than 2,000 who would not have paid at the box office in the ordinary course of events. His methods were simplicity itself; he had the experiment announced from the stage, told his patrons it was not a film he would show in the normal course and that they must judge it for themselves, and then ran it as a tag to a normal full-length program.

Grainger Notes Increased Buying

An indication of increased buying activity on the part of exhibitors is reported by James R. Grainger, vice-president in charge of distribution for Fox Film, who points out an unusually large volume of business concluded with independent and local circuits on the 1932-33 product.

A "flying squadron" of sales executives from the home office has made brief visits to various exchange centers. Headed by Mr. Grainger and with the cooperation of the several local branch managers, the group includes W. J. Kupper, western division sales manager; E. C. Grainger, eastern division sales manager, and John Nolan, handling West Coast branches. Following a week in the field, the group reported that exhibitors are buying with increased speed at the moment.

School to Study The Human Voice

The New School for Social Research, in New York, plans a new type of course, called "A New Conception of the Voice and the New Ways of Reproducing It," in which detailed study of the human voice, including the motion picture and radio technique will be investigated.

The course, under the direction of Mrs. Ivah L. Bradley, will consist of 11 sessions, one each week, beginning on October 20. Research will be carried on in the various fields of voice work. Among the leaders who will conduct the sessions are John S. Carlile, production manager of the Columbia Broadcasting system; Dr. Harvey Fletcher, acoustical research director, Bell Telephone Laboratories; John E. Otterson, president of Electrical Research Products, motion picture sound equipment subsidiary of Western Electric.

Mr. Carlile, in one demonstration, will explain radio facilities for voice transmission, selection of voices, microphone technique and the advantages and disadvantages of commercial broadcasting. Mr. Otterson will demonstrate, through talking pictures and other types of reproducing equipment, the latest advances in recording and reproducing speech and music.

Theatrical Group Elects

F. B. Williams was re-elected president of the California State Theatrical Association at the annual convention held recently at Modesto. Other officers are: R. H. Harrison, vice-president; Anthony L. Noriega, secretary-treasurer; L. G. Blix, H. R. Snow, J. W. Southwick, W. Federolf, Al Daul, E. H. Dowell, members of the executive committee.

Canada to Study Operator Problem

Canada's National Research Council is going to decide whether two projectionists are necessary continuously or at any time, and the conclusion is to be reached scientifically by the professors and engineers of the research laboratories at Ottawa. This situation has been brought about by the submission of the two-operator question to the Council by the Provincial Governments of Ontario and British Columbia. The scientists are planning to study sound projection by the latest equipment, electrical phases, safeguards and the public safety, and a mass of statistical records. Then, about a year hence, the council will issue a voluminous book containing its decision—accompanied by many tables and graphs, after which the Government experts in the various Provinces will revise their laws and regulations to suit.

Exhibitors have been compiling statistics to show the fire hazard has no direct relationship with the number of operators on duty, and it has been argued that no serious fire has started in a projection booth during a performance in any theatre in Canada since the advent of talking pictures.

Better Attendance Seen in Southwest

Increased attendance at theatres in key cities in the Southwest is being noted. Exhibitors are reported heartened by soaring cotton and grain prices that are adding many thousands of dollars to the farmers' purchasing power. Many theatres in the Southwest are showing increased box office grosses over July and August despite the seasonal dullness.

Theatres in Dallas, Fort Worth, Houston and San Antonio report better box office grosses, the small houses as well as the deluxe. Several small theatres in this territory that were in the red during June, July and August say that business is picking up and the houses are beginning to show a profit.

In Oklahoma the business outlook for the winter is very cheerful. The state is becoming a mecca for minature musical tabloids, which is considered an indication of improved conditions. The Griffith Amusement Company, Oklahoma City reports considerable success with several of this type of stage show in the territory.

RKO Books Six Theatres

RKO has booked six theatres in the metropolitan district of New York, following the recent booking of the Frisch and Rinzler circuit. The six are the Rex, East Rutherford, N. J.; Scarsdale, Scarsdale; Bronxville, Bronxville; Kingsway, Brooklyn; Empire, Bronx; Strand, Rockville Center, L. I.

COLOR AND BEAUTY IN HOLLYWOOD PAGEANT

Brilliantly Conceived and Illuminated Floats Parade After Equestrian Events and Drills at Benefit Spectacle

Staging a benefit solely for people of their own kind, the film studios and actors of Hollywood and vicinity made a financial and spectacular success of the Motion Picture Electrical Parade and Sport Pageant, given the night of September 24 in Olympic Stadium, Los Angeles.

From start to finish, the stadium was filled with equestrian events, drills and finally an ambitious pretentious parade of brilliantly illuminated floats, which stood as a new credit to the studio electricians' art.

All advance finances were guaranteed by Jack L. Warner, of Warner Brothers-First National Studios, who acted as director general of the entire event. Norman Manning was manager and Frank N. Murphy illuminated the various floats in such fashion that they were declared vastly superior to his former efforts seen at three previous Shrine conventions, an Elks gathering and last year's "Fiesta de Los Angeles."

Governor Roosevelt Guest

Governor Franklin D. Roosevelt, of New York, making his western swing around the country, was present as guest of honor, with Will Rogers contributing an address of welcome, punctuated with typical Rogers witticisms.

As the show proceeded, Conrad Nagel, who served as master of ceremonies, interpreted its portent to an audience which occupied nearly every seat of the huge amphitheatre.

Roosevelt's entrance was signalized by a lighting display unusual for Hollywood, where electrical triumphs are every-day occurrences. From the peristyle of the stadium, towering high above the spectators, shafts of red, white and blue lights were thrown against the heavens, while similar hues illuminated the field. Squads of motorcycle police and the band of the 160th infantry made an imposing entrance, followed by the 160th infantry. Next came Governor Roosevelt, in a decorated automobile.

Light, Color, Beauty in Floats

The floats, built by Mr. and Mrs. James A. Biggam, of Los Angeles, filled the stadium with light, color and beauty, the element of beauty being represented both in their scenic design and in the living feminine decorations, with which each was liberally supplied.

First came a complimentary Hollywood float, announced as the film capital's welcome to the governor of New York. It was of puffed silver, trimmed with lighted stars, the colors winking and changing. Atop was a golden girl on a turntable, representing the film star at the pinnacle of success. Ten girls in evening gowns and others reclining, lightly garbed, completed the picture.

Representing the Rock of Gibraltar, Columbia's float was covered with brilliant flowers and 14 girls, one of them in classic attire to depict the studio trademark. Colors of black, silver and gold were used.

Educational's float was noteworthy for its splendid lighting. It consisted of pillars and towering super-structures, painted in brilliant hues and peopled with charmers from the studio.

A silver tower, with an elevator moving it telescope fashion, hoisted a girl in golden raiment 25 feet above the First National Studios' float. A silver fountain played in a garden of magic flowers. Sixteen girls were arranged around the electric blossoms.

With its theme taken from the jewel box, the float entered by Max Factor, cosmetician, represented a huge cameo, with a living girl as the "woman of the bauble." Enormous electrical emeralds adorned the side, and girls provided further decoration.

Fox studios' float stood as a tribute to national spirit. Known as the "bicentennial monument," it depicted Washington crossing the Delaware, with a replica of the White House as a background.

A Day in Old Spain

A day in Old Spain might have been the title of the Samuel Goldwyn entry, with its Castillian beauties hovering over the rail of a Spanish balcony, while matadors posed in the patio below.

"Modernistic Theatre," a design belonging to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, was done in silver and black, with automaton figures of automobiles and patrons, arriving at the box office.

"Fountain of Beauty," with silver scrolls and arches, bore the name of Paramount, with a fountain of light flickering over a scene of gorgeously clad girls, reclining beneath hanging silver Spanish moss.

RKO was represented by a Roman pleasure barge, depicting Cleopatra and her court. The prow was a huge swan, with blinking eyes. The stern of the barge was adorned with a huge golden harp, upon which girls twanged to speed the hours of the classic court.

The Hal Roach entry depicted a Grecian garden in ruins, with spirits of the past inhabitants returned for another fete on this earth. Synthetic fish swam in imaginary waters at the base of the structure.

Red roses, brilliantly illuminated against a background of silver, with a queen of beauty reclining in golden robes, surrounded by girls in plumes, constituted the Leon Schlesinger theme.

Depicting a rain storm in the tropics, the United Artists vehicle was in rainbow colors, while beauties of the islands executed dances in silver hula attire. The background was of thatched huts grouped around a trading post.

"Speed" was represented by Universal's offering, with a "spirit of speed" posed gracefully in front. All was in stream line, with winged effects.

French Rococo Art

French rococo art of the 17th century inspired the Warner Brothers float, adorned with a colored fountain and girls in period costume on balcony, pavilion and winding stairs.

The Three Graces were represented in the Fox West Coast entry. A lighted torch illuminated the front of the vehicle, while Fanchon and Marco girls were distributed in artistic array.

As an opener for the show, the South Pasadena American Legion drum and bugle corps, five times winners of drill contests, executed a fancy drill.

A grand entry, headed by Lt. Harold W. Roberts' cowboy band, led the equestrian division. Hoot Gibson, Tom Mix, Buck Jones, John Wayne, Rex Bell, and Jim Thorpe, accompanied by riders from their studios, staged a sprightly horse show, followed by the "leap through fire" of Redhead, motion picture steed ridden by Lt. O. I. Clampett.

Members of Al Malaikah temple of the Shrine contributed two program features. One was their humorous "pony drill," in which the members rode hobby horses, with illuminated blinking eyes, and the other was participation in the electrical parade, the marchers carrying an illuminated forest of orange trees.

Darryl Zanuck next staged several chukkers of polo on the stadium football field. Despite the limited quarters, Robert Montgomery, Snowy Baker, Jimmy Rogers, son of Will Rogers, and other film players gave the audience an interesting glimpse of the game.

Preceding the electrical parade, some of the leading Hollywood stars made their entrances in decorated, illuminated open cars. This section was led by Joe E. Brown, as grand marshal, and included such notables as Mary Pickford, Marion Davies, Constance Bennett, Bebe Daniels, Ben Lyon, Boris Karloff, Lew Ayres, Ann Harding, Charles Farrell, Janet Gaynor, Carol Lombard, William Powell, Laurel and Hardy, Leo Carrillo, Wallace Berry, Jackie Cooper, Warner Baxter, Joan Bennett, Sally Eilers and Jimmy Dunn.

With only charity deriving profits of the show, the realized sum was distributed between the Motion Picture Relief Fund and the Marion Davies Foundation.

Du Pont Has New Panchromatic Film

A new type of panchromatic film, for which its sponsor claims improved definition of whites and blacks, is being marketed by DuPont Film Manufacturing Company. This "Superpan" film—the trade name for which application has been made—is now being used in Hollywood by Paramount, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, RKO, Universal, United Artists and several independents, according to O. H. Briggs, sales manager.

Claiming that the new film comes closer to recording the actual brightness of objects as they appear in nature, Dr. V. B. Sease, director of research for DuPont, said that "its response is similar to that of the human eye. While it is not revolutionary, the new type of film does give definite advantages. The emulsion has increased sensitivity, which is particularly noticeable in the green. Heretofore the high sensitivity of panchromatic types to red often resulted in prints which yielded very chalky-appearing countenances. This new emulsion, however, is less sensitive to red and more sensitive in the green portion of the spectrum. The result, in effect, is the best record of natural color in blacks and whites that we have yet obtained."

Sparks Is Taking Over 12 Publix Florida Houses

Twelve Publix Houses in Florida will be taken over on November 1 by E. J. Sparks, operator of Consolidated Theatres. The theatres are the Olympia, Paramount, Rex, Rosetta and Community, in Miami; Paramount and Beaux Arts, in Palm Beach; Keppler, Stanley, Arcade and Rialto, in West Palm Beach; Oakley, in Lake Worth. Sparks is expected to form an operating company to manage the houses.

"MAKE IT A BUSINESS"

T. A. SHEA, BIRMINGHAM EXHIBITOR

WHO PRODUCES SCREEN STARS?

To the Editor of the Herald:

We have read many articles pro and con recently about what is the matter with this moving picture business etc. The answer to which appears rather simple to this writer's rather simple mind.

May I suggest to those who are honestly seeking remedies that might result in betterment to first read the personal columns in the trade papers where they will find, "Miss Jamiace Jones after a very strenuous two weeks as leading lady in the Walstinski production for Doughboy distribution, sails next Saturday for a two months' vacation in Europe."

"Mr. Isaac Stanwyc, the great director, is sailing this week-end with a party of friends on his yacht, 'The Night Club' for a month's cruise along the west coast of Mexico."

"Miss Elvyra Smith has filed suit for annulment of her recent marriage to Bingy Jones, the great virtuoso, and asking $5,000.00 per month alimony on the ground of incompatibility of temperment. Bingy insisted on eating onions for breakfast" etc.

May we ask in all fairness: who really produces those socalled stars? Has the exhibitor anything to do with it? If so, how often do you see an item in any trade paper to the effect that Mr. Joe Simpkins with his wife and family of six children are sailing next Tuesday for a six weeks' cruise to the Mediterranean or that Mr. and Mrs. Watkins of the Pastime theatre are spending a delightful vacation at their summer home in the Maine Woods, etc.

The facts are: the poor boob of an exhibitor is pleading for some relief from his exchange in way of reduction in contract price for the wonderful B. O. attractions (!) that he has been sucker enough to sign on the dotted line for, and what answer does he get from the hired man at the exchange. This:—our pictures have been sold to your town on a fair basis and no reduction can be considered.

Many picture scouts will tell you that the equipment concerns are the ones who are getting the gravy, while as a matter of record approximately 75 per cent of the small town exhibitors today could be closed for non-payment of equipment notes and the only payments they are able to make are for the pictures shipped C. O. D., many of which are returned unplayed for lack of funds necessary to lift the C. O. D.

Is it not reasonable then to expect resentment by the independent exhibitor when he reads in his trade paper such items as above mentioned.

We often wonder if the big shots of the racket ever give any thought to the reaction on the minds of the poor devil who labors 12 hours in each 24 for the magnificent sum of from 50c to $1.50 per day and who probably contributes the largest share to the support of the picture game.

May we not ask why Mr. Hays is worth more to the picture game than the President of all the people is worth to them, why Miss So-And-So is paid $130,000 for making two pictures during her "vacation" of two months, while the boob of an exhibitor who pays for her pictures cannot sell them for enough ready cash to pay his light bill?

In all fairness, if this business is to survive, is it not time to make it a business instead of a racket?—T. A. Shea, Richland theatre, Rayville, La.

INDEPENDENTS' PLACE THREATENED

To the Editor of the Herald:

The independent operator has a real place in the development of the industry, but at the present time this is being seriously threatened because of attacks from the chain producers who operate or control their own houses.

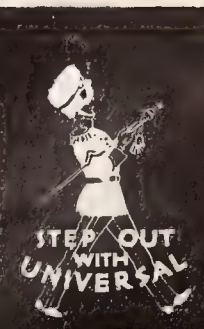
Because of smaller overhead and local control, the independent has a chance to compete with the chain, provided he is allowed to lower prices. If the large film companies succeed in cutting off his source of supply, because he caters to the present demand for a more reasonable admission price, his place in the theatre world is doomed.

If the chain producers were improving the quality of their pictures as the result of lessened competition, there might be some excuse for crowding out the independent house. As a matter of fact, the quality is not improving. There is abundant ground for the charge that their pictures are not measuring up to the standard of other years. I think this is borne out by the fact that I get my best crowds when I show an old picture. Many of these pictures are really superior to the present day output.

As one of the struggling independents, I appeal to your magazine to make a fight on our behalf. In doing this, I confidently believe that you will be serving the motion picture industry of the future.—John Calman, manager, Temple Theatre, Birmingham, Ala.

German Ace On Universal Expedition Feared Lost

Berlin aviation circles fear that Ernst Udet, greatest surviving World War ace, who had been engaged off the coast of Greenland in the filming of the Universal film, "SOS Iceberg," has been lost in an effort to find the family and crew of George R. Hutchinson, lost in the north but since rescued. A telegram from Dr. Arnold Fanck, leader of the Universal expedition, to Berlin recently, reported the flyer missing for three days.



It is feared Udet may have been forced down on the icy, deserted coast through some mishap. When a wireless request to aid in the search for the Hutchinson group reached him on the East Greenland coast, where the film expedition is based, Udet gladly volunteered. He took off immediately, and has not been heard from since.

SELECTIONS

Noted by RITA C. McGOLDRICK

"Selections" represents a fair cross-section of national opinion on the important pictures of the month. The estimate given to each of the following films is the average opinion expressed by those national organizations engaged in previewing motion pictures.

"Selections" is designed to spare the exhibitor the necessity of having to compare the lists issued by various organizations which so often are widely divergent in viewpoint. The following pictures were adjudged clean and high grade film entertainment with strong box office possibilities.

Family Suitability

ALL AMERICAN — EXCELLENT
Universal

Here's a new thought in football themes. The dangers ahead of the football hero who "cashes in" on his name to make easy money, the thrill of the crowded stadium, real football with actual veterans of the gridiron, Cagle, Carrideo, Booth and innumerable others, all make this a football fan's dream come true. (Richard Arlen, Andy Devine.)

CHANDU, THE MAGICIAN
Fox — VERY GOOD

This is the filmed interpretation of the popular radio serial. Highly romantic, it is packed full of thrills, with escapes, the death ray, mummies, pyramids and black magic. The picture is lightened with some unexpected and fine humor and the sound and photographic effects are excellent. While this is not a great picture, it is one that the children will devour with joy, while the parents who take them to the show will be completely entertained. (Edmund Lowe, Bela Lugosi, Irene Ware.)

COME ON DANGER — VERY GOOD
RKO

Full of action, with plenty of rough and tumble fights and fast riding. (Tom Keene.)

COME ON TARZAN — GOOD
World Wide

Featured by exceptional riding, plenty of new stunts, beautiful horses and western background. (Ken Maynard, Merna Kennedy.)

CROOKED CIRCLE — GOOD
World Wide

A comedy mystery story, in which an amateur detective is threatened with death, and a spooky house adds to the confusion. (Ben Lyon, James Gleason, Irene Purcell, Zasu Pitts.)

DIE LETZTE KOMPAGNIE (The Last Company) — VERY GOOD
Ufa

One of Ufa's films especially designed to strengthen German nationalism as was "Das Floren-konzert von Sans Souci," but this motive does not detract from its interest. (Conrad Veidt.)

FORBIDDEN TRAIL — VERY GOOD
Columbia

Two practical jokers become involved in a feud between cattlemen and new "nesters" who swarm into the settlement. Some amusing comedy and very good action. (Buck Jones.)

THE FOURTH HORSEMAN — VERY GOOD
Universal

Tom Mix as the hero, helps Mollie O'Rourke run Ben Jones and his gang out of town in a picture of the riding west that is full of thrills.

HERITAGE OF THE DESERT — VERY GOOD
Paramount

Romance of a young surveyor and a ranchman's daughter. (Randolph Scott, Sally Blane, J. Farrell Macdonald.)

HIDDEN VALLEY — GOOD
Monogram

A new idea in western pictures is this one which introduces a blimp to aid in the search over the desert for the wanted man. (Bob Steele.)

THE LAST MAN — VERY GOOD
Columbia

With well sustained interest this entertaining picture tells the story of a secret service agent who poses as a mutinous sailor. (Charles Bickford, Constance Cummings.)

United Artists

A wholly delightful musical comedy of Vienna in 1914, with charming melodies, beautiful scenes and captivating personalities. (Jack Buchanan, Gene Malo.)

Paramount — EXCELLENT

Excellent entertainment which combines musical comedy and political satire. (George M. Cohan, Jimmy Durante, Claudette Colbert.)

RIDE HIM COWBOY — GOOD
Warner

The horse Duke, with his intelligence and strength, adds greatly to the interest of this western, and often saves the situation for the hero. (John Wayne.)

SCHOEN IST DIE MANOEVERZEIT (The Beautiful Manoeuver-Time)
Ufa — GOOD

The supposedly militaristic Germans make fun of their own army with amusing results. (Ida Wuest.)

STRANGER IN TOWN — VERY GOOD
Warner

A pleasant, humorous story of small town complications in grocery stores and in love. (Chic Sale, Ann Dvorak, Noah Beery.)

THIRTEEN WOMEN — VERY GOOD
RKO

How morbid horoscopes affect the lives of several people and bring desired revenge for the outcast Indian girl. (Irene Dunne, Myrna Loy, Kay Johnson, Ricardo Cortez.)

VIRGINS OF BALI — VERY GOOD
Principal

A description of the daily life on the Isle of Bali. (5 reels.)

WESTERN CODE — VERY GOOD
Columbia

An ace gun fighter of the Texas Rangers follows the trail of counterfeiters into Arizona. Exciting action and plenty of fast riding. (Tim McCoy.)

WHITE EAGLE — GOOD
Columbia

A young Indian, who later turns out to be a white man, is instrumental in bringing about peaceful relations between the Indians and the whites. (Charles (Buck) Jones, Barbara Weeks.)

Adult Suitability

BACHELOR'S AFFAIRS
Fox — GOOD

A sparkling, sophisticated comedy, with gorgeous settings. It tells the story of the sedate and older bridegroom who tries to keep pace with a beautiful, but dumb, young bride. This is an inconsequential piece of amusement which is strictly adult entertainment. (Adolphe Menjou, Joan Marsh, Minna Gombel, Herbert Mundin.)

BILL OF DIVORCEMENT
RKO — EXCELLENT

This picture must find its way into any list of outstanding films because of the quality of its acting and its superb direction. John Barrymore, in the role of a shell-shocked man, gives an unforgettable performance. This is strong drama of human emotions for discriminating patrons of the cinema. It is adult entertainment. (John Barrymore, Billie Burke, Katherine Hepburn.)

BLAME THE WOMAN — GOOD
Principal

Adolphe Menjou as a clever thief is outwitted at his own game by another pair of crooks. (Adolphe Menjou, Benita Hume.)

Ufa — EXCELLENT

Mrs. T. G. Winter, describing this picture for the clubs in a recent pamphlet, says of it: "A musical extravaganza, charmingly directed, with superb touches of comedy, lovely musical accompaniment and lavish background. The setting of the Congress of Vienna, 1814, gives historical interest although no accuracy is attempted. Just a bit of froth and gaiety set to music." (Lilian Harvey, Conrad Veidt, Lil Dagover, Henry Garst.)

THE CRASH — GOOD
First National

A society drama in which a luxury loving wife fears poverty, but finally she and her husband decide that the "crash" was not such a misfortune after all. (Ruth Chatterton, George Brent.)

DIARY OF A REVOLUTIONIST
Amkino — VERY GOOD

An interesting study of peasant Russia with an important pictorial element and good acting.

SELECTION OF SELECTIONS IN PICTURES

The dialogue is in Russian and would only be suitable for audiences understanding that language.

FREUND IN DER OPER
Foreign Film VERY GOOD

A drama with a good plot, in which beautiful singing and light humor relieve the tense moments. (Gustav Froelich, Charlotte Susa.)

THE JEWELL ROBBERY
Warner Brothers VERY GOOD

A bored society lady is captivated by a burglar. Wit, extravagance, notably fine direction. (William Powell, Kay Francis.)

MAN FROM YESTERDAY
Paramount GOOD

A wartime story of Enoch Arden flavor. The acting is sincere and convincing; some of the settings are very lovely and the direction is fair, although in no way distinctive. (Clive Brook, Claudette Colbert, Charles Boyer, Andy Devine.)

MOST DANGEROUS GAME
RKO VERY GOOD

Mystery in a castle off the coast of Russia, which involves some thrilling shipwrecks and unusual murders. (Joel McCrea, Fay Wray.)

NIGHT OF JUNE 13TH GOOD
Paramount

The thrilling events that occur in seventy minutes in the lives of the neighbors who live in quiet "Laurel Park." (Clive Brook, Frances Dee, Charles Ruggles, Mary Boland.)

PAYMENT DEFERRED GOOD
Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

The acting of Charles Laughton, in this screen version of the stage play which brought him fame, will win the admiration of critical audiences, although the depressing tragedy of a man's ignominious defeat so powerfully portrayed will be strong medicine for anyone. (Charles Laughton, Neil Hamilton, Maureen O'Sullivan, Dorothy Peterson.)

SMILIN' THROUGH EXCELLENT
Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

A very beautiful and faithful picturization of the play, admirably cast, glamorously staged and directed with fine understanding of its values. (Norma Shearer, Fredric March, Leslie Howard.)

STRANGERS OF THE EVENING
Tiffany VERY GOOD

From a grim opening in a mortuary the story rapidly develops into an amusing comedy. Excellent characterizations, good suspense. Light entertainment for the average audience, although some may object to the uniqueness of the setting. (Zasu Pitts, Harold Waldridge.)

WASHINGTON MERRY GO ROUND
Columbia VERY GOOD

The attempt of a young, ardent and patriotic congressman to clean up some of the crooked political situations in Washington (Lee Tracy, Constance Cummings.)

WHITE ZOMBIE GOOD
Halperin Brothers

Based on the belief of natives of Haiti in zombies or "living dead," this film is unique in its ghoulish plot but not altogether convincing in acting or development. Some interesting atmospheric effects and settings. Not for small children. (Johnny Harron, Madge Bellamy, Robert Frazer, Bela Lugosi, Joseph Cawthorn.)

CS HAIL A NEW DRAMATIC THE PRESS OF THE WORLD
'S FOR THIS TRIUMPH OF THE

"Barrymore offers fine acting in "Bill of Divorcement" . powerful drama. presented before the season's most distinguished audience one of the most effective dramas to reach film form . . the portrayal of Barrymore ranks with his finest characterizations. Billie Burke makes her talkie debut in a blaze of glory while Katharine Hepburn presents a vigorous, vibrant personality certainly marked for film distinction."—Regina Crewe, N Y American.

"A sensitive and effective motion picture . produced with taste and intelligence and admirably acted by John Barrymore, Katharine Hepburn and Billie Burke... It provided a poignant, photograph of a well-written, intelligent and sanely tragic stage play "—Richard Watts, Jr., N. Y. Herald-Tribune.

"Mayfair film hit with Barrymore . Barrymore, Burke and Hepburn combine to give film audiences a tender and gripping picture . . . it is impressively done indeed. Barrymore's performance is as fine as he's done in some seasons."—Irene Thirer, Daily News.

"We wish to go on record here and now that we have personally seen nothing finer on the screen in the past few months . . "—Jack Alicoate, The Film Daily.

Thanks for the compliment, Chick!

. . . and can we take it!

"CHANDU" PRESS BOOK!

When a group of real showmen band together for the purpose of doping out ways and means of helping put over certain pictures, then they are deserving of thanks from every exhibitor in the country.

BUT, when this same gang turns out a press book like the one on "Chandu"; chock-full of sensible, plausible exploitation ideas; crammed with gags easily adaptable to most any situation; containing newsstories that when rewritten and localized ought to be acceptable to the hardest boiled small-town newspaper editor; selling ad mats; then it's well nigh time that someone moved for a rising vote of thanks to every man in any way responsible for this press book.

It's really worth its weight in gold, and if you're playing "Chandu" we earnestly recommend that you make full use of what the press book has to offer. You can't, and won't, go wrong. "CHICK"

From M.P.Herald, October 1, 1932

● We've been trying hard to make press books that will help the busy showman — now we'll try even harder to live up to your praise.

Al Smith says "America NEEDS TO LAUGH!"

The man who has been called America's Greatest Democrat says in an interview in The New Movie Magazine "The movies are the one bright spot in a long day for lots of folks. And what do they do when they get there. THEY WANT TO LAUGH."

AND THEY WILL LAUGH UNTIL THEIR SIDES ARE SORE WHEN THEY SEE THIS ONE!

"You'll never forgive yourself if you miss it"

JENKINS' COLYUM

Council Grove, Kan.

DEAR HERALD:

To most people Council Grove is just another town, but to the Jayhawkers, Council Grove is the most historic spot in Kansas.

The old original Santa Fe trail began here and ended at Santa Fe, New Mexico. The first school house for white children in Kansas was built here. Close by a monument erected alongside the trail by The Daughters of the American Revolution is "Council Oak," under which a treaty was signed between the representatives of the Government and the Indians.

Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Bratton operate the Stella theatre. We got into Council Grove at three o'clock and called Mr. Bratton's house and Mrs. Bratton told us that he had gone fishing, and we told her that that was some more of our good luck, to get there too late to go with him. She insisted that we stay over and come to the show as she and Mr. Bratton wanted to see us. We told her we were a working man, but she wouldn't listen to our leaving without seeing them. So we stayed. Who could resist an invitation like that? We couldn't, and we are glad we stayed, for we met two very delightful folk who insisted that we come back sometime. We accept the invitation here and now.

Earl Harmon of the Lyric at Cottonwood Falls said that if his toehold on business didn't slip he thought he could pull through, but that he had worn off all of his toenails trying to hang on and that he had bunyons on one foot and corns on the other, but that there were no patches on the seat of his pants. We will bet he wins.

Lancaster and Gish of the Uptown theatre at Strong City asked us if we thought it possible to operate a theatre without the HERALD. We didn't lie to 'em a bit; we told 'em the truth, and that's why they enrolled in the HERALD family. Occasionally we meet an exhibitor who wouldn't know the truth if he met it in the road, but not often.

The most pleasing thing we know of is to hear a radio crooner sing through a megaphone and his adenoids.

C. L. McVey of the Dreamland theatre at Herrington is a brother of the late Mrs. Sidney Drew, who with her husband used to make those Sidney Drew high-class comedies. Mr. McVey has been connected with the show business in about all its ramifications, purifications, justifications, nullifications and what have you, and has settled down to try and give Herrington people the kind of entertaiment Herrington people ought to have. He has a very fine theatre and the finest and cleanest booth we have seen in a long time, and if he can't make it go there is no use of anybody else trying it.

Mr. H. F. Strowig operates the Lyric at Abilene. The Lyric is plenty good enough for Abilene, and Abilene is the cleanest, snappiest, up-to-the minute town we have seen in many a day. The Lyric looks like a gold mine to us or else Abilene is putting on a whole lot of dog trying to make people think she's a city. It certainly seemed to us to be a real town.

Charlie Swiercinsky (try to pronounce it at your own risk) of the Majestic theatre at Washington told us when we called that every time he got a bum picture and wanted to swear, he would hunt up a HERALD and read our colyum, which always quieted him down. We told him our colyum was not intended for that purpose, that it was intended as a medicine for people who were troubled with box-office sluggishness and that it was an infallible remedy.

Charlie and Mrs. Charlie are a couple of mighty swell fellows and we enjoyed our evening with them immensely. The next morning Charlie drove us around to see the terrible havoc the tornado did the town last summer. This tornado didn't stop at damaging dwellings by the score, but it completely wrecked the high school and standpipe, and it literally leveled their brick and stone courthouse to the ground. Fortunately most of the people of the town were at a celebration (it was the Fourth of July) out in the city park and out of the path of the tornado or the loss of life would have been terrible. As it was, three people were killed and a number injured.

Principal to Distribute Williamson Undersea Film

Principal Pictures Corporation has acquired distribution rights to the novelty feature, "With Williamson Beneath the Sea," produced by J. E. Williamson, undersea explorer of note. The picture, shot almost entirely beneath the sea, will contain several sequences pictured in color, claimed to be the first undersea films in natural color.

A flexible metallic tube, invented by Mr. Williamson's father and perfected by his son, through which cameramen descend to the bottom of the sea and into a large, glass-enclosed chamber, makes possible the filming of undersea activity. Persons in the lowered chamber are said to be in constant touch with the boat on the surface by telephone. The film will appear on Broadway shortly.

Represents Italian Company

A new foreign entrant into the American market, Caesar Film Company, of Rome, has announced the appointment of Frank Pennino as its general representative here. Mr. Pennino, whose offices are at 261 Broadway, New York, distributed American Biograph pictures in the early days. "La Vecchia Signora" ("The Old Lady"), is the first Caesar film, and Mr. Pennino, in addition to selling state rights, is prepared to purchase rights to American pictures for Italy.

Monogram-Consolidated Deal

Monogram Pictures has awarded to Consolidated Film Industries, Inc., the contract for negative-developing and release-printing on its remaining 28 productions scheduled for 1932-3. The contract will involve approximately twenty million feet of release printing. Consolidated will also make the color prints for Monogram's "The Girl From Calgary," using its Magnacolor process.

Acquire Majestic Franchises

Joseph Silverman and R. H. Clemmons have acquired the Majestic Pictures franchises for Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas. Twenty features and six westerns are included. The third feature release of the company is "The Crusader," formerly titled "Crusade."

Soviet Government Will Reorganize Film Industry

Sovkino, the state film organization of Soviet Russia, which exercises a complete monopoly over production and distribution in the country, is to be reorganized under government order, according to George R. Canty, American trade commissioner at Berlin.

Russian production in the future will be handled by four trusts: Rus-Film, Bel-Film, Ukrain-Film and Wostok-Film. A special trust will be in charge of film constructions and another, Tech-Film, will handle educational, cultural and newsreel films. It is planned to produce 60 feature and 100 short educational films during 1932-33.

Pass Stench Bomb Bill

The Texas state senate has passed a bill making the throwing of a stench bomb in any public place a felony, punishable by imprisonment of not less than one year nor more than 25, or a fine of not less than $25 nor more than $5,000.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

CHARLES E. ("CHICK") LEWIS, chairman and editor

YOU WRITE THE ANSWER!

OUT OF THE MASS OF correspondence received this week, one particular letter remained in our mind so indelibly that we finally decided to pass along some quotes. It is so typical, yet true, of present conditions as applied to some circuits that our reasons for emphasizing it is in the hope that it will further awaken some of the circuit men to the realization that many of their houses can again become the profitable ventures they were before the circuit acquired them.

The manager of this theatre held down the same post under an independent for many years before he found himself working for a large organization. He has been running theatres in the same town for almost sixteen years and we are well acquainted with the type of showman he is from information regarding his activities some years before.

Let's pass on to some of the things he mentioned in his letter:

"Conditions in this town have changed but slightly since the much-talked-of depression started. Our factories and business centers are still going full blast and salaries are pretty near the same as five years ago. . . . Yet, business has fallen off considerably at the theatre. . . . When the Blank Circuit took this house over we were turning in close to a grand a week net. . . . This continued for quite a spell but gradually eased off until I find this, the first time in nine years that the town is not showing a profit. True, we are not losing a great amount of money, but I find myself sitting back and trying to fathom why we should be losing at all.

"I finally arrived at the only possible solution. Too many fingers in the pie, Chick. Although I have been running this house for many years, I find that my word or advice counts for very little with our division and home office. I have had no less than five district managers and two division managers in the short space of two years. Each one thought his predecessor was a flop. Each one discarded and destroyed what the man before him had worked out or erected in the way of organization morale. I was no longer permitted to do what in my mind was best for my theatre. When the home office started dictating the policies of the theatre, telling me how to sell or not to sell the pictures, entering into agreements in which I had no say, and finally wound up by actually telling me how I should allocate my time, I started to lose my old pep. The incentive to tackle something my own way and see it through as I thought best was gone.

". . . Personally, I believe that the independents are making money, while we are losing. . . . They (the independents) permit their managers to exercise close scrutiny of local conditions, give individual attention to their theatres and their patrons, watch the purse strings to avoid needless waste or unnecessary expenditures. . . . But there are so many leaks in a large organization that before you know it the losses run up into staggering sums."

There are many such letters coming into Club headquarters all the time. In most cases we discount some of the comment because we feel that the writer may be harboring a grudge. But we insist that in this instance we can safely believe what has been said. This man is too level-headed, too good a showman to swing a hammer just to hear himself talk. He has always been, and still is, one hundred per cent for his employers.

Long before the evils of circuit operation began to show themselves we cited many points in favor of local, individual supervision of theatres located outside of the larger key cities. We tried to show that many years of experience in such operations was sufficient proof that any attempt to run the theatres from a home office would be a disaster. Need we say at this time that our point of view was correct?

Mayhap we are harping too much on this subject. It's quite possible that we have overlooked, somewhere or other, the difficulties of circuit operation so that our mind is prejudiced in the wrong direction. But if such is the case, then close scrutiny of circuit system failed to reveal the solution of the mystery as to why they took the control of the various theatres out of the hands of the local manager and tied him hand and foot with orders, counter-orders, show-selling methods that may or not be good for every house and town and, worst of all, the refusal to permit the local manager to decide for himself what is best for his house.

It would seem that good product is not the only thing needed to bring our industry back to prosperity. Good common sense in the administration of circuits is of great importance, too.

SOME MORE POSTER ART WORK FROM JIM BITTLES' WORK SHOP

Once again we are able to present examples of art work done by Display Artist Albert Howard for James "Jimmy" Bittles, manager of the Granada Theatre, a Vonderschmit Amusement house at Greencastle, Ind.

The poster on "Passport to Hell" at the right-hand portion of the illustration is an excellent example of composition used to call attention to two stars who have box office value. The artist had simplicity and the personality of Joan Bennett in mind when he created the poster at the left, a slant which is considered good selling for that star.

In view of the "depresh," which hasn't lifted sufficiently to break out the tin box, Bittles still finds use of Alabastine art colors on ordinary newsprint very satisfactory when backed up with beaver or composboard, and where the program is changed as often as four times per week. This process keeps down costs and gives very good results.

Bittles and Howard were early contributors to this department's suggestions on poster art and we're glad to see them coming through with more. Material sent in by other members have helped them, Jimmy advises us, and we're sure that his have aided others. Let's keep the good work up, fellows, so shoot in your ideas.

Melincoff Now D. M.

Maxwell Melincoff, formerly manager for Warner Bros. in Lawrence, Mass., and a well known member of the Round Table Club, has been promoted to a district-managership, succeeding F. C. Barrett, who has been transferred to Pittsburgh. Max will make his headquarters at Boston.

Rhoden Host To Merchants

Inauguration of first run policy at the Fox-Plaza Theatre, Kansas City, Mo., was celebrated recently, when Elmer C. Rhoden, Fox Midwesco division manager, and Fox Theatres, Inc., played host to 650 merchants and employees in the Plaza district. Mr. Rhoden told the assembled guests of his company's plans for the house under the new policy, and treated them to a buffet supper and a screening of a new picture.

BLANCHARD STAGED FINE CAMPAIGN ON SAM KATZ CARNIVAL

Over five hundred dollars worth of activities were promoted without cost to theatre during Publix Carnival Week campaign down in William Schmidt's division by J. M. Blanchard, manager of the Strand Theatre, Sunbury, Pa. According to report, his campaign was one of the most complete, as far as detail is concerned, of any in the entire district.

He started the ball a-rolling 'way back in mid-summer with 100 per cent cooperation from the Chamber of Commerce on readers, bringing into the tie-up twenty-one merchants who were completely satisfied with results at the close of the week. Each of the merchants carried an ad on top of 49 ads ranging from two to eight columns in size. Thirty-six stores carried theatre displays in windows and ten merchants tied-up for the New York trip with special cards and displays. One daily paper contributed 32 inches of display space one day and 28 inches another day. Another paper gave 28 inches.

A tie-up was made with Texaco for a special children's matinee, whereby each kiddie wearing a fire chief's hat was admitted for ten cents. The company bannered five trucks three days in advance and held a parade on Friday in which five trucks and hundreds of children wearing the hats took part. After the parade the trucks parked in front of the theatre. The newspapers gave a 100 lines of reader and Texaco a page and one-half of display space on this stunt.

Wide Coverage

Additional effort included the sending out of 800 novelty cellophane letters on a selected mailing list; a tie-up with a chain store concern that netted ad space across the tops of 8,000 11 x 15 heralds without any cost to theatre; special displays carried by the same chain store concern in windows of all stores; the building of a very attractive rock garden display in theatre by local landscape artists that created a lot of word-of-mouth comment and secured a two-column, 40 line reader on the front page and 54 lines single column inside of a local paper; another tie-up with the Kelvinator company for display of refrigerator in lobby and arrangement for theatre patrons to obtain discount on purchase of one, and two half-pages of costless advertising from the same company.

Stage and added attractions for the week consisted of the Oddfellows Orphange Junior Band for Monday night, an event that attracted many who were interested in the organization; the presentation on Wednesday and Thursday of "Sunbury Souvenirs," a 900 foot film taken in 1909, with a M. C. to add humor to explanation of the shots, and consequent free space from paper of 178 lines of reader on the attraction. On Thursday players in two more local bands donated their services.

Most of our readers are well acquainted with the Blanchard brand of show-selling campaign so it will not be news that he did such excellent work in connection with Carnival Week. We're a bit late getting this into print but feel sure that there are many suggestions in the above paragraphs which can be successfully adapted to other events.

CONSISTENT USE OF INEXPENSIVE STUNTS HELPED E. R. BRENNAN

Proof that business can be brought to the theatre door in spite of the numerous kinks in trade conditions the past year or so is brought to light in looking over some data on recent activities of E. R. Brennan, manager of the State Theatre, Rhinelander, Wis.

Let's go back a bit and note what he did on "Crowd Roars." A snap-shot shows that a corps of six motorcycles and riders, escorted by a local motorcycle policeman, ballyhooed that attraction in bang-up fashion.

The small photo reproduced here appears to be a collection of juvenile banner carriers, with Brennan himself standing by. One of those small carts the youngsters drag around seems to be full of imitation dynamite, tagged "this dynamite will explode—'Doomed Battalion.'" The attractive theatre front in the background fails to show up on account of the shade under the marquee, but we know you will be able to make out the two youngsters astride the ponies. Another shot concerning the same picture shows a couple of kiddies standing beside two stacks of rifles, flanked on either side by the ponies and riders.

Again we see the ponies and riders ballyhooing a western picture, this time dressed in cowboy costume. A large cutout of Tom Mix astride a rearing horse is on the sidewalk in front of the theatre. We meet the same young cowboys once more at the corner of the theatre and this time we are let in on the picture's title—"Texas Bad Man."

Still another stunt he used this last summer to attract the public eye was the casting of six cakes of ice in forms spelling the title "Igloo." These were placed on a low platform in front of the theatre and passers-by were invited to exercise their skill to determine when the letters would melt away. Small mimeographed heralds were distributed in connection with this gag.

While discussing Brennan's activities we want you to know that all of the fine art work generally carried out for the State Theatre is handled by Joe Katz. Joe has been responsible for some unusually fine displays and they lend no small measure of success to the effectiveness of Brennan's showmanship. We hope, in the near future, to show some good photos of Katz's work so that other display men can see how he is helping put over the pictures.

So, as Brennan states, they do not get discouraged out his way when things don't run along just as they should, but, on the other hand, go out and promote inexpensive little stunts that keep theatre and attractions before the public. More power to him for his enterprise, and we'll hope to hear more about his activities.

CLEMMER HAS GOOD STUNT TO USE WITH LOCAL POLITICIANS

Many compliments are being received these days by James Q. Clemmer, manager of the Fox-Fifth Avenue Theatre, Seattle, Wash., by virtue of the unique way he has tied in his theatre with state political activities.

No different than other sections of the country this season, Clemmer's city is in the throes of rabid political discussion, both among innocent, unsuspecting citizens and the men they support in office through taxation. Each evening at nine o'clock between the first and second shows, two loyal and patriotic candidates for state office are tendered the privilege of appearing on the stage for the blowing off of their particular and respective steam on campaign problems and questions.

In order to prevent any wrangling and possibility of these five minute acts turning from sane discussion into a boxing bout, bidders for the same office on opposing tickets are not allowed to appear on the same night. The list of speakers include candidates for the offices of governor, state senator, state congressmen and other minor political berths.

This "Forum," as Clemmer's idea is called, is being nicely coddled by the newspaper boys, who are covering the speeches nightly and consequently according both theatre and speakers wide publicity. It looks like an original and corking stunt to pull at this time of the year, so we're passing it along pronto.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

This will introduce to our readers a real, dyed-in-the-wool showwoman—Mrs. E. M. Eagleston, manager of the Majestic Theatre, Seymour, Ind., and a member of the Round Table Club.

Mrs. E. M. Eagleston

Mrs. Eagleston has been owner and manager of theatres in different localities for a period of about twenty years — the Opera House at Henry, Ill.; the Grand, at Mt. Vernon, Ill.; the Grand, at Pana, Ill.; the Grand, at Charleston, Ill.; the Sour Wine, at Brazil, Ind., and the Colonial, in Indianapolis, at the time the latter was a picture and vaudeville house. However, at the present time she has disposed of all interests with the exception of the Majestic, at Seymour.

Other of her activities included ownership of the Cooperative Theatrical Booking Association, her own vaudeville circuit, which she sold ten years ago to John Bentley of St. Louis; the post of booker for 16 different theatres in Illinois, handling musical comedies and roadshow attractions direct from New York, and authorship of the Easy Method Ledger System for theatres, which Mrs. Eagleston claims is the only one of its kind on the market.

With her rich background of experience in showbusiness Mrs. Eagleston should become a valuable contributor to this department and we'll look forward to hearing from her.

"MOVIE BRIDGE" MADE BLUE MONDAY BIG DAY FOR HARRY W. WOODIN

Craze on the part of thousands of people for the game of bridge is being capitalized on in a big and novel way by Harry M. Woodin, manager of the Leimert Theatre, Los Angeles, Calif. Introduced as a feature in his business building program, "Movie Bridge" transfers to the theatre all the excitement in the actual game. It's a stunt, according to report, that turned a blue Monday at the Leimert into one of the biggest days of the week.

The accompanying photo shows a display arranged by Woodin to get the idea of his stunt before the public. As each player comes into the house he or she is handed a card which contains different playing combinations. The progress of the game from that point on until finish is handled by a trick arrangement of Woodin's on the stage and we fear an explanation on our part would be futile. We suggest that interested Club members get in touch with him.

It was the novelty of the idea that intrigued patrons—something different, but still something all could play, understand and enjoy, whether one of the useful awards came their way or not. Apparently, the game is adaptable to any size house and the kind that wouldn't look cheap in the best. It might prove, as in Woodin's case, a welcome change from the many give-away stunts worked to death in a majority of theatres this past year or so.

CARROTHERS USED NOVEL COPY TO SET FORTH STATEMENTS

We are reprinting below a portion of the advertising copy used by Don Carrothers of the Hermosa Theatre, Hermosa Beach, Calif., to sell "Tom Brown of Culver" because it's considerably different than the usual style.

The head of the ad read "We Are Proud to Present This Picture." Underneath, in large type and starting off each paragraph appeared the word "Because"; viz: "Because it will make you feel better. . . . Because . . . it will stir your heart and send your soul to the dry cleaner. . . . Because . . . it will make you a happier man, woman, boy or girl. . . . Because . . . it it will drive depression from your mind and uplift your spirit."

Incidentally, Carrothers thought so well of the picture and the business he did with it that it inspired him to write an enthusiastic letter of recommendation to his exchange man.

FRED JOHNSON LEASES TWO THEATRES IN OIL CITY, PENN.

Fred Johnson, for the past three years located in Oil City, Pa., where he at one time managed the RKO Drake and more recently had charge of the Latonia, has closed a deal to take over management and operation of the Adelphi and Liberty Theatres in Reynoldsville, Pa.

Johnson's move was actuated by the closing down of the Latonia last July and subsequent fruitless attempts on his part to effect a deal with local owners of the property. He will assume active charge of the Reynoldsville theatres Oct. 1 and will soon move his family into a newly built bungalow in that town. All his friends and fellow Club members wish him the best of luck.

ROBISON CASHING IN ON MOVIE COLUMN TIE-UP WITH A NEWSPAPER

Conducting a movie column for a newspaper is becoming increasingly popular among our Club members, according to reports that come in to this department. The most recent manager to turn scribe is Robert O. Robison in charge of the Rigney Theatre, Albany, Mo., and his collection of screen anecdotes and gossip is called "Snaps About Movie Folk."

A fair sized portion of the column bears directly on current and coming attractions at his theatre, giving Robison an opportunity to get over some really worthwhile publicity. A good stunt, and he is to be congratulated for selling his local editor the idea. If you think it's an easy task, just try it yourself.

HERE'S A GAG FROM FRANK BOUCHER FOR THE FOOTBALL FANS

As a follow-up to the many suggestions recently advanced by this department regarding the theatre and football season, here's another one being used to stir up interest among students by Frank Boucher, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Winchester, Ky.

During the two days showing of "Hold 'Em Jail," Boucher arranged a give-away of fifty tickets for two approaching football games between the local High School eleven and one of a neighboring city. In the same fashion that give-aways are generally handled, twenty-five tickets were awarded during one matinee and the balance the next. Regarding the football comedy feature, a story in the sports section of the newspaper urged the local coaches to bring the squad "to see how football should not be played." When advertising the stunt, the name of the local High School was tied-in to identify the matinee.

The above is another gag for the football tickler, Round Tablers, and thanks to Frank Boucher for passing it along. We can always depend upon this member to share his ideas with others.

Telegraph Tie-Up

Lou Goldberg, in charge of Warner exploitation activities, recently effected a deal with one of the large telegraph companies whereby all offices in the Greater New York City area will carry window cards to plug "Blessed Event." A large photo of Lee Tracy and Mary Brian, with copy on picture and playdate at the Strand, dominates the card that advises, "When a Blessed Event arrives, send your congratulations via Postal." The same copy will be used for a sheet to be slipped under all message writing desks in telegraph offices.

Anna Bell Ward Active

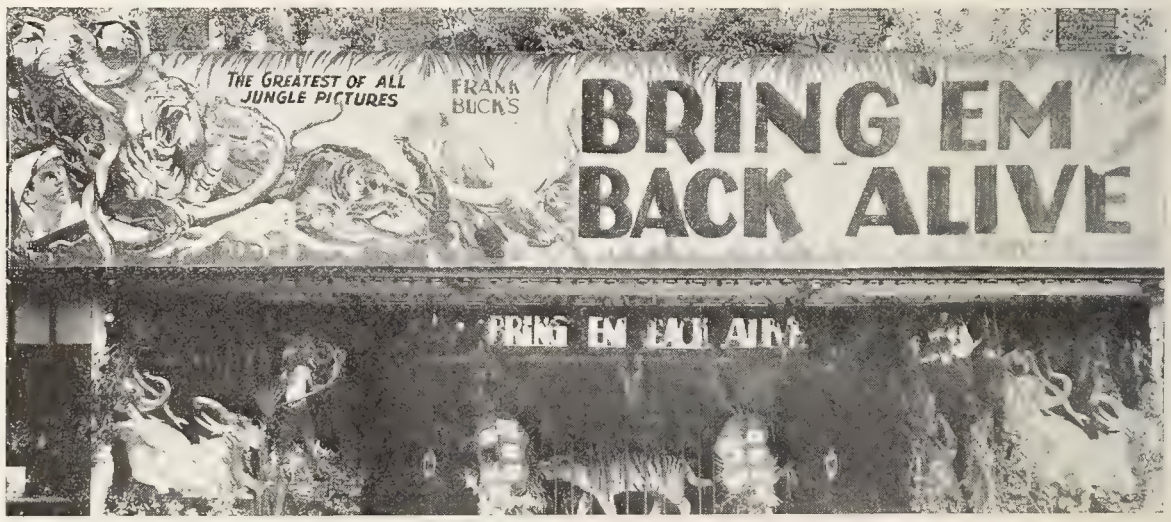
Anna Bell Ward, to whom this department is indebted from time to time for gleanings of showbusiness and its ramifications down around Lexington, Ky., is the secretary-treasurer and general manager of the newly formed Somerset Amusement Company, incorporated during September by Lexington theatre interests. Other officers include John B. Elliott, president, and Nelson Ward, of Cincinnati, vice-president.

The company has taken over the Virginia and Kentucky theatres in Somerset. Miss Mabel Pratt will be transferred from Paris, Ky., as manager of the Virginia.

JONES TIED-UP ON LOCAL POLITICS IN A RECENT CAMPAIGN

With the political campaign at its height, Charles Jones of the Fox Criterion Theatre, Santa Monica, Calif., put on a stunt in connection with exploiting "The Wet Parade" that not only intensified interest in the picture and put his theatre in the spotlight, but gave two congressional candidates the most hectic night of their political careers.

With one of the candidates an enthusiastic "wet" and the other a belligerent "dry," Jones had an ideal set up for a natural bit of exploitation that tied in perfectly with the political aspect of the picture.



The "wet" readily saw the great advantages of tying in on a joint debate on the question and the "dry" boy, although a little harder to convince, was also enough of a showman to realize that a debate preceded by a parade would gather a mob of people.

In conjunction with the managers of the two candidates, Jones first sold the idea of the debate to the local newspaper which has been supporting the "dry" side of the question and through its publicity, they were able to line-up a parade of about 400 automobiles, which headed by a band and carrying much red fire and plenty of signs about both politicians, as well as about a score on "The Wet Parade" and the Criterion Theatre, which paraded all through Santa Monica and environs for an hour before the debate.

The debate was held in the Municipal Auditorium, which was packed to the rafters and featured a big sign bearing the picture title and theatre play dates on the rostrum. And both candidates, who had seen the picture, alluded to it constantly in their remarks.

Results for Jones and the Criterion were three days' business that more than exceeded his fondest anticipations and the bringing into the theatre of many patrons upon whom ordinary types of advertising and ballyhoo would have had no effect.

FRONT GAVE CALGARY A THRILL

Calgary, Canada, home of Pete Egan, and site of his Palace Theatre, received a thrill not long ago when Pete treated them to a sensational front on "Bring 'Em Back Alive." The city had never seen its equal before. "New York had nothing on it, and I don't mean maybe," reports this Round Tabler from the wheat field region, and we're offering the above photo as evidence of his claim, notwithstanding that this reproduction will scarcely do justice to the atmospheric display.

SUMMARIZING POSSIBILITIES OF SCHOOL AND COLLEGE ACTIVITY!

Floyd Fitzsimmons Analyzes the Many Fine Opportunities Available to Theatre Managers in This Profitable Field!

EVERY wide-awake theatre manager has in the past been cognizant of the value of soliciting student attendance through co-operation with the schools and pupils directly. If so, he undoubtedly is at this time cooking up some stunt whereby he can increase receipts on some week night or a Saturday morning matinee. If not, the following suggestions may be of help in calling to his attention a few of the unlimited possibilities along these lines.

The ideas contained herein are not new. However, they may serve to refresh your memory and with some changes serve a definite purpose in your annual campaign for student attendance.

That familiar old word contest, reliable standby of all theatre managers, plays an important part here as in most no-cost theatre business-building campaigns or stunts. But, before getting down to specific contests, let's consider the proper angle or approach for such school activities. To begin with, read the box on this page which appeared in the editorial columns of the New York Herald-Tribune a few months ago. It may stimulate confidence where approaching the faculty is necessary for the success of an idea.

Primarily the editorial applies to elementary and junior high school pupils.

Don't let it stop you from a tie-up because there doesn't happen to be a book out on the picture you are playing. Obviously, it would help. Likewise, it is evident that, as mentioned in an earlier article, appropriateness to the subject is essential where the contest pertains directly to the picture. It is not probable that you would solicit elementary school patronage through contests or otherwise while playing a picture the type of "Red Headed Woman," for example. Limitations would be less strict where college students were concerned. For an interesting connotation of this, let me refer you to "School and Screen," an article (and a service as well) by Rita C. McGoldrick in the September 10th issue of MOTION PICTURE HERALD. If you haven't already read this, I earnestly suggest that you do.

Essay Contests

This comes first on the list because you are all familiar with its common usage and simplicity of arrangement. Hundreds of subjects are adaptable to essay contests. "How" and "Why" queries being the two most frequently used.

You can plan essay contests in co-operation with the local school faculty as regular weekly material for thought on the part of pupils.

Where possible, use subjects which pertain to coming attractions. Look through press books for such material as will be within scope of the pupils. A question can be augmented by either a descriptive paragraph or a few pertinent facts. If your bookings offer scant material for school compositions and essays there are always current topics which may appropriately fill the bill. At the moment, politics suggest unlimited dissection into essay material for high school and college students. Give the youngsters less hostile subjects to work upon.

Make it necessary for essays to be turned in regularly to the judges. The English teacher, the Principal and yourself can act as judges. The number of winners selected each week is left to your discretion. You might be successful in arranging to have the winning essays published in a local newspaper.

Announcement of the contests should be made from school bulletin boards and the Principal or English class teachers. The success of this idea will depend upon the manner in which you present it. The motive of course...Guest Tickets to the winning essay writers.

Neighborhoods necessitating co-operation with two or more schools can arrange for winners to be selected by judges named from each school. In this case it would be advisable to pick one winner from each school each week.

THE CHILD, THE BOOKS AND THE "MOVIE"

(From New York Herald-Tribune)

That you can lead a child to books but cannot make him read seems to be the chief discovery of the committee on children's reading which grew out of President Hoover's White House Conference on Child Health and Protection, as reported in a booklet, "Children's Reading," issued by the Century Company. "The average child usually prefers a literary diet somewhat and often startlingly different from that handed out to him by those who direct his reading," the committee blandly reports.

"The demand for children's librarians still exceeds the supply," the committee notes. "Only 7.3 per cent of the 12,000 members of the American Library Association in 1930 were children's librarians. In some cities children's librarians are reponsible for one-third to one-half of the total book circulation." More and better childen's librarians seem to be the answer. Give a child half a chance at good books, and he needs no one standing at his shoulder to make him read.

The comment on reading and the "Movies" is startlingly sensible. "Children . . . prefer attendance of the 'movies' to all other recreational activities. But the local showing of a film based on a book or related to books frequently sends children to the libraries, sometimes on their way home from the 'movie' theatre. Because of this, many librarians co-operate with local exhibitors in giving publicity to any good film based on a good book. It is the belief of many students of adolescent reading that methods of elevating the reading tastes of junior high school and elementary school pupils will be more effective if the attempt is made first to direct interest in motion pictures. Careful experimental work by Professor Herbert Blumer indicates that better results are obtained when the child is told what to look for in the 'movie' than when attempts are made to censor the films he sees."

Suggestions Herein Have Been Tried With Amazing Results in Attendance and Goodwill, Use Them for This Season!

Amateur Critics

Everyone likes the chance now and then to criticize the other fellow's work, favorably or otherwise. Assisted by the newspaper's willingness to publish picture reviews by pupils, contact the faculty head with the idea of starting a Critics Club at school. Student members of this club are entitled to write reviews of current pictures at your theatre with the idea of winning Guest Tickets in addition to having their work published in the local paper. Guest Tickets can be made good for some coming attraction.

Judges should be chosen from the school, newspaper and theatre.

Your co-operating newspaper should be generous with publicity on a stunt of this sort. An advance story each week on the picture to be reviewed by the Critics Club of Blank High School or College should be definitely agreed upon. If your running time for one attraction is a week, it might possibly be arranged to publish the three best reviews during that time. Where change is daily or three times a week, select the most appropriate picture for the students to see and write about.

Ad Writing Contest

Here is another entree to the classroom. Schools and colleges everywhere are stressing advertising courses these days in lieu of old unnecessary and unprofitable pursuits.

Contact the proper school authorities on allowing the pupils to participate in an ad writing contest. This can be arranged as a regular feature or simply a plug for one picture.

Materials for pupils to work with can be furnished through press sheets. Specifications and limitations as to size to be determined by the amount of space you are accustomed to using.

This ad writing stunt has been proven a valuable means of creating advance publicity on any coming attraction. The inducement is of course, Guest Tickets to the theatre. If the contest is a regular feature, you can undoubtedly arrange to present the student turning in the greatest number of accepted ads with either a cash present or some worthwhile gift. I suggest as a text for the pupils, you show them some of the Ken Long layouts which appeared recently in MOTION PICTURE HERALD.

An interesting supplement of this ad writing contest can be worked if the school has its own publication. The idea is this. Take one of the ads laid out by some member of the class which contains one or more errors...such as, leaving out the play dates ...sig. cut...or title...run it in the school paper offering Guest Tickets to the first (three) who correctly report all the errors to the manager of the theatre.

Geography Hounds

Maps fascinate most everyone. Try the pupils on familiarity with their own city. Perhaps the territory within the bounds of your noble city doesn't offer much in the way of fascination for local students. However, there is a possibility in the thought that to those pupils of Blank School who can best draw this familiar realm due credits will be given. That is, gifts or whatever you deem suitable.

Don't limit yourself to Blanktown. Should the picture which you are trying to ballyhoo be laid in Hawaii, it might be more to the point to have the boys and girls draw detailed maps of the Hawaiian Islands.

Town or city maps as suggested should contain all streets, rivers, important public buildings and the location of your theatre.

The idea is a map, no matter of what... town...county...state or country. The grade of pupils you turn this stunt loose to is left up to you.

Word Contest

Here is a stunt that offers an opportunity to plug shows and your theatre heavily. Contact your local newspaper with the suggestion that they sponsor this theatre-newspaper Word Contest. The stunt need not be limited to schools, unless you prefer.

A lengthy advance story in the paper gives details of the contest. It is simple, yet effective in its purpose. The idea is that contestants are to take the theatre's name...break up the letters and re-assemble them into as many words as possible... exclusive of proper nouns and two letter words, like "no," "an," etc. Arrange them in alphabetical order and send them into the Contest Editor of the paper. The first ten sending in the largest number of proper words will receive Guest Tickets to see the theatre's program. No words will be recognized unless they can be found in a standard dictionary or encyclopedia.

Song Writers

Another contest idea, but it has the faculty of drawing them no matter where it is run: It's called a Parody Contest. Following the same procedure as described in the Word Contest, co-operating with the local newspaper, folks are asked to try their hand at writing parodies. These parodies can be to any tune they desire...as long or short as they desire...only they must pertain to the local paper, your theatre or picture you are playing. At least some mention must be made in each one, to either of the above places. All contestants must send their efforts into the Contest Editor of the paper. Best ones selected by judges will be published.

If you have an organist at your theatre so much the better. He can add loads of fun to your program by singing the winning parodies.

Campus Personalities

Do they like this one! Those demure (oh yeah!) students of learning may be reticent about some things but scrambling to see whose picture is in the paper isn't one of them.

All of which gives us the idea that a sly cameraman might do wonders towards increasing the circulation of the local town "Blatter" and at the same time publicize your theatre and coming attractions.

Talk to your local paper about the idea. Here 'tis:

A cameraman from the newspaper or some student (en confido) unsuspectingly snaps pictures of students as they perambulate hither and yon 'round the campus. They may be in groups or alone. The photographs are published in the paper. Those recognizing themselves can, upon proof, secure a Guest Ticket to your theatre. If the snapshot is of a group, circle one of the heads as a means of identification.

This gag can be worked with the school paper should the local news turn you down. Needless to say, all stories pertaining to Photo Identification Contest, should carry ample copy regarding coming attractions, play dates, etc.

School and Class Nights

Build Business...wow the audience... that's what School and Class Nights can do for you. Opportunities for this sort of thing are too numerous to mention here... only a few will be touched, mainly to arouse interest.

If your town has two or more schools then School Nights are the thing. If only one school, then arrange to hold Class Nights.

School Nights can be made competitive or individual affairs. To start with, secure some popular boy or girl from each school to act as Master of Ceremonies on respective nights. If there is a school band get them down to play on the stage with the M. C. leading the audience in a chorus of high school songs.

On other School Nights arrange to have dramatic talent of the school put on one act plays. They will be glad of the opportunity of securing such practice.

If your town does not support two schools or colleges, Class Nights can be made into almost as interesting events. Suggest class leaders round up talent for stage entertainment. The idea is the same though generally handicapped by lack of numbers.

Reprints of this, as well as previous, Fitzsimmons' manuals are available to circuit division managers and independent exhibitors for distribution among their various theatres. Please do not request more than you actually need so that our limited supply will meet ordinary requirements.

NEXT WEEK

Floyd Fitzsimmons will give you the low-down on how to make HALLOWEEN a box office event for your theatre. Many sure-fire suggestions, too.

Where there are two school bands, there is generally keen rivalry. You may be able to arrange their meeting on the stage of your theatre to decide the "championship." The decision being given as a result of audience reaction. If properly handled this can be developed into an outstanding event.

The cheering squads of two local schools might like to try out-yelling each other. Here again is an opportunity of packing your house with students of both schools in an effort to determine the champion cheering team.

Further, in connection with School or Class Nights, you might arrange for students to hold a "silent" broadcast from the stage. That is, those taking part go through the regular procedure of any radio station in broadcasting of one of its programs only there is no radio hook-up—perhaps just a "mike" and an amplifier. As a suggestion students might select one of the popular national programs and imitate it from beginning to end, trying in every way to make it as much like the original as possible.

I honestly believe this idea could be worked into a regular box-office melon. It is certain to grab off a few lines of publicity in local papers in addition to getting students down to your theatre in droves.

Typing Contest

Boys and girls will both go for this. If your town or city has a business college or similar institution, you may be able to promote a limited course for the winner of a Typing Contest to be held on your stage. As another inducement, try promoting a portable typewriter for the winner. Either of these would make acceptable gifts at the same time insuring a maximum number of entrants.

You will no doubt be able to secure a number of typewriters for the occasion in exchange for credits. Contact a local representative of one of the various makes of typewriters. Should you be swamped with requests for entrance into the contest, plan to use a series of groups on different nights ...using as many in each group as you have machines for.

Copy to be written by contestants should pertain to some attraction which you wish to plug in advance. It need not be long. Obviously, there isn't much entertainment in watching a typing contest. Judges should be selected from the school faculty, newspaper and theatre. If you desire, you can ask the local paper to sponsor this Typing Contest in co-operation with the theatre, thereby insuring a maximum of free publicity on the stunt.

Designers

At the average high school designers are limited generally to girls though I believe the world's outstanding designers are men. Nevertheless, you might gain your point by presenting suitable gifts or Guest Tickets to the girls of Blank High School who can design the best dress for the star appearing in your next attraction.

Supply them with stills, letting them create the style of dress which they believe becoming to that star. Ask the drawing teacher at school, the local Fashion Editor and a local modiste to act as judges.

ATMOSPHERIC STUNTS USED BY McBRIDE TO SELL ESKIMO PICTURE

An atmospheric bally and use of a stunt made possible through a tie-up with a local merchant, rounded out a corking campaign made on "Igloo" by H. D. McBride, manager of the State Theatre, Spokane, Wash.

A noted explorer happened to be in the city in advance of the picture and McBride made arrangements with him to use a real "mushing" sled and a bona fide team of huskie dogs to act as a bally. Driven around town wherever large crowds collected and stationed in front of the theatre, the outfit attracted a lot of attention.

The bally was also used for a tie-in with a local newspaper's circulation department. Youngsters were offered a free ride on the sled and free admission to the picture in return for a six months' subscription to the paper. McBride's end of the deal resulted in several large ads on the attraction and a front-page publicity story.

Another gag consisted of placing cakes of ice containing cut-out letters spelling the title of the picture in a leading downtown florist's window and inviting lookers-in to estimate the length of time it would take for the ice to melt. The usual guest ticket gag was used in connection with this stunt. "Igloo" sundaes were featured at leading soda fountains and a downtown stationer featured a window display of Eskimo relics and implements.

The accompanying illustration shows the team stationed in front of the theatre and will convey a fair idea of the large cut-out letters mounted against an aurora borealis effect background. Blue lights were used in the title to heighten the effect. "See" lines and enlarged stills were placed at either side of theatre entrance.

CARROLL USED STORY IN HERALD TO GRAB FREE SPACE IN PAPER

Reading his MOTION PICTURE HERALD from cover to cover is one of the things done regularly each week by L. W. Carroll, manager of the Flynn Theatre, Burlington, Vt., and a few weeks ago he struck a yarn up in the front portion of the book and turned it into some free space for his theatre and a current newsreel.

The HERALD article had to do with the taking of shots by Pathe of the recent eclipse of the sun by the moon. Carroll shaped it up for home consumption by boiling it a bit here and there and his newspaper gave the story a prominent head in the news section. All of which was quite an event, reports Carroll, as this particular newspaper consistently refuses to give any review or advance write-up on any picture, regardless of its importance.

So, the moral of the above tale seems to be Read Your Herald from cover to cover. Only a few weeks ago our attention was called to how one Club member took "Best Pictures of the Month" and made an interesting lobby display of the material. Surveys dealing with star's popularity may also be used to tie-in with the winners' appearance at the theatre in some picture. Many other featured stories will present exploitation ideas and, as Carroll did, we suggest keeping an eye on them.

A NEW USE FOR TRAILERS

A short time ago your Chairman had a talk with Hal Young of National Screen Service with a view of carrying from time to time seat selling copy gleaned from the text used in trailers. It is a well-known fact that some of the smartest brains in showbusiness contribute to the peppy, convincing catch-lines and phrases injected into good trailers. Why not capitalize on such material for other purposes, such as program copy, newspaper ad catch-lines, etc., etc.?

Only a few days ago L. W. McCuan of Moutain Grove, Mo., wrote us a most interesting letter about this same slant. He has been running through his trailers regularly with a view of grabbing off some good copy. No doubt many other live-wire showmen are doing likewise. But on the other hand the vast majority have probably never given it a thought.

So now you can watch your trailers whenever they are on the screen and keep a note book and pencil handy to jot down the material that can be used to good advantage elsewhere than on your screen. If it sells seats via one medium there is no reason why it should not be just as effective in other ways.

My Kingdom for a Horse!!!

(W. B. Ohio "Mouthpiece")

And the cry was heard. Glenn Nelson secured a big white stallion, a blanket made of chicken feathers, a cut-out of the Four Marx Bros. and seating the boys snugly upon the fiery steed placed the whole shebang out on the walk in front of his theatre, properly bannered, of course. How it helped him to mop up—Wow! Glenn turned in the biggest week of the past year.

SELLING "TOM BROWN"!

When the RKO Mayfair Theatre, New York City, launched its engagement of "Tom Brown of Culver," the highly decorative front pictured above was used as a selling argument. Giant-size cadets covered almost the entire facade of the Seventh Avenue side of the building, and over fifty strings of gaily colored pennants were strung from roof to marquee. Enlarged cutouts and stills were used for lobby displays.

DOG STAR DISPLAYS HELPED WEHRENBERG PUT OVER A SERIAL

If some of our Club members still have a Rin-Tin-Tin picture to play off they may be able to cash in on the following method used to exploit "Lightning Warrior" by Fred Wehrenberg, head of the South Side Amusement Company, St. Louis, Mo.

As soon as he read in the papers that the famous old shepherd had gone to the happy hunting grounds for dogs, he had made a large heart (see photo) with a cut out of Rin-Tin-Tin in the foreground. Copy on the heart stated that the dog had died and that it was the last chance to see the animal in the afore-mentioned serial, the final episode being current at that time. The display was placed in front of all Wehrenberg theatres and helped increase box office receipts over 25 per cent.

Additional activities on the Wehrenberg circuit, engineered by Billy Moore, exploitation manager, include a corking tie-up made with various flower shops in the neighborhoods on "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm." We have a print of a photograph taken of one of the windows and while it is too faint for clear reproduction, we can easily see that it was attractively arranged. A miniature log cabin, porcelain animals, etc., were placed amid an appropriate setting of flowers and ferns. The theatres ads occupied a prominent position in the window.

Another gag used by Moore to exploit "Stranger in Town" consisted of sending personal letters to independent store-keepers, stating that the picture's theme dealt with a fight against the chain store system by the operator of an independent grocery store. A sample of the many letters received from various merchants is indicative of their appreciation of the opportunity to witness the picture gratis by presenting the original letter at the box office.

We're obliged to Fred Wehrenberg for passing along the above suggestions and we're shooting them right out to the other members of this organization. This is the first peep we've had from the South Side in several weeks and it's good to have this enterprising showman and his associates again on the active list. We'll be looking for more news from St. Louis.

CARROLL ENGAGED SERVICE STAFF TO EXPLOIT PICTURES

Once again we are able to report that L. W. Carroll, manager of the Flynn Theatre, Burlington, Vermont, has been stepping along at his usual pace in the matter of interesting the public in his theatre's attractions.

When exploiting "Lady and Gent" he used the newspaper contest suggested in the press book, promoting a generous amount of space in return for a small award and ten guest tickets. This ran for six days prior to opening and some very elaborate solutions were received.

For the month of August, instead of holding a "Greater Movie Season," he put over an exploitation contest among the theatre's service staff. Each member was assigned a picture to exploit (with exception of a couple of specials) and each man was allowed $5 for exploitation expenses, with an increase in the budget if the stunt met the approval of Carroll. Rating was given the men on the basis of business done the same weeks the past year and the man securing the largest increase was given a small cash prize at the end of the campaign.

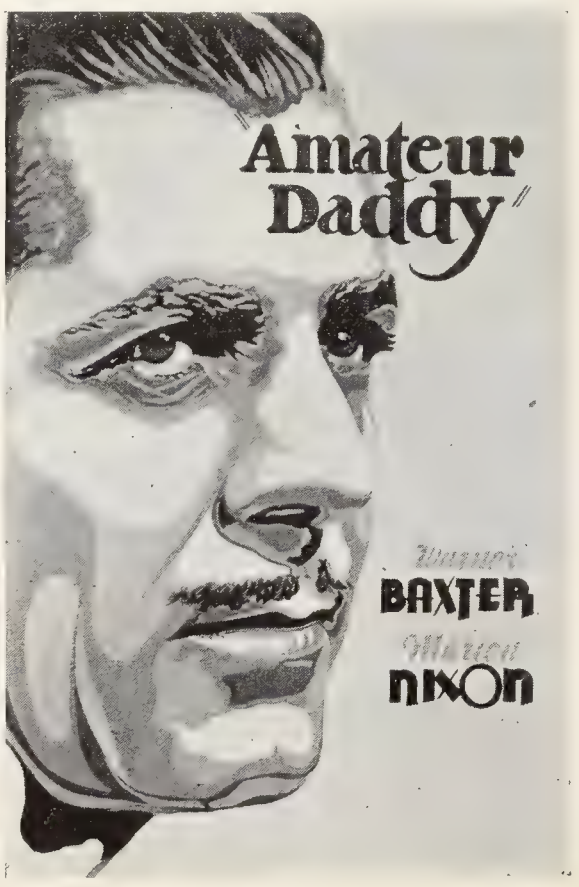
For "Unashamed" the boys rigged up a miniature electric chair with a doll in it and attracted a lot of attention. On "Guilty As Hell" a window frame was displayed with a yellow window shade pulled about three-quarters the way down. A black ribbon was pinned on the shade and it carried the following copy: "This ribbon meant love and death in "Guilty As Hell" (cast). Shadows of a man and woman were painted on the shade and in the open space, where curtain was not pulled down, real cloth trousers and dress extended below window frame.

On "Make Me a Star" one of the stunts published a short time ago in this department was picked up. This consisted of a set of four throw-aways with one word of the title on each. Copy on the reverse side stated that the papers "were all over town" and instructed finders to present a complete set of the title words at the box office and receive a guest ticket to the picture. The ones who succeeded in rounding up a complete set, including the throw-away with a Red star, became also entitled to take the girl-friend to a well-known local restaurant for a bite to eat.

We're mighty glad to hear from Carroll again and note that his firm is still getting out the interesting little theatre paper called the "Flynn and Majestic Theatre News." His newspaper advertising, according to some tear sheets at hand, continues to occupy prominent spots on the amusement page. His fellow Club members will be interested in hearing more about what's doing in show-business over his way.

Colonel Waugh Returns

Howard Waugh, manager of Warner's ace house in Memphis, Tenn., prior to a pooling arrangement formed between his concern and Loew in that city, and recently located at a Philadelphia house, is back again on his old job. As we write these lines the "Old Colonel from Dixie" is probably still making the rounds, shaking hands and renewing acquaintance with his old Memphis cronies. Congratulations, Howard, and don't forget that you were once an active contributor to this department.



POSTER ART WORK FOR THE THEATRE!

Once again we present two fine examples of the poster art from the efficient pen and brush of Arthur Halliwell of the Warner Theatres in Torrington, Conn. And incidentally, seeing as how he is from that particular town serves as a reminder that all good poster men are not located in the large cities.

Arthur shows two separate and distinct types of work in these two posters. One, a sort of line arrangement, while the other is an above average high-light piece.

Both, however, are typical of this fine artist's work. We shall be looking forward to many more for the series.

ORLOVE ON HIS NEW JOB AS MANAGER OF TIVOLI, MILWAUKEE

In the closing paragraph of the last article this department carried on the activities of Louis Orlove, former manager of the Uptown Theatre, Milwaukee, we announced that we had just received word of his transfer to the Tivoli, another Midwesco house some distance away from his old stand. Due to some changes effected by the city management, he was elected to leave a neighborhood where he had been exceptionally successful in the building up a large amount of good will and patronage.

However, we note that Louis was somewhat familiar with his new neighborhood, knew just about what to hand the patrons, and forthwith went into action on arrival. He held a Family Night a few weeks ago, which included a double feature program and Rube Tronson and His Cowboy Band on the stage. Louis also has the habit of handing out short letters mimeographed in his own handwriting, setting forth his idea of what is in store for patrons at forthcoming shows. He is also using giveaways, such as "Barrel of Fun," etc., to bolster up attendance.

With his past record of achievement in our mind, there's no reason to think that Orlove will do otherwise than put the Tivoli where his concern wants it—that is, if it's humanly possible to do so. Maybe then he'll return to the Uptown, where the entire community must miss their poular manager. In the meantime, we'll be on the lookout for further news concerning show-selling at his new location.

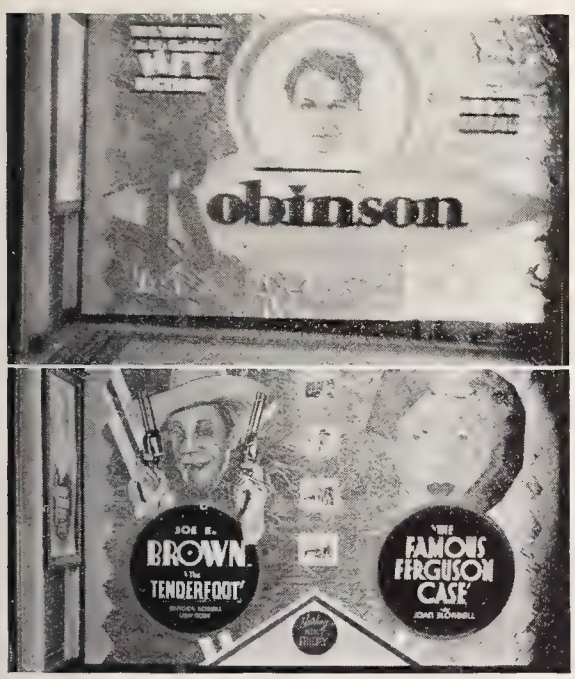
ARNOLD GATES DOING GOOD WORK MANAGING GRANADA, CLEVELAND

Space grabbing in newspapers, a post card gag and a novel street bally figured in recent exploitation activities engineered by Arnold Gates, manager of the Granada Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio. We are indebted to H. M. Addison, manager of the division, for calling these to our attention.

Just a lucid explanation of how a cooling system really functioned secured for Gates a corking story on the subject in his local paper. He escorted some newspapermen through his "weather factory," as it is termed in the story, and explained that it was humidity control, not the fact that it was so much cooler, that kept the house so comfortable for patrons. This was "news" to the fellows on the paper and they came through with a good yarn.

Another story in the paper described how people could get themselves guest tickets by writing as many times as possible the title "Man About Town" on a penny post card and mailing same to the theatre. One meticulous handwriter topped them all with 611 times, but there were few better than 500.

His bally consisted of a three-wheeled auto bannered with the catchline, "The Two-Mile-a-Minute Sensation," which proved to be quite an attraction when driven through the streets and about local swimming beaches. It was the novelty of the vehicle that caught the public eye.



As Addison observes, the above is just a little data on what can be done at a neighborhood theatre when there's an up-and-doing manager in charge. We hope Gates will send along further information.

LYNCH AND CARROLL STILL CARRYING ON AT BRIDGEPORT, CONN.

After a long period of silence on part of the skippers of the Cameo Theatre, Bridgeport, Conn., we are able to report that Manager Lynch and Assistant Manager M. J. Carroll are still pursuing their favorite occupation of vending picture entertainment.

For instance, take the occasion of "Dark Horse," a picture they ballied with a parade that made the town sit up and take notice. Led by the American Legion band, the procession marched down the main street of the city and other prominent thoroughfares in the business section and helped sell many an extra admission at the box office. Autos were supplied by the local Ford dealer, while theatre ushers and a number of press boys filled in as sign carriers. Another usher and a friend attracted much attention with impersonations of characters in the film. One of the accompanying photos shows a good shot of the line-up of the parade.

Numerous tie-ups among merchants for excellent window displays were also made by Lynch and Carroll during the past season, among which was a corking deal engineered with a Men's Shop for the give-away of twenty-five Cagney shirts on one of Jimmie's pictures. The throw-aways were distributed over the city by the merchant.

The other illustration shows samples of the foyer displays these two showmen have been turning out of late to plug forthcoming attractions. One side of the inner lobby is used for this purpose and the work is generally posted one week in advance. If Lynch will send us some larger photos, showing the work in detail, we'll gladly see that it is reproduced.

We're glad to hear from these two tardy contributors again and hope they'll both do better, as far as contributions are concerned, in the future. In the meantime, we know they will keep up the good work.

NATIONAL EDUCATION WEEK! November 7th to 13th

Each year the committee in charge of National Education Week select a subject for each day. The purpose is to emphasize certain important educational and historical facts and bring them home to children in particular and everybody in general.

The schedule for this year's observation of Educational Week is as follows:

Mon. Nov. 7th—"Homes and the Pioneers."
Tues. Nov. 8th—"The Schools of the Pioneers."
Wed Nov. 9th—"Two Centuries of Progress in New World Schools."
Thurs. Nov. 10th—"The Schools and Equality of Opportunity."
Fri. Nov. 11th—"The Schools and American Ideals."
Sat. Nov. 12th—"The Schools and a Progressive Living."
Sun. Nov. 13th—"The Schools and the Things of the Spirit."

Education is of course the keynote of this entire week set aside each year. It affords intelligent showmen a glorious opportunity of taking an active part in their own community's observance and benefit through theatre cooperation and otherwise. To those who know how to grasp opportunities we need say no more. They will find ways and means of making this week mean something to their theatres.

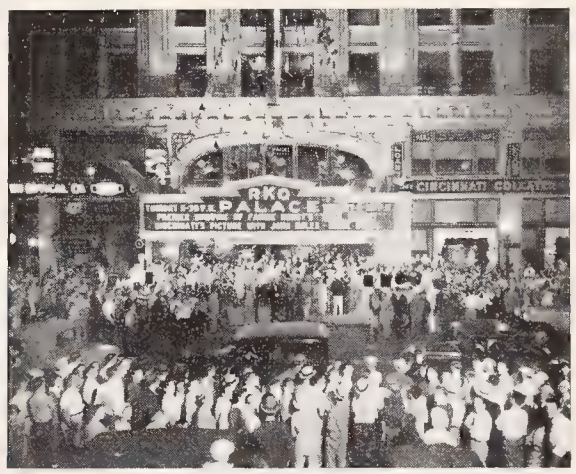
A lobby display of an old fashioned bar and all the paraphernalia that goes with it, such as brass rail, large mirror, pretzel jar, brass cuspidors, etc., and even a bona fide bartender, was inexpensively assembled by Robert Anthony, manager of the Temple Theatre, Cortland, N. Y., and helped bring most gratifying returns to the box office on "Speakeasily."



None of the accessories of the time-honored institution described above were omitted from the ensemble, not even liquid refreshment and appetizing free lunch promoted from local concerns. Hy Gordon, a sign artist recently acquired by the Schine Circuit's Cortland organization, was responsible for the excellent art work done on this well patronized bar.

We have a snapshot of the bar at hand but it's altogether too faint for reproduction. However, from the original, we can make out that it was a most attractive display.

NAT HOLT, CLEM POPE AND SHURE PUT ON A HOLLYWOOD SHOW

All the spectacular trimmings ever accorded an old-fashioned Hollywood picture premiere heralded the opening of "Back Street" in Cincinnati, Ohio, on its day and date showing with the RKO Mayfair, New York City.

Society turned out en masse; sun arcs whitened the theatre front with brilliant rays; dozens of gay pennants decorated the front of the theatre building and marquee; traffic was tied-up by crowds of people storming the theatre doors—all because Fannie Hurst, author of the picture's story, is considered a Cincinnati girl. She really hails from Hamilton, a matter of twenty miles distant, but later moved to the city which instantly adopted her as its own. Many of her relatives, prominent city officials, civic leaders and other representative men of the city were on hand for the gala opening. The accompanying photo speaks for itself.

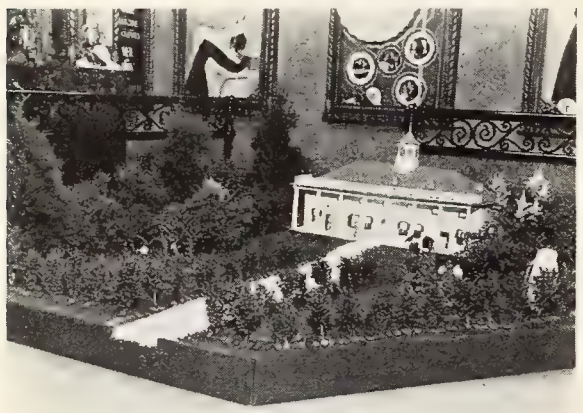
Major share of the credit for giving Cincinnati one of its biggest nights in amusement history must perforce go to Division Manager Nat Holt, City Manager Clem Pope and Manager Manny Shure of the Palace Theatre. Everyone concerned with the premiere did excellent work and not only contributed to making the affair an outstanding one in amusement circles but proved that the good old cash register could be made to sing its old, comforting refrain. A live outfit—that Cincinnati bunch of showmen. You've heard a lot about them and, if we have anything to do with the matter, you'll hear more, and we are rarely mistaken in our predictions about this remarkably fine aggregation of showmen.

YOU CAN'T SINK A FLEET WITH ONE BROADSIDE!

If there is any branch of business where determination, pertinacity and plain every day stick-to-it-iveness is needed, it is advertising.



The business man who goes into advertising with intentions of firing a salvo and returning to port is all mixed up in his battle plans. It takes more than one broadside to sink a fleet.

Advertising, to be successful and profitable, should be prudently planned, designed to fit the business, backed by good merchandise and service, and the whole carried out faithfully and continuously—Fame.

MORE ABOUT FLORAL DISPLAYS IN LOBBY BY J. M. BLANCHARD

In line with an article on floral display for the lobby recently published in this department under the by-line of H. M. Addison, we would like to call attention to further effort in this direction by J. M. Blanchard, city manager for Publix in Sunbury, Pa. Blanchard favors a tie-up with a retail instead of a wholesale florist for reason that he considers the former more anxious to place his wares directly before the public.

When preparing a bed for the display he first covers the floor with waterproof paper, covering that with ashes or cinders and a top dressing of good, rich soil. With an artificial light he claims that most anything can be grown, and by using grass seed that grows in shade, it's possible to have a good lawn around the shrubbery in a week's time. However, care should be taken not to keep the soil too wet as it will turn sour. Letting it dry out well and a liberal sprinkling will keep the grass and plants green indefinitely.

There's about $200 worth of shrubbery in the bed represented in the "Mt. Vernon" reproduction shown in the photo on this page, with lawns and flower beds in full bloom. Blanchard has had a number of rock gardens, etc., but this one caused more attention than any lobby display ever made for his theatre. The photo is too small to do any kind of justice at all to this handsome display, but readers will at least get some idea of the arrangement.

The small run-around cut shows the emphasis put on the "Cool" idea, that big electric sign atop the building standing out like a black eye. The idea was also further carried out in the lobby, where the cooling sign portrayed a girl standing on the beach, dressed in white silk gown. The gown was animated by an electric fan.

Another gag recently used by Blanchard consisted of a tie-up with the local Chamber of Commerce for publication of a folder containing interesting historical notes on the city and other statistics. A footnote at the bottom of each page stated, "Make the Strand Your Meeting Place." The back page read, "Compliments of the Strand Theatre."

Getting back to the subject of floral displays not for the lobby, it appears that both Blanchard and Addison arranged fine displays for their theatres for a most reasonable outlay of money. It is also reasonable to believe, as Blanchard states, that the retailer should prove a more interested prospect for a tie-up of this sort than a concern interested only in selling retailers. However, in Addison's case it was necessary to tie-up with the nursery man to secure the large trees.

At any rate, we know that these displays will interest many of our members and will, undoubtedly, furnish inspiration for the construction of others in due season. It's too bad a couple of photos showing Blanchard's rock gardens are done in color, for that prohibits reproduction.

SID DAVIDSON TOOK FULL ADVANTAGE OF MAX FLEISCHER TOUR

Full advantage of the widespread popularity of Max Fleischer as the creator of animated movie cartoons, was recently taken by Sid Davidson, manager of the Earle Theatre, Philadelphia, when the originator of "Betty Boop" and other cartoon characters paid a week-end visit to the city. Fleischer accepted Davidson's invitation to participate in a cartoon tie-up and also appeared at the theatre.

The tie-up involved the following angles: a one week advantage of several hundred originals from the Fleischer studios; display of a special cartoon machine; exhibition of the original glass top table used to sketch the first Fleischer cartoon; personal appearance of Fleischer and Miss Mae Questal, the "voice" of "Betty Boop"; personal appearance of "Cookie" Bowers, who creates the "noises"; appearance of Fleischer at Gimbel's, which led to an ad break in the paper, and a radio broadcast by the Fleischer party.

ED HIEHLE LEFT IT TO FANS TO ADJUDGE STAR'S POPULARITY

Building around the idea that John Gilbert sought for two years a talkie vehicle worthy of effort before appearing in "Downstairs," Ed. H. Hiehle, manager of the Midland Theatre, Newark, Ohio, arranged a reviewing contest among patrons to decide on merit of the picture.

It was announced via newspaper readers that one, two, three and four star ratings were to be given the picture in all answers submitted by letters from patrons. The letters were sent to the newspaper office by virtue of a pre-arranged tie-up. Fifty guest tickets good for future attractions were awarded. The newspaper came through with some excellent breaks on photos and readers, Hiehle taking advantage of Gilbert's recent marriage to get away with an extra two-column cut and caption.

Finding it impossible to arrange positive schedules for a greater period than ten days to two weeks in advance on account of showing pictures so close to release date, Hiehle recently issued a bulletin card advising patrons of the circumstances. He did this to get across some extra plugging for Greater Movie Season and at the same time deliver his message. It was a neatly gotten up card, listing attractions and referring readers to daily newspaper ads for the remainder of August dates.

It's good to hear from Round Tabler Ed. Hiehle again and we'd be interested to learn how his poll on the popularity of Gilbert panned out. Certainly, it was an effective method of promoting interest in the attraction.

By the way, Ed, how are the boys who used to attend those Gus Sun conventions? Are they still in showbusiness?

AN UNUSUAL LOBBY DISPLAY!

The above photo shows a no-cost lobby display promoted for "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" by Thomas P. Ronant, manager of the Madison Theatre, Peoria, Ill. A local florist supplied the necessary trimmings, etc., and the balance of the work was done in the theatre workshop. A similar display was used by Louis Labine, manager of the Strand Theatre, New Britain, Conn.

STEIN'S MERCHANDISING!

Diversified Activity Proving Effective for This Indiana Showman With Many Fine Ideas

THE last time the Club heard from L. S. Stein he was advertising manager for Warner Brothers Theatres in Indiana. He subsequently became assistant to the Chicago director, in addition to handling the Indiana job, and then, in order to keep in extra good training, took on management of the Shakespeare Theatre in Chicago. A short time ago he was appointed manager of the Parthenon Theatre, Hammond, Ind., where he is now at home and still taking care of Indiana advertising for the Warner houses. Theatre routine has been turned over to his assistant, William Cole, a former RKO man, and Stein is devoting his time to exploitation. Following is a resume of what has taken place since he took over the helm of the Parthenon:

Mailing Campaign!

Individual letters played important parts in campaigns made on "Symphony of Six Million" and "Mouthpiece," about six hundred Jewish families receiving one form while a hundred or so of another kind were sent out to the medical profession. Lawyers were circularized on the latter picture.

A real old-fashioned bar with all the proper trimmings was promoted for "Wet Parade" and beer was served to all patrons, the only cost to theatre being 40 cents for ice. A "wet" barrel and a "dry" barrel, along with a vote barometer, were placed in front of the theatre a week in advance to record the results of a prohibition poll and a big parade was staged on the Saturday night before opening. Police escort, trucks, and automobiles with wet and dry banners, made an effective ballyhoo. The Aimee McPherson-Walter Huston debate picture was also booked for the occasion.

"Rich Are Always With Us" was the next picture in line, for which he staged a special Ruth Chatterton matinee. Lady patrons were invited to play bridge in the mezzanine and coffee and cakes were promoted for this occasion. A street bally consisting of a luxurious new Cadillac sedan, driven by a uniformed chauffeur and carrying an usher dressed in formal attire, also played an effective part.

Street Ballyhoo!

When he played "Huddle" he secured an excellent break on a street bally because of a Shriner's parade and convention in town at that time. The night before the picture opened three-foot cut-out letters were all ready for several boys to carry when they crashed the parade, scrambling up the letters and going through manoeuvres until they spelled out the title of the picture, playdates, etc.

"As You Desire Me" was the next offering and for that Stein tied-up with a beauty parlor to stand the cost of his opening day ad, which, incidentally, is now a weekly feature. Penny post cards were also mailed out to all Women's Clubs in Hammond.

Regulation ballyhoo, consisting of street net, window cards and an elaborate advance lobby display opened "Letty Lynton" to smash trade, and this situation was taken advantage of to plug a Carnival Show, the advance bally for "Freaks." A huge clown head with flashing green eyes was hooked-up on the railing above the entrance to the main foyer. Two large arms, suspended from the head and the body, in the form of a big shield, carried the selling copy. The extended arms held a trapeze on which a good-looking girl in tights swung to and fro while handing out pluggers to advertise the Carnival.

Ties With Twin Stunt!

For two and one-half weeks in advance of the Carnival the newspapers had been plugging a Twin Contest and Stein decided to stage the event in conjunction with the former. Seventy-five sets of twins were entered and 65 of them actually made their appearance on the theatre stage. Awards in the form of five all-expense trips to Niagara Falls and Washington, D. C., were promoted from the Greyhound Bus Lines, which, incidentally, were later arranged for each of the 28 theatres on the local Warner circuit. The night before opening a parade was held, consisting of police escort, uniformed major domo leading a horse ridden by the trapeze lady and followed by a caliope and a dancing bear. Other features of the parade included a beautiful little girl dressed in white ballet dancer's costume, standing in a small chariot drawn by two Shetland ponies; a stilt walker, and a $7,000 sound wagon loaned by a Chicago baking concern. This truck is claimed to be one of the most elaborate affairs of its kind in the country. Spotted throughout the parade and raising Cain generally were 30 youngsters dressed in clown suits. Every one of the 2,250 seats was occupied during the first show, giving the house one of the best Thursdays in the year.

An especially built circuit front further carried out the Carnival idea and ushers and cashiers were dressed in clown costumes. Four regular Midway games ran in the lobby, the "hoop-la" game being sold to a local hosiery shop. Several gross of novelties and kewpie dolls were given away at very slight cost. Loaves of bread were also given to every one who entered the theatre and other awards consisted of passes and promoted merchandise.

Following "Freaks" came "Night Court," which was plugged during the run of the Carnival show by use of a regular judge's bench with lights on each end and usher dressed in black robe presiding and pounding a gavel. He sentenced each passerby to attend the picture.

For "Tenderfoot" Stein had constructed a hugh laughing head of Joe E. Brown, which was placed against a background of red underwear, babies' bibs, scissors, burlap bag, etc., and surrounded by a rocking chair, hobby horse and a fire extinguisher. Appropriate comedy cards explained the several articles. Patrons were invited to throw darts at Joe's head and they did so with much zest.

Smart Advertising!

Copy of the ad reproduced here is in tune with many of the stunts described above and represents a cross-section of Stein's activities. Note at the upper portion the department store ad, which, we believe, paid the cost of the entire ad. It also brings out the Carnival show angle, mentions the Twin Contest and finishes up with display copy for "Freaks."

In conclusion we can only state that such a live member of our Club should be a more consistent contributor and now that he's back at his home stand again maybe he will let us hear from him more often. Managing one house and directing advertising and exploitation for a score of others is a man's size job and a darn good alibi for not having time to set down a lengthy account of show-selling activities. However, we will hope that there will be a let-up now and then which will permit Stein to find the necessary time to pass a lot of good selling stunts along to his fellow Round Tablers.

Changes in RKO Ranks

The following changes have been made in RKO theatres in several cities:

Thomas Meehan has taken Harvey Watkins' place as manager of the RKO Albee Theatre, Providence, R. I.; Harry Rice is the new manager of the Riverside Theatre, Milwaukee, succeeding Harry Bailey, who has been transferred to the Hillcrest, Los Angeles. Jack Hare has been named assistant manager and publicity man for the Mainstreet, Kansas City, under Lawrence Lehman, and supplants Marvin Park, transferred to the Orpheum at Omaha. H. J. Cavanaugh is the new assistant manager of the Orpheum, Des Moines, with George Tucker handling publicity.

FRANK HILL'S NOVEL ADVERTISING STYLE ATTRACTS ATTENTION

Always noted for his distinctive newspaper advertising, Frank B. Hill, manager of the Liberty Theatre, Walla Walla, Wash., recently inaugurated a series of ads that appear to strike a different note as far as general scheme of layout, etc., is concerned. The accompanying reproduction of one will serve to get across the idea.

He takes, for instance, a box like the one in the upper right hand corner of the ad, and secures, presumably from newspaper mat service, some little gag to catch the eye. This may or may not have some bearing on the current attraction; in the case illustrated it doesn't mean a thing except as an attention-getter. The line "Do You Inhale" has been nationally advertised and is familiar to most everyone who reads the newspapers or listens in on the radio.

The funny sketch of a groom kissing a bride may or may not illustrate a form of inhaling—and who cares—as copy in the ad points out; when it caught the eye for further perusal of copy, it did its work.

We could show you other examples, such as one with a gag-box of a man striding along naked except for a barrel draped around his mid-section, and headed "No Sir!" with further copy reading: "Even a Barrel Won't Conceal Your Enthusiasm

After You See" so-and-so in such-and-such a picture, but think the illustration will convey a fair idea of Hill's style. He doesn't claim any originality for the idea, admitting that other showmen have at times used something similar and even calls attention to the M-G-M ads that have appeare in motion picture trade papers from time to time as a model for anyone to follow if interested in this type of advertising.

Since the ads appeared Hill has received many very favorable comments from different people around town who are interested in advertising, which, in itself, is proof that the ads received attention. One thing appears necessary, as far as his style is concerned for general use—enough space to make mats and copy stand out. We've noted that Frank generally has plenty of this at his disposal and we're not in a position to state whether this is due to liberal policy on part of Inland Theatres or local advertising rates. However, space he has, and it's used to advantage, as you can see.

The above is the first report we've had on Hill for several weeks and we're glad to be able to pass along this information to the rest of the gang. He secured excellent results through use of this type ad and wants to share his good luck with others.

A LOW COST FRONT BY CURDTS!

A MOST inexpensive display, which created a lot of enthusiastic comment among theatre patrons, was recently made for "Man Called Back," by Ed. C. Curdts, partner and one of the managers of the Bijou Theatre, Greenville, S. C. Not only did the lobby please the good old customers, but they liked ehe picture, too, so everything was 100 per cent, reports Curdts.

For the cost of about one dollar for gas to operate the car used to get cane from a local patch of canebrake and work done by the display man, he built the attractive display pictured in the accompanying photo. Note that stalks of cane, entwined with cane cross-members and foliage, were placed across the entire entrance, except directly in from the box office, where space was left for patrons to enter and leave. Posters and stills decorated both cane and side panels.

Curdts believes that if fellow Round Tablers are able to secure cane or some substitute for use on this picture they will be pleased with both comments from patrons and a resultant increase in receipts. At least he and his partner, Vardy "Turk" McBee, found this to be the case, and they are passing along the tip for other members.

HAMILTON HELD BIG KIDDIES PARADE UP AT NORWICH THEATRE

It took B. B. Hamilton, manager of the Palace Theatre, Norwich, Conn., to stage the biggest kiddie parade ever put over in his city. The occasion, while a good will stunt to all appearances, was utilized to plug "Dark Horse."

Approximately 2,000 boys and girls lined up at the city playgrounds and paraded through the main streets en route to the theatre. A drum corps added a lively touch to the affair. The program at the theatre opened at 10 o'clock with a concert by the Rotary Band. Hamilton welcomed the horde of kiddies and his brief talk was followed by speeches from several city officials.

We have a photo of the gathering at hand but its proportions scarcely permit reproduction. However, we can make out the banners and signs that were made up to advertise the current attraction, the band, etc. The local newspaper came through with a four column cut and story, all of which did not do B. B. and his theatre a bit of harm. Now that Hamilton is back from his vacation and has tackled the new season, we'll expect a lot more news concerning the Palace.

LAMM MADE A DEAL WITH BARBERS UNION FOR A NOVEL STUNT

There's always some new stunt cropping up to interest the kiddies in theatre-going and this time we'll have to pin one of the Club medals for practical showmanship on the breast of Julius Lamm, manager of the Variety Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio.

The picture really tells the story, but just in case the ensemble baffles you a bit, let us state that the scene is the Variety amid the festivities of a Saturday morning matinee, on which occasion a deal was made with the local Barbers' Union to hand out haircuts. It was a good-will stunt more than anything else and didn't set the house back a nickel. The union consented to do the job just to get across an organization message.

The above bears all the earmarks of originality as far as we are concerned, and that's the way it will go unless some one contests Julius' claim.

CLIMB ABOARD THE BAND WAGON!

JEAN ARMAND sends his application for membership in the Round Table Club from Nogales, Ariz., where he manages the Fox-Nogales Theatre for F. W-C. He's located right alongside of the border; believes his theatre represents an American outpost; plays both American and Spanish films on certain days, and his cashier knows how to change either an American or Mexican dollar. Prior to taking his present position, Armand was the managing editor of "Inside Facts of Stage and Screen." He has followed this department of the Herald for some time and admits that it helped him with his work. We believe we can count on him to help keep the old ball rolling along.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

M. M. SWANK is the Swank of Swank & Dryden, proprietors of the Nova Theatre, Stockton, Kan., and we are taking this opportunity to acknowledge his application for membership in this organization. He's not only a newcomer among the ranks of his fellow Round Tablers but is, comparatively, a tyro in this old Spanish art of showmanship. He and his partner Dryden took over the Nova the early part of this past summer, are now located in a new building and look forward to a prosperous season. Swank tells us the Herald has been invaluable in getting under way and promises to make some contributions under his own name in the near future. We hope he will keep in touch with his Club and want him to know that we stand ready to serve him to the best of our ability.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

HOBART H. GATES takes exception to a recent statement made by C. W. Wheeler, who, a few weeks ago, uniquely described himself as a one-man theatre staff. Hobart operates the Garlock Theatre out in the Black Hills of Custer, South Dakota, and not only owns his house but acts as manager, signs contracts, does the booking, takes care of all equipment, operates sound and projection and keeps the books. During his spare moments he 'phones the wife, telling her that he hopes to spend the Xmas holiday with her and the kiddies; so, according to all this, he really can be considered a competitor of Wheeler's for the distinction of one-man theatre management. Oh, yes; we forgot to add that he fires the boiler in cold weather and finds a few moments to eat a bite now and then. However, despite all these handicaps, we'll hope to hear what Gates is doing to take in gold, groceries or whatever his patrons happen to bring to the box office. What say, Hobart?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JAMES G. JONES is in charge of the Rialto Theatre, Bushnell, Ill., and a cordial welcome is also extended this new member of our Club. Jones has been following this department's activities for some time and now proposes to help the good work along by sending along some accounts of what he's doing to sell shows. Let's have them, James, and you may count on Club headquarters to shoot the word along to your many fellow Round Tablers.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

C. A. CUNNINGHAM manages the Strand Theatre over in Somerville, Mass., and he's another recruit for this great army of showmen. We state that Cunningham is a manager, but, for all we know, he may be the owner and operator of the Strand, for definite information is lacking on his application card. Regardless of this, however, we're happy to have him with us and hope he'll become an active contributor to these columns. Let us know what you're doing, C. A., to sell the Somervillians.

GEORGE LINDSEY is located 'way out in Eureka, Utah, where he either owns, operates or manages the Star Theatre. His application card for membership in the Round Table Club does not state just what his official capacity is and until we hear differently we will credit him with the title of owner-manager. At any rate, he's in the army now and ready to be introduced to his fellow Club members. Give him a big hand, fellows, and tell him you want to hear about what's going on out his way.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

PAUL W. KRAUS is the manager of the Happy Hour Theatre in the town of Fulton, N. Y., and we're also taking this opportunity to acknowledge his Club membership application. Fulton, pronounced Full-ton up in his neck of the state, is a live little burg and there's no reason why we shouldn't expect some good, snappy show-selling tips from this newly elected Round Tabler. Shoot along your ideas, Kraus, so the rest of the fellows will know what's going on in showbusiness up your way.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

EDWARD C. JOHNSON is another assistant-manager to join this outfit and we've posted his name among the many other potential theatre bosses on the Club roster. With the day-to-day coaching he's getting, we predict it won't be long before we'll be announcing his promotion to the next rung up the ladder and, until then, will be on the lookout for news of what's doing around the Ready from both him and his boss.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

TOMAS B. ESTACIO is the business-secretary of the Cine Y. M. C. A. attached to Fort McKinley in the city of Rizal, Phillipine Islands, and, consequently, the boss of what goes on in showbusiness in this far-away section of the world. His application, which we are now acknowledging before his host of fellow showmen, further indicates the international scope of this ever-growing organization. It will be interesting to get a slant on show-selling activities in the Phillipines and we'll count upon Estacio to keep his Club informed.

M. F. ZALESNY is located down along the Rio Grande and manages the theatre by that name in Las Cruces, New Mexico, for Fox-West Coast. We also have his application for Round Table membership at hand and this is the time to have him meet the rest of the fellows in this organization. Welcome to the gang, Zalesny, and please see that you do your part toward keeping this department full of constructive ideas each week. Jot down an account of that last stunt that brought in extra business for your house and shoot it in to Club headquarters. We'll do the rest.

ARTHUR D. RABE is the skipper of the Mosholu Theatre, one of Lee Och's houses up in the Bronx section of New York City. According to the dope we have at hand, this new member of our Club has dabbled considerably in show-business during the portion of his thirty-three years he spent in it. Not only has he been in charge of a number of well known theatres in the Metropolitan district, but he's taken cracks at other branches of the game, including a job as critic on the old "Dramatic Mirror"; press representative for Shubert and RKO, and special representative for Al Jolson, Ted Healy, Belle Baker, Harry Richman and a number of other headliners. We're glad to have him with us and if Rabe can't supply this department with a lot of good ideas, we're 'way off our guess.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

DAVIS E. GANTZ has the job of assisting J. A. Yovim with management of the Liberty Theatre, Tacony, Philadelphia, Pa., and we're chalking up on the Club roster the name of another man whom we predict will soon be bossing a house of his own. At any rate, with the excellent rating given him by Yovim, he'll be ready when the chance comes along and we'll be standing by to make the announcement. Give your boss our best regards, Gantz, and tell him we'd like to know what's going on at the Liberty.

DOMINIC REDA is another owner-manager to join our organization and he is located down in Vicco, Ky., where he operates the Pastime Theatre. At this writing you are a full-fledged member of the Round Table Club, Dominic, so see that you do your share toward carrying on the good work of this department. Every member contributes his bit, so we'll be on the lookout for some news concerning show-selling at the Pastime.

SHOWMEN'S REVIEWS

This department deals with new product from the point of view of the exhibitor who is to purvey it to his own public

THE concept of this department is that the exhibitor is concerned not with any critic's idea of "how good?" or "how poor?" but rather with the question of precisely what the product is and what is to be done with it when and as it is played. The exhibitor, in general, is concerned with the special aspects of strength and of weakness in the product, its appeals and shortcomings, that he may adequately deal with it when he becomes its sponsor to his public. These "review" pages aim to aid the exhibitor as the retailer of the merchandise concerned.—THE EDITOR.

The Big Broadcast

(Paramount)

Comedy Drama

The glamour of noted radio broadcasting personalties is the outstanding feature of "The Big Broadcast" and regardless of everything else is the peg on which every smart showman will hang his exploitation campaign. The radio stars should mean busy box-offices, inasmuch as they have been ballyhooed over the air, particularly if you build a live campaign around them.

The picture is so much like an elaborated vaudeville show that the underlying plot doesn't mean much. It really is a number of episodes put together, some comic, others romantic, and one or two tragic, but through them all there is a line of comedy that should bring plenty of laughs.

Here's how it goes. After a novel introduction, wherein the radio stars step out of a big placard and do their stuff, Bing Crosby is pronounced the star of a radio hour. He's always late and the sponsor, Mr. Clapsdale, wants him fired. He's the studio's only bet, but the manager defers to the wishes of his client and airs Bing. Drowning his sorrows in an elaborate speakeasy, while Burns and Allen put on a lot of comedy back in the office, Bing meets Stuart Irwin. Both get keyed up and go to Crosby's apartment. Because they have lost their sweethearts, they decide there is nothing more to live for. Before they can pass out, they are saved and the upshot is that Irwin buys the broadcasting station. Bing is set to be the star performer. But Sharon Lynne, his old flame, returns (she's very good) and Bing goes back to his old lackadaisical habits. When Irwin tries to take him to the station, he feigns drunkenness and there is a load of comedy as Irwin scurries all over town trying to buy a Bing Crosby record. Arriving at the studio with it eventually, he leans it up against a cigar lighter and it melts.

"The Big Broadcast" is on. All the performers have appeared (and they certainly delighted the preview audience). Irwin tries to mimic Bing's singing and is making a mess of it, when Bing arrives and puts his number over. Then, of course, success for everyone, with the sweethearts picking up the broken threads again.

The picture has an unlimited number of advertising and exploitation possibilities. It seems logical that the radio names should dominate everything else, inasmuch as they are the personalities that permit the creation of much new interest. Tieups with local radio stations, as well as chain stations that feature the performers nightly, are surely in order. Likewise the broadcasting of records made by them, over loudspeaker systems, should attract plenty of attention. If you have a remote control layout in your theatre, here's one opportunity to use it to the limit, and start using it far enough in advance.

You have enough entertainment values in this picture to appeal to both adults and youngsters. With a certain novelty of idea, comedy, romance, a little bit of drama, good music and the spectacle of famous personalities, all that is necessary to put over "The Big Broadcast" to good business is a snappy, well developed, complete advance campaign. Plan to get full houses in to see your first shows and you can depend on them to do enough favorable talking to take care of subsequent performances.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Based on the play "Wild Waves" by William F. Manley. Screen play by George Marion, Jr. Directed by Frank Tuttle. Music by Ralph Rainger. Lyrics by Leo Robin. Photographed by George Folsey. Release date, some time after Oct. 14. Running time, 80 minutes.

Air Mail

(Universal)

Drama and Comedy

This is a spectacular story of the men who pilot the air mail planes, a story that graphically illustrates the human and natural hazards the boys must overcome in order to make good that famous slogan, "Come rain or snow (etc.) the mail must go."

It has thrills enough to satisfy the most rabid thrill seekers, with legitimate stunt flying. There is drama, comedy, suspense, action and human interest.

The story is centered in a desert airport. Mike is the superintendent. His fliers love him, for he never sends them out on a run that he wouldn't take himself. When one flier, brother of his sweetheart, Ruth, crashes in attempting a landing in a fog, Mike takes the mail on to the next relay. One man short, on account of the accident, Duke makes his entry into the setting after giving everybody the jitters with his flying. Sneering, wise cracking Duke can land a plane on a dime and take off on a nickel. But he and Mike are old enemies. When Duke aspires to the wife of Dizzy, Mike tries to warn him, but when Dizzy crashes, Duke and Irene go away together.

Mike sets out to finish Dizzy's run and crashes in the mountains. Although he is found, there is no possibility of reaching him for days and the chances are that he will perish in the storms. Duke reads about the crash, also hears the radio reports. He sneers at the idea that no one can land a plane where Mike has crashed. Stealing a plane, he does the trick, gets Mike out and with the plane falling to pieces flies to safety. As it breaks up, he tries to argue Mike into parachuting and finally tumbles him out. Duke crashes, but with the luck of fools, he is practically uninjured and just as cocky and smart as ever.

Because the picture is dedicated to the Airmail Service, there is naturally a tieup possibility with the postoffice department. But that isn't the limit of its showmanship possibilities. "Airmail" can and should be circused to the limit. There's an airport, with stunt fliers, in almost every town with whom it should be easy to work out all sorts of aerial ballyhoos. Specially decorated lobbies, featuring cracked-up planes, pictures of famous crashes, displays of famous stamps that local collectors may have as mementoes of famous flights—all are strictly in order.

Smash action advertising, featuring striking art and punchy catchlines together with pictures and names of the cast, and using more space than usual, should create the impression that "Air Mail" is far more important than an ordinary aviation picture. Because it contains so much entertainment for adult men and women as well as thrills to keep the youngsters cheering, it's the kind of picture on which you can well afford to spend a little extra exploitation money.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Universal. Story and screen play by Dale Van Every and Frank Wead. Directed by John Ford. Photographed by Karl Freund. Release date, Nov. 3, 1932. Running time, 83 minutes.

Wild Girl

(Fox)

Melodrama

Despite its ultra-modern title, "Wild Girl" is really good old fashioned hokum melodrama that smacks of the 10-20-30 cent legitimate stage days. In fact, the picture comes out of a plush bound album and if you can get your patrons in the mood wherein they will not be inclined to take it seriously and are set for a lot of new kind of laughs, it should prove to be more than satisfactory.

The introduction to the picture is a tip-off on what is to follow. The title is on the plush covered cover. The pages turn and the actors step out of photographs and announce themselves in voices and action that identify their roles. Audiences will know the hero and villain, the "gal" and all the rest of the characters. Additionally, all through the picture, instead of dissolves, the pages keep turning to indicate changes in the story.

The story is centered in the Sierra Mountains. The time is shortly after the close of the Civil War. Joan Bennett is the beautiful mountain "gal." The mayor of the town, Irving Pichel, the villain, and Ralph Bellamy, a clever gambler, are in love with her. She despises Pichel but sort of likes Bellamy, with all the gusto of the oldtime kerosene oil circuit heroine. Into this settlement comes a mysterious stranger, Charles Farrell, still clinging to his Confederate uniform. He's the hero, bent on revenge, and he kills Pichel because he had wronged his sister years ago.

But the forces of law and order are beginning to make their presence felt and the Vigilantes are all set to string up Farrell when he makes an audacious escape. Somehow or other Joan's sympathies are for him and she hides him in her father's cabin. Making another escape, he kills a man who is gunning for Joan's father. And when Bellamy and Pallette find out how much Joan loves this mysterious stranger they help both him and her to get away to another county and the "Hearts and Flowers" ending.

Although this picture is based on one of Bret Harte's stories, "Salomy Jane's Kiss," its development is anything but a historical romance or drama. It's about an hour and a quarter of clever entertainment that has all the hokum that the stage possessed a generation or so ago. In view of this, it does not seem advisable to play up the Bret Harte classic angle too strongly. For comparison just recall some of Paramount's older "Screen Souvenirs" and several of the shorts that have been made by the Masquer's Club and you'll get a pretty good idea of the style of "Wild Girl." It's such an unusual blending of old standby theatricals with modern presentation treatment that it should be received equally favorably in the big city houses and in the small town and country houses.

There are plenty of names to sell and the cast is strong enough and good enough for any house. With Farrell, Bellamy and Joan Bennett playing the leads, the support is right up to their standard. The story should appeal to adults and juveniles. If you haven't gone in for a specially decorated lobby for a long time, here is a picture that almost demands that you do something unusual. It will be necessary to overcome the impression from the title that it is a jazz-mad, modern story, but if you transfer your lobby into a replica of an oldtime mountain log cabin, using logs and lots of heavy foliage and filling it up with old fashioned furniture, albums, tintypes, and so on, it should be easily possible to intrigue curiosity. The use of oldfashioned showmanship, with your own ingenuity as the only limit, should bring you much better returns.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Night After Night

(Paramount)

Comedy-Drama

"Night After Night" is a smart comedy-drama. It is a smooth flowing fast moving story of a young "pug" who becomes the owner of a swanky speakeasy located in an aristocratic old mansion, and of the people who frequent it. It sparkles with clever dialogue and is so much in tune with the tempo of modern life that there is hardly any reason why it shouldn't become one of the most popular pictures of the current Paramount crop. It has drama, romance, suspense, comedy, spectacle in sufficient quantities to hold the interest of any audience and is so put together that it should be pleasing entertainment for both adults and juveniles.

But there is one thing to consider in selling "Night After Night." With a standout cast, nevertheless there is no "great" star, no name that you can slap up in your marquee with the thought that there lies the only thing necessary to make the patrons flock in. Although George Raft has been muchly ballyhooed, he hasn't arrived yet. Good performances in "Scarface" and "Madame Racketeer" have given him a certain prestige, and even though critical reviewers undoubtedly will hand him many bouquets for his part in this picture, it might be well to think of "Night After Night" as the picture that will zoom him to wide popular favor and create a demand for more of him in subsequent pictures. The same line applies to Constance Cummings, Wynne Gibson, Mae West, Alison Skipworth and Roscoe Karns. In short, the cast, keeping up the good work it displays in this picture, means the creation of a whole group of new stars. Although Raft is the headliner, all the others have an opportunity to occupy the spotlight and they all contribute plenty to the glamour and comedy of the picture.

Because "Night After Night" is so refreshingly modern, it might be a good idea to see the picture before you play it. That will give you a better idea of its entertainment values than columns of descriptive copy. This is particularly true of the dialogue, which is full of snappy wisecracks and smart conversation that will make excellent catchlines.

In advertising the picture, give plenty of prominence to the names and pictures of the names mentioned, following them up with the catchlines that will be especially effective with the tastes of your own patrons. Although "Night After Night" continually fringes on the menace of gangsterism, that angle is so cleverly handled that while it is always played down, other than for comedy purposes, it never enters into the picture as a big factor. Consequently, stay away from it in your advertising and publicity.

You probably will get the best results from "Night After Night" by putting your personal endorsement on it—guaranteeing it as a picture that is full of smart, clever entertainment, ringing in the line that its cast boasts half a dozen laughs, a few thrills, a lot of excitement and the kind of clean, wholesome romance that leaves a pleasant after effect.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Pride of the Legion

(Mascot)

Melodrama

Although this picture leans very definitely toward the gangster type, its story is so constructed that a heroic "cop," who loses his nerve after a sensational battle with a pair of yeggs, is the center of interest. His fight to get out of the "yellow" class gives it a vein of human interest, which, properly played up, should enable exhibitors to sell it as something more than another gangster yarn.

Going "yellow" after a battle with bandits, in which he is severely wounded, Brewster quits the force and is saved from sucide by Tully. He gets a job as a waiter in a cafe frequented by gangsters and policemen. The gangsters hate him because he was a "cop" and continually rag him. Living in Tully's little tenement, he finds romance with his daughter

Martha and becomes a pal of Tommy. One of the gangsters takes a liking to Tommy's girl, Peggy, and they frame Tommy into driving a booze truck.

The police are tipped off and one of them is killed as the truck is wrecked. A dog (Rin-Tin-Tin, Jr.) is left in it and that's the clue. Tommy is set for the chair, when Brewster realizes that he is more than a waiter and goes out and cleans up on the gang. Then, of course, restoration to duty and happiness all around.

A number of good angles can be used. The main line should be to build interest around the comeback fight made by a man who has lost his nerve. While the menace of gangsterism is always there, it can be used to build up suspense. At the same time, the quaint, homely humor of Lucien Littlefield, even when he is being third-degreed, will provide laughs. Lines should get over the idea that the picture is exciting and novel.

The inclusion of Rin-Tin-Tin, Jr., duplicating the exploits of his famous sire as a hero and as a resourceful friend of the down and outers, should be an angle to appeal to the youngsters. And as the picture is a rather neat tribute to the courage and honesty of police personnel in the face of tremendous temptations, there should be an open sesame for some nice contacts with police departments.

"Pride of the Legion" undoubtedly has enough entertainment value to catch audience fancy, particularly in neighborhood and smaller community houses. Careful preparation of advance advertising and publicity that plays down the gangster angle looks to be the medium that will sell it to the best results.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Cowboy Counsellor

(Allied)

Farce Comedy

There is enough entertainment in "The Cowboy Counsellor" to suit not only the Hoot Gibson fans, but also to hold the interest of other patrons who enjoy an hour's clean fun. With a Western background, the story deals with the troubles of a smart talking book agent, whose boasts force him in turn to become a lawyer, a bandit, a scared lover and a victim of his own wits.

Probably the feature that will appeal to that class not so keen for straight Westerns is the fact that this one is really a comedy farce. With just enough outdoor atmosphere to maintain the Gibson identity, his roles call for him to put across a lot of comedy in both sequences and dialogue and Hoot as a comedian is more than apt to prove a pleasant surprise.

The picture is more than man and boy entertainment; in the comedy and romantic interest there is much to intrigue the women folk. The presence of young Bobby Nelson in one of the important parts makes it rather easy to offer this to the youngsters as a special feature of their own, but in catering to them, don't overlook the adults.

Beside the name of Gibson, the title offers some good leads for catchy advertising and exploitation. It may help some to gag lines up around the old saying, "necessity knows no law," for that was Gibson's case exactly, but when it was necessary to help out a boy who was falsely accused, as well as get himself out of a pinch, he had the common sense that outsmarted judges, lawyers and juries. There are possibilities for contacts and tieups with local legal associations, which can be furthered by addressing cleverly written ad-questions to judges and lawyers, asking them what they would do if they found such a "charlatan" as Gibson in their courts. In fact the more comedy you can get into your advertising approach, the more new interest you will create.

Inasmuch as the picture is clean and wholesome throughout, it can be shown to any type audience and in all ages.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Madison Square Garden

(Paramount)

Comedy-Drama

With an intriguing title, plus a topical sport story, "Madison Square Garden" is a picture that should hold great interest for the men and boys among your patrons, yet because of those facts and because the romantic angle is comparatively insignificant, it is also a picture that will require better than usual showmanship to stimulate the curiosity of most of the women folk.

The story is built around New York's famous new Madison Square Garden, showing it as the goal of every aspiring fighter and wrestler. It is full of the color of the garden, picturing some of the great events that take place there—fights, wrestling matches, six-day bicycle races, hockey games—also those who hang around there—promotors, pugs, managers, chiselers, and those who attend the events. Also it tells the story of a manager (Collier), his fighter (Oakie) and his wrestler (Hymer). They land in New York seeking matches, but right away run up against the chiselers. Collier is a smart oldtimer, but Oakie and Hymer are a dumb pair. They are hot to indulge in some of the big city's gay life, but in scenes that are smartly comic, Collier holds them to the straight and narrow path of training. Collier's ambition is to be the Garden's matchmaker. When he gets the job his two proteges go over to the Roarke-Sloan gang. A match is arranged between Oakie and another contender for the championship—both under the same "management." Oakie's opponent's gloves are loaded and Jack is taking a terrific beating, until Collier, regardless of his position as matchmaker, jumps into his boy's corner and coaches him to a last round knockout victory. This is climaxed by a wild free-for-all melee in Roarke's apartment as Collier, aided by a gang of oldtime celebrities, clean up the chiselers.

Secondary to the sports angle, comedy is the highlight. Oakie and Hymar take good care of that, with Zasu Pitts figuring a little here and there. The little romance interest in the picture is provided by mutual admiration between Oakie and Marion Nixon.

As it is essentially a man's picture, selling it to men should not prove a too difficult job. The theme of the story, sport and the glamour of the Garden, should appeal to them. Additionally, the cast names, plus the appearance of such oldtime stalwarts in the sport world as Mike Donlin, Zybysko, Tod Sloane, Billy Papke, Tommy Ryan and Jack Johnson, should stimulate their interest.

While a certain number of the feminine contingent are sports followers and can be lured in by the same lines used for the men, the others will have to be attracted by a different sort of appeal. There the names of Marion Nixon and Zasu Pitts should figure prominently.

The picture offers several good angles for exploitation and publicity, such as tieups with athletic clubs in your town and the chances of cracking theatre news on the sport pages. It might be a good idea to pick up the old gag of changing the name of your theatre to "Madison

By F. H. RICHARDSON

Pursuant to call of Harry Rubin, the Projection Practice Committee of the SMPE met in its first fall session at the Paramount Building in New York City, on the evening of September 26. The following were present: Harry Rubin, chairman; Jessie Hopkins, secretary; Dr. A. N. Goldsmith, president of the SMPE; Sylvan Harris, general manager; William Kunzmann of the Board of Governors, SMPE; George Edwards, J. M. Goldberg, J. J. Finn, Rudy Mehling, Herbert Griffin, P. A. McGuire, J. O. Baker, Sam Galuber, and myself.

Many matters of large interest were considered. First there was the projector optical train, which it was unanimously conceded was not what it should and might be. The general opinion expressed was that means may and should be provided so that projectionists will be enabled to get the entire beam of light from the aperture into the projection lens under any condition met within projection. The matter was referred back to the sub-committee, having it in charge, with instructions to make report, and if possible, recommendations at the next meeting. As chairman of this sub-committee, I would welcome suggestions of practical nature from projectionists.

Screen illumination, that hoary old bugaboo, came in for its share of discussion. I remarked that in theatres the screen illumination of which had been measured and found to be essentially equal, I had found a very large difference in the matter of eye strain. I expressed the opinion that a portion of this variation was due directly to differences in the tone of the projection light, or at least to some sort of difference in light quality.

Kunzman advised the committee that the National Carbon Company had experimented very widely with light for projection (which I know to be fact) and had found what is now being used to be best. He also made the statement that it was impossible, or impractical to tone high intensity light, with which latter I took issue—on the broad ground that aside from getting a projectionist past the Guardian of the Pearly Gates, almost anything may be done nowadays, if only we make sufficient effort. Moreover there most certainly is a wide difference in quality or tone of screen light in various theatres.

President Goldsmith rather startled us by saying he believed the character of the auditorium had much to do with the matter. He said he had done some experimenting along the lines of auditorium lighting, using various colors. He had found that a flame-colored illumination, high enough to light the auditorium much better than is now the general practise, did not in the least affect the visibility of the screen image, but was very easy on the eyes of those viewing the screen. He said he had found flame-colored light to be best, with peach color next, insofar as has to do with the colors experimented with.

The committee members were impressed, but voiced opinion that it would be very difficult to get managers and exhibitors to experiment with the matter in any adequate way.

It seems to me that this might be got around if the committee could accumulate enough flame-colored incandescent lamps to light an auditorium of goodly size. Surely it would be possible to induce managers to permit their installation for trial, and the same lights would of course serve for a sufficient number of theatres to make conclusive test of the matter.

The relative merits of waxed and processed film came in for extended discussion, without definite decision, except for the fact that whereas there were no evil effects cited with relation to processing, all agreed that wax in any amount was invariably the source of trouble.

The matter of some method of enabling the projectionist to have a better view of the screen was again discussed. Mention was made of a new screen viewing device consisting of a single bi-convex lens. It is, however, very evident that such a lens must, in the very nature of things, have spherical aberration, or it could have no large value for judging fineness of definition.

The committee expects to accomplish much valuable work this coming winter. I have no doubt but that the expectation will be fulfilled. The officers of the committee are to complimented upon the excellent manner in which the work is carried on. President Goldsmith makes evident his interest in the work of the committee by attending almost all of its sessions, at which his advice and counsel have always been found to be good.

In fact the committee is composed of live-wire men, all of whom have been and are trying hard to make its activities effective.

THEATRE EXPLOITATION SOLVES CIVIC PROBLEM

The application of the show-selling methods of the motion picture to the problem of collecting back taxes from delinquent citizens of a community has proved remarkably successful in the city of Newark, N. J. Commissioner Egan had requested the assistance of Joseph Bernard, general manager of Warner Theatres, in an effort to collect $25,000,000 in back taxes. Mr. Bernard farmed out Dave Weshner, theatre executive, to Newark to persuade the population that it should come across, pronto. Mr. Weshner, incidentally, is aide-de-camp to Governor Harry A. Moore of New Jersey.

Mr. Weshner, with his methods, appears on the way to success, since in five days it is reported he succeeded in collecting several hundreds of thousands of dollars for the city treasury.

In addition to securing the cooperation of the press, he created a 24-sheet for special posting, dispatched a plane with loudspeaker attachment so that the speaker's voice could be heard over the city from any altitude, an auto-giro which drew a tax slogan trailer, folders in telegrams, a film short of Mayor Congleton and Commissioner Howe to be used on the screens of all circuit and independent theatres, milk bottle tags going into all homes.

Warner Circuit Plans Use Of Billboards Over Country

Warner-First National plans the extensive use of national poster campaigns on all major features to be released up to January 1, 1933, on the Warner circuit. The satisfactory results of the splash on "Doctor X" have led to the decision. More than 3,000 24-sheets were used in that campaign. "Life Begins," "Tiger Shark" and "Silver Dollar" will be among those receiving billboard treatment.

RKO has signed with Alfred E. Fiegel to handle an outdoor advertising campaign. Loew and Publix are laying a certain amount of stress on the billboard selling in various situations.

Army Man Studies Production

Captain Melvin E. Gillette, in charge of the Signal Corps pictorial service in the Second Army Corps Area, New York, has been ordered to Hollywood, where he will study motion picture production technique under the auspices of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences. His training will be utilized in the production of army instructional films.

New Supply Company Formed

International Theatre Accessories Corporation, a new theatre supply company, has been organized with offices at 1600 Broadway, New York. Alexander Kroll has been named director of sales. The organization plans a clearing house for used equipment.

Square Garden" during the run of the picture. That is always good for plenty of free publicity.

Also because of the type of the picture, it might be a good idea to surround it with short subjects and news reels that feature a sporting tinge and label your play dates as an "All-Sport" event.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

A Charles R. Rogers Production, distributed by Paramount. Directed by Harry Joe Brown. Original story by Thomson Burtus. Screen play by P. J. Wolfson and Allen Rivkin. Photographed by Henry Sharp. Release date, Oct. 7, 1932. Running time, 74 minutes.

The Crusader

(Majestic)

Drama

An independent production, this picture compares very favorably with the output of any of the larger studios. The exhibitor has the advantage of salable names of long standing, a well handled and meaty dramatic situation, good performances and a title which can be made dramatic with the proper punch lines.

The crusader in this case is a hard-hitting district attorney lacking armor but faced with plenty of opposition in his efforts to clean up his city. His chief opposition comes from a tabloid newspaper and a scandal-thirsty, dirt-digging reporter. Here are the two best performances in the film, with H. B. Warner, always dependable, as the district attorney, and Ned Sparks, sharp tongued and bitter, in a rich characterization as the reporter.

Evelyn Brent plays the wife of Warner, and the dirt Sparks digs up about her past as the sweetheart of a night club operator, played by Lew Cody, forms the ax which Sparks urges upon his paper as the means of decapitating Warner. When Warner's sister becomes involved with Walter Byron, a crook, Miss Brent attempts to save her, and when the sister kills Byron at the night club, Cody shields them both by confessing to a crime he did not commit. Warner is faced with that highly dramatic situation, with the truth coming out and the sister, played by Marceline Day, going to trial and winning acquittal.

The work of Sparks is responsible directly for most of the dramatic force in the film, but he is ably assisted all the way down the line. Evelyn Brent and H. B. Warner are the best marquee names, but Sparks should be featured very near the top, where he will amply justify the position.

The story is developed cleanly, forcefully, with no waste motion and enough comedy, chiefly in dialogue, to impart a slight change of pace now and again, where it does the most good. Sell this as a good piece of straightforward screen drama. There are several working angles. The crusading district attorney, who is willing to sacrifice his own reputation to see justice done is one line. The idea of the woman, Miss Brent, who is ready to give up everything for the man she loves, is another. The newspaper slant, with the scandal sheet and its reporter failing in its design of intimidating and whipping the district attorney, is a natural for advertising lines.

This is definitely adult screen fare, with nothing to appeal to children.—Aaronson, New York.

Produced and distributed by Majestic Pictures. Directed by Frank Strayer. From the play by Wilson Collison. Screen story by Edward T. Lowe. Editor, Otis Garrett. Photography by Ira Morgan. Sound, Earl Crain. Release date, October 1, 1932. Running time, 72 minutes.

Le Bal

(Protex Trading)

Comedy Drama

This newest importation from the Parisian studios of Marcel Vandac and Charles Delac is entertaining enough, but because it is all-French, without any English explanation of the dialogue, the selling of "Le Bal" must depend almost entirely on an appeal directed to French people, to students, and to those who have traveled to Paris or are otherwise familiar with the country and its language. True, there is no difficulty in following the action, which is explained in English in advance, but much of the delightful humor, merry jesting and delightful banter is lost to those who do not understand the language.

Director William Thiele deftly brings out the natural charm of the simple but happy life of a small middleclass family around which the story is woven. Their life is depicted in easy-going style and obviously Mr. Thiele gave more thought to the gentle caricature than he did to the technical aspects of production. As a result, lighting and staging in the earlier sequences are rather spotty, but when father, mother and young daughter suddenly find themselves devastatingly rich and their simple life is transplanted to a grand home, full of servants and elegance, the director reveals a skillful hand in the use of elaborate settings, masterly staging and unrestrained elegance.

Alfred, a tradesman, his wife Jeanne and their daughter, Antoinette, all of provincial tastes and homely virtues, are thoroughly happy with one another until a heap of worthless paper suddenly becomes extremely valuable and they are wealthy beyond their wildest dreams. A palatial home and life in grand style follows. But the homeliness of their earlier devotion is lost in the struggle to reach a new and higher social plane. Disillusionment brings an awakening to the folly of their new life and once again they are found united.

Especially commendable are the characterizations of Alfred, Antoinette and the daughter's music teacher, Aunt Isabelle. They work effectively and convincingly to bring out the sheer honesty of the amusing burlesque on what happens when suddenly rich find themselves far removed from the unostentatious surroundings to which they had long been accustomed.

Charming filmfare and delightful entertainment within its field.—Cunningham, New York.

Produced by Marcel Vandal and Charles Delac. Distributed by Protex Trading Corp. Directed by William Thiele. Story from the novel by Irene Nemirovsky. Adaptation by S. Fodor and S. Siodmak. Music by W. R. Heymann. Running time, 80 minutes.

An Oriental Cocktail

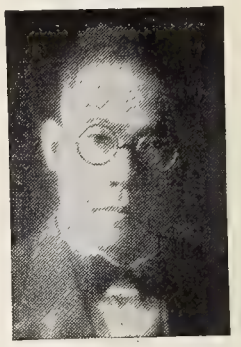
(Vitaphone)

Interesting

There is wide appeal and should be general interest in this motion picture excursion, which touches the shores of practically all the Oriental countries under the able guidance of E. M. Newman, travel talk concocter for Vitaphone. His accompanying verbal descriptions are clear, straightforward and interesting. China, Japan, the Philippines, Bali and other sections are in turn visited briefly.—Rnnning time, 10 minutes.

Mickey's Nightmare

(United Artists)



Amusing

Mickey Mouse continues to demonstrate his right to a place as one of the screen's starring figures—animated or otherwise. In this instance, he dreams of marrying Minnie, and being afflicted with innumerable animated youngsters. Their destructive antics in the house are diverting, highly amusing.—Running time, 7 minutes.

FOR PICTURE THEATRES

NOVELTY

Everett Sanderson (3)
Detroit Hollywood

This is an interminable concoction of song, dance, comedy and instrumental novelty. The act contains much of merit, but there are enough mediocre bits in it to detract from the whole impression. Considerable editing would improve it. Sanderson's best stock in trade is musical versatility. He plays trumpet, banjo, saxophone, clarinets (two and three at a time), bagpipes, accordion and piano. He works with a very attractive girl and a clown of the burlesque show type. The clown seems to be an unnecessary fixture. The girl is especially good in a reminescence skit that trails off into fast song and dance. There is one bit, with the scene the entrance to a women's rest room, that should be yanked out by the roots. The act closes with Sanderson chanting German dialect to the accompaniment of his accordion, while the girl and the clown dance and spin lariats. This is good entertainment if you don't take all of it.

Doc Baker's Revue
New Orleans Orpheum

Doc Baker, quick change artist and excellent showman, brought about as flashy a show to New Orleans as has been seen there in some time and did not forget the need of comedy added to eye appeal, and the audience applauded for more. He opens with his park bench scene, bemoaning his past greatness. His one wish, to be on the stage once more, is granted and he is transformed from a bum to the dress of a dandy while an eye-filling chorus comes on. Charles and Helen Stone fill in with clever stepping; Baker comes back for his saloon bit, which allows him to do more quick changing, and the finale is a scene in which the girls do changes as quickly as Baker.

Benny Davis (21)
New York Capitol

The Benny Davis Revue, held over for a second week, due to Davis' fine showmanship and the hard work of his "future stars," clicks again. Several new faces appear in the act. Benny's medley of his popular song hits proves an effective finale for a fine act.—E. D.

Wesley Eddy
Buffalo Century

Eddy, one of the most popular masters of ceremonies Buffalo ever has had during his four-months' reign in the Great Lakes, is back at the Century, heading his own revue each week. "Home" was used as his welcoming song. Eddy introduced his new stage band, all Buffalo boys, who also got a hand. Besides introducing the acts and leading the band, he also took a microphone for imitations of radio stars.

Nan Halperin
Baltimore Hippodrome

Three character monologues, "The Girl From Kentucky," "The New Cook" and "Scarlet Sister Sadie," are offered, the third getting the best reception.

"HUMAN MUSIC" AND THE FILM THEATRE

The Times-Picayune, New Orleans daily newspaper, had this to say one day last week concerning motion picture theatres and the reduction of "human" music:

"The public would regret any disagreement that led to the reduction of 'human' music in New Orleans theatres. With the perfection of mechanical devices, orchestral music has become less and less available to amusement patrons, and with the close of the park band concert season there will be far too few places where we can see as well as hear harmony in the making. Picture show audiences may seem indifferent to the blending of cornet and violin, but they will feel that something gay and inspiriting has been taken out of their lives if they are deprived of it."

SINGERS

Hall Johnson Negro Choir (31)
New York Paramount

Opening with a colorful levee scene, a chorus of 30 voices, 16 men and 14 women, sing "River, Stay Way From My Door," with an effective interpolation of "Ole Man River." Mr. Johnson then makes his entrance to lead the ensemble in "St. Louis Blues," in which a girl took the lead in a fine voice, the others offering an accompaniment in chorus. The group then presents two real old-fashioned Negro spirituels, "The Li'l Black Train Is A-comin'," proving an effective finale. The act is different and pleased this audience.—H. P.

Belle Baker
New York Paramount

Miss Baker's opening applause proves that she still is a favorite. She proceeds to click with "Lawd You Made the Night Too Long," and a novelty comedy in dialect. Her best bet is the rendition of "My Mom," in which she interpolates "Yiddisha Mamma," following with a few stories that customers liked.—H. P.

Jack Smith
Philadelphia Fox

Whispering Jack Smith can whisper into the "mike" and be heard across the Continent. Sentimental songs have an added touch of romance when he whispers them and his "Oceans of Love by the Beautiful Sea" and "Only a Shanty in Shantytown" demonstrate just why he is popular on both the radio and the stage.

INSTRUMENTAL

Benny Meroff and Orchestra
New York State

Opening with a torrid arrangement of "Tiger Rag," played effectively by the band, Meroff makes his entrance as a juggler, clowning during his solo bit. Florence Gast, a very easy-to-look-at young lady, offers a graceful tap dance routine accompanied by the Playboys, who supply a pleasant bit of rhythmical vocal harmony with fine results. The band then plays a pleasing symphonic arrangement of "Sweet Sue," while in the next few numbers Meroff shows his musical ability by playing almost every instrument on the set. Meroff also clicks strongly with his impersonation of Ted Lewis and his comical interpretation of Pat Rooney. An outstanding bit of entertainment.—E. D.

Duke Ellington (16)
New York Capitol

A fast aud furious opening with "Tiger Rag" is followed by a pleasing dance specialty by Worthy and Thompson. Duke then announces his own original "Black and Blue Fantasy," after which Miss Ida Anderson offers several rhythmic vocals. The "Bit of Harlem" is well liked.—H. P.

Rudy Vallee and His Connecticut Yankees
Baltimore Hippodrome

Vallee and his orchestra received an excellent reception. He went into his various novelties in a manner that pleased, received excellent applause and encores. His imitations of Chevalier singing "Just One Girl," and Bing Crosby doing a number needed no explanations. The musical novelty of having imitations of Boy Scouts, Salvation Army and Guards' bands playing a number went over well and for an encore he sang Berlin's latest, "Say It Isn't So."

Horace Heidt's Californians
San Francisco Golden Gate

This organization continues to headline and its offerings seem to improve. This week's program is in the nature of a Drinking Song Revue, and songs of pre-volstead days are presented in a lively manner. A novelty number is played on liquor containers of various sizes and shapes, with surprising effects. Richard Morgan, the banjoist, does a "Boopa-Doop" number and the drummer gets a great hand for his skating dance. The classical selection is Ravel's "Bolero."

Hollywood Merrymakers (10)
Detroit Hollywood

Herman Kaplan has returned with his ten-piece novelty band to fill the spaces between stage acts. His featured bit of the week is "Gofus," with a vocal interpolation by the second saxophone player.

STAGE ATTRACTIONS

REVIEWS OF ACTS FOR PICTURE THEATRES

INSTRUMENTAL

Borah Minnevitch (12)
New York Paramount

Borah's ragamuffins open with a bit of roughhouse comedy and with the appearance of Minnevitch offer a fine arrangement of "The Peanut Vender," the comical antics of the conductor being sure-fire for laughs. Borah plays a solo of "St. Louis Blues," and then exhibits the individual talents of his "kids." During the entire proceedings Shorty, a member of the troupe, provides continuous comedy aided by Minnevitch, the act proving a sensation.—H. P.

Charles Bennington and His Newsboy Band
New Orleans Orpheum

This is a clever harmonica band act with Bennington getting the most out of it in both music and comedy. A clever youth stands out as really a master of the harmonica and a dwarf provides the comic element that went over big. The boys center most of their musical efforts around Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue," with "The Man I Love" interpolated, then the soloist does "Nola," after Bennington explains the difficulty of this feat. Bennington does his one-leg tumble and the closer is a levee scene with special lighting. This number combines singing, dancing and comedy. Newsboys were admitted free of charge to the balcony and they did not want to let the band leave.

ACROBATICS

Lucky Boys (6)
New York Capitol

The collegiate-dressed sextet go through a routine of pyramid-acrobatic flips and sizzly work which is chock full of difficult feats. The boys keep up a rapid bit of comedy chatter during their act, some of the gags clicking. An excellent opening act.—H. P.

Joe and Pete Michon
Philadelphia Fox

These two boys dressed as gobs come in with a laugh and a joke that are a passport to the approval of the audience. Taking Duval as the butt of their humor, they cleverly burlesque his entire act, winning more applause than the magician himself. With all their burlesque they do some clever balancing.

Travers and Gray
San Francisco Golden Gate

This pair combines tumbling with comedy and the combination proves a winner. One moment the audience is amazed by a difficult stunt and the next moment is laughing at a comedy turn.

Three LaMoures
New Orleans Orpheum

Two husky men and a woman do equilibristic stunts that are well presented. The big flash comes when one of the men does a spring over the piano on to the shoulders of another.

Vitaphone Signs Lyman Band

Abe Lyman and his orchestra, Broadway entertainers, have been signed for the Vitaphone "Melody Masters" series of short subjects.

SPOTS & SHOTS ON BROADWAY

Now that school has reopened and the w. k. report card is awaited with mingled emotions (mine were mangled) the Paramount theatre has inaugurated a weekly report on the work of its ushers. His fortunate uniformed worthiness with the highest mark for the week finds an extra two dollars in his pay envelope. A good idea, we think.

Resumes Stage Shows

Stage shows have been resumed at the Paramount, Montgomery, Ala., with Ray Teal's orchestra featured.

DANCERS

Mitzie Mayfair
New York Roxy

The beauteous Mitzie appears in the "Pirates' Cove" and "Treasure Chest" scenes of the artistic Cambria presentation. In the first scene Miss Mayfair presents a spectacular eccentric rhythm tap routine that fairly sparkles and draws one of the finest hands of the show. Mitzie is attired in a pink "pirate" costume that amply sets off her beauty. In the finale, the "Treasure Chest" scene, Mitzie appears as the leading lady and in the most prominent spot. Dressed in a pure white evening gown, she offers a graceful waltz routine for her bit in this spectacular scene. She is surrounded by the entire cast in a finale that is most outstanding.—E. D.

Mills, Kirk & Martin (4)
New York Capitol

Taking advantage of a fine build-up introduction by Benny Rubin, this trio immediately proceed to clown their way to a spontaneous outburst of applause. The timing of their knockabout comedy is a succession of laughs. Harry Martin earns a nice hand for his ability with the uke, following which the trio offers a rhythm tap dance which is the cue for a comical stooge running across the stage. A sure-fire novelty turn.—H.P.

Benny Rubin
New York Capitol

Acting as m. c. for the show, this dialectician tells a few anecdotes, clowns with the other acts, features himself in several funny sketches and in the finale goes through a tap dance to Duke Ellington's music. He succeeds in making those out front enjoy his every appearance.—H. P.

Kendall Capps
Detroit Michigan

This lad's forte is acrobatic dancing in a nonchalant manner that particularly suits production numbers.

Whitehead and Carveth
Detroit Hollywood

If these two would find one or two more dance routines to substitute for the very unsatisfactory comedy with which they introduce their act, they might do well. Their challenge tap routines and a rhumba are worth watching.

Merna Fortune
San Francisco Fox

This charming little miss dances her way through the stage offering of "Veils" and wins special approval with her acrobatic numbers, which are marked by a sureness that is refreshing.

DeMarest Sisters
Buffalo Century

This comely and attractively costumed duo presents precision tap and acrobatic numbers. The act is fast.

Sloppy Wallace
Detroit Michigan

This dusky dancing ace, with clever feet and a breathless falsetto laugh, is allowed only three minutes and that's not enough.

STAGE ATTRACTIONS

ORGAN SOLOS

BETTYE LEE TAYLOR (Niagara Falls Strand), recently introduced to the audience here started right out to win them with her delightful voice and pleasing novelties, and already has them singing until the rafters vibrate. Miss Taylor's program included "Auf Weidersehen," "Through With Love," "Fall in Love" and a special for married men, "I Wish I Were Single Again." This last number had the audience in an uproar.

WILD OSCAR (New York 175th) introduces his "School of Broadcasting" in a new and novel manner this week. He still features singing, but his clever oral introductions are outstanding. The song program this week is composed of "Night Shall Be Filled With Music," "Some of These Days," "Zwei Herzen," "Devil and the Deep Blue Sea," "Serenade" from "The Student Prince," "Crazy People," "Sweet Sue," "All God's Chillun Got Wings," "Forever and Ever," "Just Another Dream," and a final chorus of "Chloe." Above the voices of the audience, Oscar's fine voice is heard in two of the numbers. A whistling chorus of the "Dream" number offered variety. All in all, the solo went over well.

KENNETH LEA (Elyria Capitol) recently presented, in conjunction with the theatre's "Fall Festival of Shows," an interesting organ presentation entitled "Fall Festival of Song Hits." For this Lea offered the new season's songs. He used the "mike" for continuity, comparing the advantages of the free song festival to the expense of new fall styles. Songs used were: "Just Couldn't Say Goodby," "Here's Hoping," "Never Be the Same" and a finale of "Big Bunch of You." The solo went over well.

FRANKLIN BENTEL (Beaver Falls Rialto) presented in connection with his second anniversary an organlogue entitled "Memories From Musical Comedy." Opening with special lyrics to the tune of "Strike Up the Band," the following songs were presented against a background of blue, flashed upon the screen: "Tea for Two," "You're the Cream in My Coffee," "Button Up Your Overcoat," "Ten Cents a Dance" and finally "Lover Come Back to Me." Each number was well sung by the audience and applause at the finish proves that Bentel still continues to please them.

MAURICE (Providence State) calls one of his most recent solos "Songs For Sale," and the jovial Maurice had no difficulty in "selling" these numbers to an appreciative audience. The opening song, "Nightfall," apparently was a little new for the patrons, who were slow to start singing. The remainder of the program was lustily sung. Maurice, who possesses an appealing intimacy in his voice, introduced each number with a clever bit of sales talk. The rest of the program, "Couldn't Say Goodby," "Never Be the Same," "Clouds Will Soon Roll By," "Smilin' Through," and "Call Me Sweetheart," balanced the presentation very well, and helped to gain him a good reception.

ARSENE SIEGEL (Detroit Fisher) tells his audience that "Now's the Time to Be Happy," and, as expressions of bliss, offers "Hold My Hand," "The Night When Love Was Born," "We Just Couldn't Say Goodby," "A Shanty in Old Shanty Town" and "Lullaby of the Leaves." The audience goes heartily after the challenge he makes with a tongue twister to the tune of "Jennie Lee," an alliteration of b's about a bookblack. A moderately filled house gave him fair response and good applause.

UP AND DOWN THE ALLEY

In the good old era of the nickelodeon when a motion picture was advertised—"It's a Novelty—Bring the Children"—Frank Cambria stole away from the famous scenic studios of Ernest Gros, where he was learning the art of stage designing, to watch the flickering shades flit across a canvas sheet. . . . When abandoned lofts and ramshackle buildings housed the adolescent efforts of picture producers, Frank Cambria was studying architecture, painting and sculpture, always with the idea of some day utilizing these seemingly antipodal forms of art in connection with the screen. . . . Later he abandoned engineering to become a student at the National Academy of Design, where he was awarded a number of prizes. . . .

The name Frank Cambria first became ineffaceably inscribed in motion picture annals in 1918 when, as director of art and production for the Balaban and Katz theatres, he inaugurated many stage show innovations. . . . Later as the chief of Paramount Publix theatre presentations, his unconventional ideas enhanced the beauty of both theatres and productions. . . . Many scene change improvements as well as lighting novelties created by Cambria helped make elaborate stage productions in picture houses a reality instead of ambition and now, at the Roxy, the stage craftsman is applying in new directions the lessons of his years of varied experience.

Good news from "the windy city" this week. . . . Louis Lipstone, in charge of musicians for B & K, has assigned the following organists to positions in the deluxers of the circuit; Preston Sellers, at the Marbro; Edna Sellers, Granada; Eddie House, Southtown; Eddie Meikel, Harding; Henri A. Keates, the Gateway. . . . Stuart Barrie continues rotating at the downtown deluxers. . . . Mr. Lipstone also announced that additional organists would be reemployed in other B & K houses next week. . . .

Joe Jordan, one of the first musical conductors on the Loew Circuit and a director who has opened most of the Loew theatres in the metropolitan district, is now directing the orchestra at the Jersey theatre, in Jersey City, his home town. . . . Joe was born and reared in the town at the other end of the Holland tunnel. . . . It was a great assignment for the genial Joe, because all the hometowners are packing in to watch one of their own boys work. . . .

If anyone is in doubt about the value of an organist to a theatre, may I take this opportunity to cite the case of Ted Meyn, who has just returned to Loew's Jersey, Jersey City. . . . Ted was transferred to Cleveland some months ago, but so insistent were the demands of patrons in letters received by Mr. George Dumond, managing director, that Ted was brought back.

M. Witmark & Son, Warner music publishing subsidiary, will publish the score of "42nd Street," Warner feature. Al Dubin and Harry Warren, who wrote the score, also appear in the picture.

OVERTURES

DAVID ROSS (New York Roxy) each week is gaining in popularity, with his understanding of music, his showmanly way of "selling" it, and his good taste in arranging highly entertaining programs. This week he offers a concoction of musical divertisements, arranged to bring out the maximum ability of the 70 odd musicians and to give the audience the most in the way of entertainment. David Ross rates and gets more appreciative applause than anything else on the entire program.

LOU FORBES (Detroit Michigan), true to form, is novel with an overture entitled "The Evolution of Music." He opens with a primitive, unscored arrangement which he calls "Jungle Rhythm." This is followed by Beethoven's "Minuet in G," "Blue Danube Waltz," "Grand March" from Aida, "Alexander's Ragtime Band," "Tiger Rag," "Song of India," "Vagabond Lover" and "I Got Rhythm." In the latter number, Lee Mason gets an opportunity to exercise his popular young voice. The overtures ends with Forbes' expressed preference, "Overture Sollenelle" from the finale of the "Symphony of 1812." The 14-piece orchestra is aided no little by the organ and an enormous brass bell.

DAVE RUBINOFF (New York Paramount) offers a medley of Victor Herbert's melodies, opening with a blare chorus of "March," followed with a violin ensemble of "Kiss in the Dark" and "Italian Street Song." "Falling in Love" then is played with a flute taking the lead accompanied by the violin section, the flute again leading for "Gypsy Love Song." The brass plays "Fortune Teller" in staccato, followed by a violin solo of "Kiss Me Again" by Rubinoff. A lively rendition of "March of the Toys," ensemble, proves an effective finale.

EMIL HOLLANDER (Asbury Park Paramount) and his 11 piece orchestra, installed here two weeks ago by Edward Paul of the Paramount, New York, offers as his overture "Friml Melodies," one of Rubinoff's own arrangements of the popular composer's compositions. The theatre is two years old and this is the first time "live" talent has been seen here. The consensus is that vaudeville, overtures and so on are here to stay, in the light of applause accorded the artists.

SAM JACK KAUFMAN (Brooklyn Fox) and his 21-piece orchestra offer the prologue from the opera "I Pagliacci" featuring the popular Barre Hill, baritone, who from the stage sings the popular aria. The orchestra proves its entertainment value by injecting comedy into the last part of the overture, together with a hot rendition of "Tiger Rag", for closing.

SAMUEL BENAVIE (Detroit Fisher) presents a diversified overture which includes a Schubert Medley, a featured popular number sung by a crooner, and a fresh slant on "St. Louis Blues." Lee Mason is the crooner, for the past two or three weeks featured with Forbes at the Michigan, who sings "Say It Isn't So." The "St. Louis Blues" are offered in dank and haunting tones. The entire program was well received.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Vol. 109, No. 3 October 15, 1932

ADVERTISING'S DAY

THE state of mind of the buying public is made up on the basis of what it sees and hears. Since the more aggressive leaders of industry have quit crying over spilled milk and started to work, there has been a growing emphasis on the values of advertising and printed words addressed to that public.

The dawning era in American business promises to become outstandingly the advertising man's era. In New York City the cheerful outlook and merry adventuresome spirit of one man, Kenneth Collins, has changed the entire complexion of the advertising pages of the daily journals and has extended its coloration over into periodicals, where day by day the influences of the gay "New Yorker" and the pithily eccentric "Time" are in evidence. All these forces of influence operate directly on the copywriters.

In our own arena of the motion picture a new consciousness of opportunity, a new daring, a better showmanship in that it is not bound by the mossy traditions of old show copy, is appearing this autumn. Copy in the pages of MOTION PICTURE HERALD these days is less and less being written by rote and rule o'thumb, less and less to please the foibles of executives not entitled to an advertising opinion, and more and more accurately is addressing itself to the command of interested attention for the merchandise offered.

We have been moved to some of these reflections by a speech made by Mr. William H. Hodge of Chicago, division chairman of the American Gas Association, before an Atlantic City gathering this week. Mr. Hodge found that for the gas industry the costs of advertising and publicity had declined only ten per cent from the peak budgets of 1930, which he decided was well indeed. "It is recommended," said Mr. Hodge, "that more complete utilization of advertising experts and publicity specialists at our headquarters be made and more coordination be given by individual members. . . . If we are to expect copywriters, artists and typographers, who do the real work, to continue to advance in efficiency and give sales value to white paper, we must not deprive them of incentive to progress."

HERE'S a prosperity note from one of the motion picture's cousins, or maybe it's a second cousin. Anyway, the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company admits and announces that it has placed orders for four million pounds of copper. Westinghouse is the 40 in the 60–40 participation with General Electric in the Radio Corporation of America and related enterprises. Four million pounds of copper will make a lot of electrical gadgets which Westinghouse anticipates someone will buy. Mr. F. A. Merrick, Westinghouse president, thinks "business has turned the corner." A lot of salesmen are waiting around the corner, too.

BEAUTIFUL AND INNOCENT

THE first frosts of the Connecticut lowlands have set the maples aflame and gilded the poplars. The ebony-purple of the latest flower of autumn, the Gentian Andrewsi—known as the bottle gentian before Volstead—lurks as a dark poetic secret in the swampy shaded meadow borders. The rounded heaths of the Shinnecock hills of Long Island are symphonies of rust and red and scarlet under azure skies that blend into cold blue seas fringed with snowy surf and gleaming dune. This is news, annual news, and more important far than the newsreels' annual classics of Venice bathing beauty contests, the standard hot day picture from Coney Island and the annual recrudescence of maternal bad taste and exhibitionism expressed in the Asbury Park baby parade. Also the screen has the technology, the color and the skill to record this yearly miracle of autumn. But autumn, alas, has only beauty, no sex appeal, no press agents. No dirty story was ever told about autumn and Mr. Winchell never mentions it. So, we hear of it only as the time when the seasonal grosses go up.

JUST FIGURES

NOW that the figures are passing in review under the adding machine it is discovered in Washington that the admission taxes are falling far short of bringing in the increased revenues estimated by the expert estimators when the bill was under consideration. According to the report of the further estimate of the estimators, revenues for the fiscal year will fall not less than $200,000,000 below the Treasury anticipations. In which event, the remark of the madman to the fisherman applies: "Come on inside."

AUDIENCE REACTIONS?

REMARKING at length in "Hollywood Herald," "Mr. Observer" considers that the old Hollywood custom of holding "special studio previews" in Los Angeles and adjacent theatres, to get "audience reaction," is in essence a mess of horsefeathers and "bologna." "Mr. Observer" seems to think that the reaction of an audience which reacts only in the loge sections reserved for the producers and their intimates is not of large service to the art. While the argument is going on, permit us to remark that a publication widely known to the exhibition branch of the industry, MOTION PICTURE HERALD, each week, without the use of searchlights, brass bands, microphones and police lines, does get, assemble and present in black and white, several pages of audience reaction in figures that are very educational.

NEW CONTRACT ALTERNATIVE TO INDUSTRY FIGHT ON U. S. CONTROL

Leaders of MPTOA and Allied Gather in Chicago to Draft Exhibitors' Version of Standard Agreement for Industry

BULLETIN

Plans for introducing and pushing the proposed bill for federal regulation of the motion picture industry will take precedence over other matters, it was announced as the joint committee of twelve of Allied and MPTOA met at the Congress hotel in Chicago Thursday. While the committee hopes to start work on the drafting of a new contract, it was said that legislative activities will come up for first consideration. Extensive plans for obtaining vigorous backing of all exhibitor units for the federal bill and the drafting of a nation-wide campaign are the immediate objectives. Charles W. Picquet of Pinehurst, N. C., was appointed to the committee and Lester Martin of Nevada, Iowa, is substituting for Sidney Samuelson of New Jersey, who was unable to attend.

Allied States Association and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America are expected to offer an alternative of immediate adoption of a new standard exhibition contract or a fight for federal legislative control, according to unofficial sources familiar with the situation. The reaction of the larger producer-distributors to the standard form, which will be drafted jointly by Allied and MPTOA, will determine the future action of these national organizations regarding their proposed concerted drive for congressional legislation for the industry, it was said.

Allied's executives, headed by W. A. (Al) Steffes, president, and Abram F. Myers, general counsel, met with MPTOA officials, led by President M. A. Lightman, for the second time in Chicago at the Congress hotel late this week and activities will be launched to draft a 100 per cent exhibitors' version of a standard agreement for submission to distributors. If acceptable to the sales companies it would serve as an alternative contract to the several forms now offered individually by each exchange. Mr. Steffes said last week that the committee would convene on Thursday and "remain in session until the contract is completed." Mr. Lightman predicted it would take at least four or five days to complete the instrument.

Separate Negotiations Seen

Because a government decision of a few years ago prevents group adoption by the distributing companies, the exhibitor organizations undoubtedly will enter negotiations separately with each sales manager and legal staff. While not all companies are expected to ratify the proposed contract immediately, even after the usual surface adjustments, it was said this week that sufficient competitive sales pressure could be brought to bear against a few which might hold out, if and when the majority decides to use it.

Allied's activities up to the first joint meeting with MPTOA on September 19 and 20 had been concerned largely with a campaign for federal regulation, while the MPTOA had sought adoption of a standard contract. Both agreed at the meeting that the use of a uniform instrument is desirable for the orderly conduct of the industry, serving as the foundation for a solution to so-called ills of distribution and exhibition. If, however, a new form of contractual relations cannot be established between buyer and seller, Allied and MPTOA further agreed to campaign for federal legislation, and with this possibility in mind, a draft of a bill to be presented to Congress at the next session was adopted.

Allied and MPTOA have decided upon strict silence regarding the possible outcome of this week's meeting until definite action is voted, but word came through on Tuesday from other channels that the committee undoubtedly would give consideration to the unused 5-5-5 contract as the basis of a new draft, inserting new clauses and eliminating and altering others.

To insure proper interpretation of necessary amendments to the contract, Allied and MPTOA previously announced that its committee of ten would remain a standing unit. In case of a disagreement with a committee to be appointed by distributors, each group would select one man to represent it for one year in arbitration of disputed points, and the two would select a third. The decision of the board would be final and binding on all parties. In case of a disagreement between distributor and exhibitor over selection of a third member of the arbitration board, the governor of New York would make the appointment.

Following drafting and adoption of the contract by the Allied-MPTOA leaders, the joint interests are expected to lose no time in taking the form to distributors. In certain circles it is believed that adoption could be enacted before January 1.

Mr. Lightman said in Memphis the other day that the outlook for the contract meeting is hopeful. His prediction, however, was followed by reports in Memphis that he contemplated resigning from the MPTOA presidency. In this connection, the Tri-State MPTO, assembled in convention at Memphis, Mr. Lightman's headquarters, passed a resolution indorsing his regime and urging him not to resign. Last week, the Wisconsin MPTO voted approval of his action at Chicago in connection with joint advocacy with Allied of federal legislation. The MPTO of eastern Missouri and southern Illinois refused to approve it, but Philadelphia and New Jersey affiliates did.

Antagonism of distributors' attorneys to adoption of a standard form, which is said to have been responsible for failure of the larger companies to adopt one previously, may be eliminated by the new contract which will come out of Chicago as an exclusive product of theatre owners and one in the making of which distributors will have no hand. Fear of violating the Judge Thacher decree of a few years ago has been held by the attorneys. The decision declared illegal the contract then in use by distributors who were responsible for its drafting.

Reports are heard that Allied's national organization is ready to invade the East, where the organization has little state representation. Early this week it was announced that the MPTO of Buffalo had voted to affiliate with the national MPTOA. Reasons for the affiliation were said to be based on the point that the Buffalo exhibitors have always "advocated organized self-control within the industry."

Reaction of Larger Producers to Exhibition Instrument Is Expected to Determine Course on Federal Regulation

Urges Joint Organization

"The chief need of the industry is a trade organization through which the several branches can cooperate for the protection of their common interests and work for the reconciliation of their differences," declared Abram F. Myers, general counsel of Allied States Association, in an address Wednesday before the annual convention of Allied Theatres of Michigan, in Detroit.

"Due to the lack of machinery for cooperation, as well as the will to cooperate, it has been necessary to resort to the courts and legislatures for the definition of rights. While progress in such procedure must necessarily be slow, developments to date are substantial and gratifying. Once these differences are settled, the will to cooperate will manifest itself—and not before."

EXCLUSIVE RUN POLICY SPREADS WHILE EXHIBITOR PROTESTS RISE

Loew's and United Artists Close Deal to Place Plan in Eighteen Additional Cities; Arrangement Extended to Coast

The rapid expansion of the exclusive run policy of showing motion pictures gathered further momentum this week when Loew's and United Artists consummated an arrangement which will bring exclusives to 18 additional cities. Although exhibitor protests are mounting concurrently with the development, embracing numerous condemnations by state organizations and two appeals to governors, the principal sponsors continued in their plans for extension to cities and towns not already affected.

Akron and Canton, Ohio, already are showing exclusives and so are Syracuse, N. Y.; Rochester, N. Y.; Kansas City, Mo.; Providence, R. I.; Harrisburg, Pa.; Indianapolis, Ind.; Richmond and Norfolk, Va.; Nashville, Tenn.; London, Ont.; Atlanta, Ga.; Houston, Texas; San Antonio, Texas; Dayton, Reading and Columbus in Ohio; Louisville, Ky.; Charlotte, N. C.; Allentown, Pa.; Wilmington, Del.; Williamsport and Reading, Pa.; New Haven and Meriden, Conn.; Worcester, Mass; Waterbury and Bridgeport, Conn.; Springfield, Mass.; Lynchburg, Va.; Mansfield, Ohio; Manitowoc, Wis.; San Francisco and elsewhere. While the plan has been confined to date almost solely to important eastern centers of keen competition between circuits and independents, United Artists carried exclusives to the coast, opening its United Artists theatre at San Francisco on October 10 with the new policy.

United Artists and Metro are the principal participants in exclusives to date, with Paramount using them in a few territories. Warner Brothers has not yet decided, according to Major Albert Warner. Columbia, and RKO have definitely announced non-exclusive sales policies and Fox is not expected to extend exclusive deals any further than Harry Arthur's circuit in New England.

Paramount Plan in South

Although maintaining that there was "not enough information available on the success or failure of exclusive runs to formulate an opinion at present," George Schaefer, Paramount sales manager, said last week that his company probably will run exclusives in the class A theatres of some of its southern towns. Up to now, Paramount has been showing this season's product on an exclusive basis in Akron, Canton, Norfolk and Richmond. The subsequent run situation in those towns made it necessary to switch over to exclusives, it was said. Among the several southern towns in which Paramount is considering adoption of exclusive policies are Nashville, Charlotte and Atlanta.

Announcement of the United Artists deal to show exclusively in 18 cities said that consummation of the agreement is "the first great stride in a plan which ultimately will alter the entire complexion of the motion picture business, as far as the theatregoing public is concerned."

It was further said, by United Artists, that "in the 'exclusive run' plan, designed some months ago by Al Lichtman, vice president and general manager, theatres of the country are divided into two classes, A and B. Under the plan, only the A group will exhibit the best pictures. Using a 50-cent admission as a basis of comparison, it means that all 50-cent films will be shown in Class A houses and the 25-cent pictures will go into Class B houses."

"In other words," continued the statement, "under the Lichtman plan theatre-goers will be protected from encountering a 25-cent picture in a 50-cent house, there being no such protection under present methods of distribution. As it is now, the public shops around for film entertainment, with no assurance that the best pictures are in the best theatres. There will be such assurance under the new plan. On the other hand, producers will be afforded additional incentive to improve their pictures. Because of the longer runs and the added revenue, they will be enabled to put more time and study into their output."

The exclusive run contracts were signed by Mr. Lichtman, for United Artists, and Col. Edward A. Schiller, for Loew's. The following theatres are included:

Loew's, Akron; Loew's, Canton; State, Syracuse; State, Rochester; Midland, Kansas City, Mo.; State, Providence; Regent, Harrisburg; Palace, Indianapolis; Loew's, Richmond; Norva, Norfolk; Vendome, Nashville; Loew's, London, Ont.; New Grand, Atlanta; State, Houston; Loew's, Dayton; Colonial, Reading; Broad, Columbus; and State, Louisville.

Protested at Chicago Meeting

Exclusives were the subject of one of the important protests of the newly formed alliance of MPTOA and Allied to correct so called industry ills by joint action. At the first session of leaders in Chicago September 19 and 20, exclusives were condemned in a resolution and vigorous opposition against them was promised. It may materialize at the second joint conference which takes place this week in Chicago.

W. A. (Al) Steffes told newswriters at the first meeting that "the public is vitally affected by this new sales policy," and that when it learns "the extent and purposes of the plan to deprive them of their favorite stars and pictures at the prices they are now paying, the moviegoers will rise up against the producers and the first run theatres that are sponsoring the plan."

Future action of the joint exhibitor organizations will follow lines laid out at the Chicago conference, where the following threefold plan was adopted to combat the spread of the policy: first, the drafting of a federal measure to outlaw exclusives; secondly, the sponsoring of state laws to tax theatres showing them, and thirdly, an appeal to the public on the screens and in the newspapers.

The MPTO of Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois, in convention at St. Louis last week, passed a resolution condemning exclusive runs.

The Tri-State Motion Picture Theatre Owners, of Tennessee, Arkansas and Mississippi, meeting in annual convention at Memphis early this week, resolved against them.

Akron exhibitors voted not to play Metro or Paramount pictures if any part of the release schedule of either company is sold exclusively. They decided to elect a representative to take up the matter with both distributors. Metro adopted the policy for Canton and Akron, where the Loew circuit operates theatres. At Canton, it was said that the public did not react kindly toward trailer announcements of the plan.

Warner home office executives denied reports from Mansfield, Ohio, that the company's Ohio

Two Appeals Against Plan Are Placed Before Governors; Numerous Objections Are Raised by State Organizations and Mansfield theatres in that town were to be placed on an exclusive policy.

"Grand Hotel" started off Metro's exclusive run plan at Loew's Ohio theatre in Columbus. This was the first time an exclusive run had played the town and the circuit reported an increase in business, holding over the picture for a second week, the first time that house had held over a production. "Pack Up Your Troubles," Laurel-Hardy feature comedy, was scheduled to follow.

Protest at San Francisco

San Francisco independent theatre owners are up in arms over decision of United Artists to sell exclusively at the United Artists theatre which opened October 10. "Rain" started the new plan, and advertising advised the public that if the picture is shown at any other house in the territory, patrons may present their ticket stubs and have admissions refunded. Local exhibitors threaten to use their screens in a boycott. Several hundred neighborhood houses are affected.

Although Robert Lynch, Metro exchange manager in Philadelphia said in an interview in The Exhibitor, regional trade publication, that his company does not intend to push exclusive runs in that territory, Jay Emanuel, its publisher, took to the radio to warn picturegoers of the community against the practice. Mr. Emanuel said the policy is now being tried out in Wilmington, Del.; and at Reading, Harrisburg, Allentown, Williamsport and at other places in Pennsylvania. The broadcast, over a Philadelphia station, was intended for patrons, who were told by the publisher that exclusive selling will be a raid on pocketbooks of at least 50 per cent of the people of the country.

The MPTO of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware is vigorously opposed to the policy. Ninety-three exhibitors, said to represent 200 theatres in the Philadelphia territory, met in a special mass meeting last week to work out a campaign for presentation of exclusive run activities before Governor Pinchot, with the suggestion that a special state tax be levied on theatres so involved. The exhibitors pledged their support to a national campaign.

George Aarons, secretary of the Pennsylvania MPTO, addressed the women's federation in his territory on the unfavorable possibilities.

Connecticut MPTO Asks Tax

Fox Film, which is not committed to exclusive runs, because Sidney R. Kent, president, opposes them, sold exclusives to Harry Arthur's circuit in New Haven while Mr. Kent was in Europe. Immediately upon consummation of the deal and after Mr. Arthur launched a widespread campaign on behalf of his new policy, the Connecticut MPTO appealed to Governor Cross for relief by means of a tax. The Fox deal is confined to Mr. Arthur's theatres at Meriden, Worcester and Waterbury.

A test suit is planned in the superior court at New Haven by the MPTO, it is understood. The general target of the association will be excessive protection, with exclusives attacked as a phase of this issue. Governor Cross is said to have promised to aid exhibitors in their fight. Plans were discussed last week at an MPTO meeting in New Haven.

MGM exclusives in New England in all probability will be limited to seven situations. One deal already is set, with a second for six towns now in negotiation. Loew's in Providence is the initial exclusive spot for MGM with Fox Poli houses in Meriden, New Haven, Worcester, Bridgeport, Springfield and Waterbury, all operated by Harry C. Arthur, as the next situations. The deal with Mr. Arthur is said to be practically set.

Charles L. Glett, vice president of Freuler Film Associates, an independent company, went south the other day to study reaction of the exclusive run situation on the independent market. He reported that the conversion of large circuit-owned houses into exclusive runs will bring into being a whole new line of independent first runs that heretofore have played nothing but subsequents. "It is obvious to the observer," said Mr. Glett, "that the outcome will be strong independent producing and distributing units to which these independent first runs, for the first time, will make sole recourse for their product."

Mr. Glett said the situation seems ideal for these reasons: "It answers the problem of the major companies with their theatre holdings and price competition; it preserves the de luxe run as such; it makes it possible to pay heavy overhead and make a profit; and finally, it gives the theatregoer a feeling he is getting his money's worth."

Opening on an exclusive run basis late in September at Loew's Midland, Kansas City, "Grand Hotel" sagged below average in its second week. "Pack Up Your Troubles" followed.

Subsequent Runs Protest

Meanwhile, subsequent run exhibitors were denouncing the policy. The exhibitors did not conceal their alarm at an innovation which they believed would deprive them of their profits and the product of a large distributor.

After consulting legal advisors, Jay Means, president of the Independent Theatre Owners Association, concluded that court action will have to wait until the policy has been in effect some time before exhibitors can claim their business has been injured. The protests against MGM continued, but were not directed against United Artists, which planned to join MGM in showing exclusives. The association has instructed attorneys to investigate the legality of the exclusive practice at Loew's Midland, Kansas City. A test case may result.

E. Van Hyning, president of the MPTO of Kansas and Missouri, said, "MGM's exclusive run policy will prove a boomerang and after a trial the company will find that it is not practical." Mr. Van Hyning declared he believed the producer was within the law in limiting its product to a single house, but he added, "it is the neighborhood theatres that have made the stars what they are today. It seems to me a very unfair policy to take the stars away from the patrons and theatres who helped to make them."

Zoning Litigation a Factor

At the same time, zoning litigation and the fact that exhibitors have been quick to resort to the courts in disputes with distributors was viewed as a major reason why exclusive runs will be in general use in de luxe houses by 1933. A Kansas City exchange executive was quoted as saying, "The Youngclaus suit and similar actions have caused a lot of trouble for the distributors which could have been obviated by exclusive runs. By automatically doing away with protection, exclusives will settle that perplexing problem. This conclusion, together with the fact that exclusive runs have

Adequate Protection Suggested As Solution to Exclusives

Mr. Allen Johnson, an independent theatre owner of Grand Rapids, Mich., and at one time president of the state exhibitor organization, has forwarded a discussion on exclusive runs which, he believes, might help to clarify matters in the present situation. Proper protection in key zones is the solution, Mr. Johnson says, and in this connection he offers a simplified protection plan.

By ALLEN JOHNSON,
Royal and Our Theatres, Grand Rapids

The various legal angles of exclusive runs have been discussed freely, likewise, advantages to the theatre selected for the run and the disadvantage to the theatre that is not, but there is one phase that seems to have had little consideration. That is the economics of the plan as it relates to the industry as a whole over a long period.

The very foundation of this business is built upon its universal or almost universal appeal to the masses. The exclusive plan definitely reduces the number who may see the better pictures. Will these people, and they are many, be satisfied to accept only second rate pictures, or will they forsake pictures entirely? Ultimately a great number will gradually adopt some other form of amusement, with a consequent serious loss of revenue to the industry. Producers who go into the exclusive run plan should be prepared to lose the rental from subsequent runs, not only on pictures that are sold exclusive, but on second rate product as well. This loss must of necessity be added to the first run account who plays exclusives. It's the second and third rate pictures that cause the worry. Taking away outstanding pictures from a subsequent run either forces that house out of business or forces it to a very low admission price with possibly added attractions and a consequent reduction in the amount of money left for film rentals. Many an exhibitor pays an average that is out of proportion on second rate subjects but the occasional "clean up" picture keeps him in business.

The opera is almost entirely unknown to, and consequently unappreciated by, the middle and lower classes in this country, because it is not made available to them at a price they can afford to pay. The motion picture occupies an opposite place today in our own country. Everyone goes because it is within the reach of everyone. Any plan to make it "exclusive" is fundamentally and economically wrong.

The public does not expect a return to five and ten cent shows. Every fair-minded person in and outside of the industry will agree that conditions cannot continue as they have in the past year. But exclusive runs are not the answer. The plan is absurd, unnecessary, and un-American. It is just as extreme and as basically wrong as to expect pictures to be made immediately available for fifteen cents.

Analogy from Book Field

A publisher buys a story and if it is a good one it is released in book form to the public in a two or three dollar edition. There is a class of people who can and will buy the book at that price. After a period of time, it is released in a dollar edition and finally, after a sufficient period of time has elapsed, it is put out in a fifty cent edition. Buyers are to be found in every price class. Is not that the answer to our problem? Protection—adequate protection based upon admission price and policy. The "Grand Hotels" can and should be road showed at 1.50 or more, brought back six months later for a legitimate first run at fifty or sixty cents (more if shown with a stage show). Protection over all subsequent runs should be according to price differentiation.

For example, let us say the legitimate first run (without stage show) is sixty cents. The next run, let us say, would be at 75% of the first run price or forty-five cents, after a period of four weeks protection; the next run at thirty cents after a period of eight weeks protection; the next run at fifteen cents after a period of sixteen weeks protection.

Simplifying the set-up, it would look something like this:

1st run	60c	100%	—On release or 6 months after roadshow
2d	45c	75%	of 1st run price—4 weeks after.
3d	30c	50%	of 1st run price—8 weeks after.
4th	15c	25%	of 1st run price—16 weeks after.

Additional penalties or protection should be imposed for added attractions over and above the usual two hour show of feature, comedy, news and variety reels as follows:

If first run uses vaudeville and second run does not, the protection should be reduced between the runs. If a subsequent run uses vaudeville or give-aways, or double features, additional protection should be imposed over and above the foregoing schedule.

Perhaps the periods of protection outlined above are not right; they may be too long or perhaps not long enough. Only by testing the plan will the proper protection period, that actually protects without being unfair to any one, be determined.

Some will say there is nothing new about this plan, but I say it is new—at least, it has never been properly tried out. True, the first runs have, in most cases, secured adequate protection, but the same proportionate protection has not been extended to subsequent runs.

Blames Exchanges Also

The exchanges are partly to blame because they have refused adequate protection to second, third, and fourth run. They have used as a principal argument that it tied up their investments in a picture too long. That is unsound, however, because when they release a picture to houses charging ten and fifteen cents before an adequate period of time has elapsed, they injure their preceding runs and ultimately have to accept less rental from the runs who should be contributing the important revenue. Exchanges should be re-geared to keep good prints available for at least a year on all pictures and on outstanding productions, even longer.

Independent exhibitors have not been entirely blameless. The position taken by some exhibitor leaders, that protection should end with the end of the run, is ridiculous and absolutely untenable. If such became the rule, we would become a ten-cent industry in six months. Only adequate protection based upon sale price and policy will keep prices up sufficiently to permit improvement in the industry and a fair return of profit to those of us who are in it. Such a plan should be devised and with a certain amount of flexibility under an arbitration set-up, should be given a legal background so that no one need fear.

Extreme ideas must be discarded if we are to progress. Exclusive runs are extreme. The theory of no protection being justified beyond the end of the play date is extreme.

HOWARD DIETZ, PLAYFUL SHOWMAN

He builds revues and sells pictures

Howard Dietz writes 36 as his age but into that span he has crowded experience that makes him a veteran in the history of motion pictures, Broadway and the stage.

"Flying Colors," at the Imperial Theatre, has five Dietzian ancestors. The other musicals to which this slender, blue-eyed, dark-haired youth contributed lyrics and sketches were the Little Shows, all three of them; "Three's a Crowd," in which Libby Holman torch-trouped with "Body and Soul," and "The Band Wagon," which had almost everything.

For all his early and rapid rise on Broadway, Mr. Dietz is modest and is primarily interested in his job. It is nothing new to him, but he likes it—and has liked it for the twelve years he has been head of the advertising and publicity departments of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Mr. Dietz has come to the conclusion that the longer you stay in the business the less you know about it, and that is what makes it interesting, aside from the salary.

"The industry has had a series of idea cycles in advertising and publicity," said Mr. Dietz, with just a hint of amusement. "Somehow the policies became unfixed—just a big series of unfixed policies. Right now the shows are outside the theatres. If this keeps up the public will have to go inside the theatre to see the ballyhoo or stay on the sidewalk if they want to see the show. Our concern is—can the theatre canopies stand the strain?"

Howard Dietz has his office at Broadway and Forty-sixth street and he also has a fast eye, as befits a ping pong champion. The last ping pong war broke out last January and once more it was Mr. Dietz who paddled his way to victory over such worthy opponents as Bill Tilden, Max Schmeling, Sidney Lenz and Harpo Marx. The conflict raged at the Algonquin hotel, long the raging ground.

Mr. Dietz has quite an interest in New York City. He was born there—"born and bred" is the way he puts it. He once wrote a poem about New Yorkers who are not New Yorkers but come in assorted bunches of "ians" and other conveyances. Poetry seems to have exercised an early interest. Bearing witness are his "Babylon," and scores of contributions to Judge, Life and F. P. A. (Franklin P. Adams, columnist of "The Conning Tower," New York Herald Tribune.) With this interest went such sidelines as browsing about on the Bowery for copies of old songs. Mr. Dietz today owns one of the most complete collections of the old Delaney Song Books, dated about 1870.

Circumstances have a way of getting together to start a youngster on a career. In young Mr. Dietz's case the fortunate occurrence was an advertising contest which he won while a student at Columbia University. This brought $500 to the former office boy of the New York American and a job with the Philip Goodman Advertising Agency.

He went through the $500 in one week with the help of Rector's and Captain Jim Churchill's cabarets, where he took pains to meet the right people. Somehow he managed to get on a railroad labor gang bound westward from Hoboken to an obscure place called Deposit. Two hours at Deposit convinced him that he was on the right track but with the wrong crowd. He telegraphed for funds. When they were not forthcoming at once, the next step was to obtain a job at the local Borden milk depot. The milkmen obliged by going on strike and he got an exclusive story which he later retailed to the New York newspapers.

In 1917 Mr. Dietz married Elizabeth Bigelow Hall. He joined the Navy the same year. This was due almost entirely to the fact that there was a war in Europe. At Hampton Roads, Va., he was taken with the "flu." After waiting in line five days for admission to the hospital he keeled over. When he awoke he was inside. Immediately upon his discharge from the hospital he was assigned to what apparently was considered an aid to convalescents—duty in the garbage transportation department. In the barracks yard he found a compatriot who had the courage of his convictions—he was holding his nose. The man after Deitz's own heart was Russell Nedell, art editor of Navy Life. Dietz soon had a job on Navy Life and was lost forever to naval transportation on land.

After the Armistice he obtained a place in the publicity department of Goldwyn Pictures and in a short time, at the ripe old age of 24, headed the publicity and advertising departments when Goldwyn merged with Metro.

The versatility and capacity for hard work that have produced for Howard Dietz a record with few equals in motion picture advertising and publicity, have led him to noticed activity in other fields of amusement. There is even a children's story, "June Goes Downtown," published by A. and C. Boni.

He made his Broadway debut with a sketch, "The Forty-niners," in collaboration with Morris Ryskind. The sketch ran twenty minutes on the opening night and thereafter ran no more. In "Poppy," Luella Gear sang one of his first songs, "Alibi Baby." Goodman, the producer, gave Dietz $100 and he soon spent all but $9 of it following his song around on the road. Out of that he won a pipe and a contract to do the lyrics for a new show. The show was "Dear Sir," and since it ran only two weeks, it is assumed that the pipe survived it.

Four years ago one of Mr. Dietz's best publicity bits was a test, at Columbia University, of the reaction of blondes and brunettes to hot love scenes portrayed on a motion picture screen.

Many the Broadway nifty, passing under other labels, has had its origin in the whimsy of Mr. Dietz. For instance there is the quip that went around the world to contribute vastly to the fame of Samuel Goldwyn. While Mr. Goldwyn was in London interviewing George Bernard Shaw, Mr. Dietz thought up the notion of having it related that Mr. Shaw, after a long interview, has said to Mr. Goldwyn; "You are so much the artist and I am so much the business man I fear that we shall never be able to reach an understanding." The notion went over to London from Dietz in code and came back over the press cables as a story, one of those waspish, hot, short ones that everybody prints.

The late Marcus Loew held Mr. Dietz in high esteem and took great joy in relating an episode of their early acquaintance.

"I invited Howard out here to Pembroke for a week-end," remarked Mr. Loew, "so we could get better acquainted and so I could have a notion about this young man who was in so responsible a post in our company. He arrived late Saturday and on Sunday morning I took him for a stroll through the grounds and the conservatories. He surprised me speechless by the way he exclaimed over the flowers and how he could name a rare tree or a bush at a range of a hundred yards. I thought to myself, 'Well, I surely got a smart young fellow here—why he's even up on botany.'

"I kept thinking that for several days. Then one evening the head gardener got talkative and asked me 'Who was that black-haired young fellow that was out here in the greenhouse after midnight Saturday, reading all the plant labels with an electric torch?'

"But he got the raise, anyway."

Marcus Loew liked the technique.

Another Dietz deviation from the expected was staged at the opening of the "Hollywood Revue." Twenty-four chorus girls were strapped to the wall of the Astor theatre and went through a dance routine to the delight of Broadway and the good of the box office.

Playing anagrams, for high stakes, with Alexander Woollcott is a favorite diversion. He also gets to a billiard table as often as possible. He prefers drama to musical comedy. Fishing and golf are out; being a ping pong champion, his one great ambition in life is to become a tennis champion.

THE CAMERA REPORTS

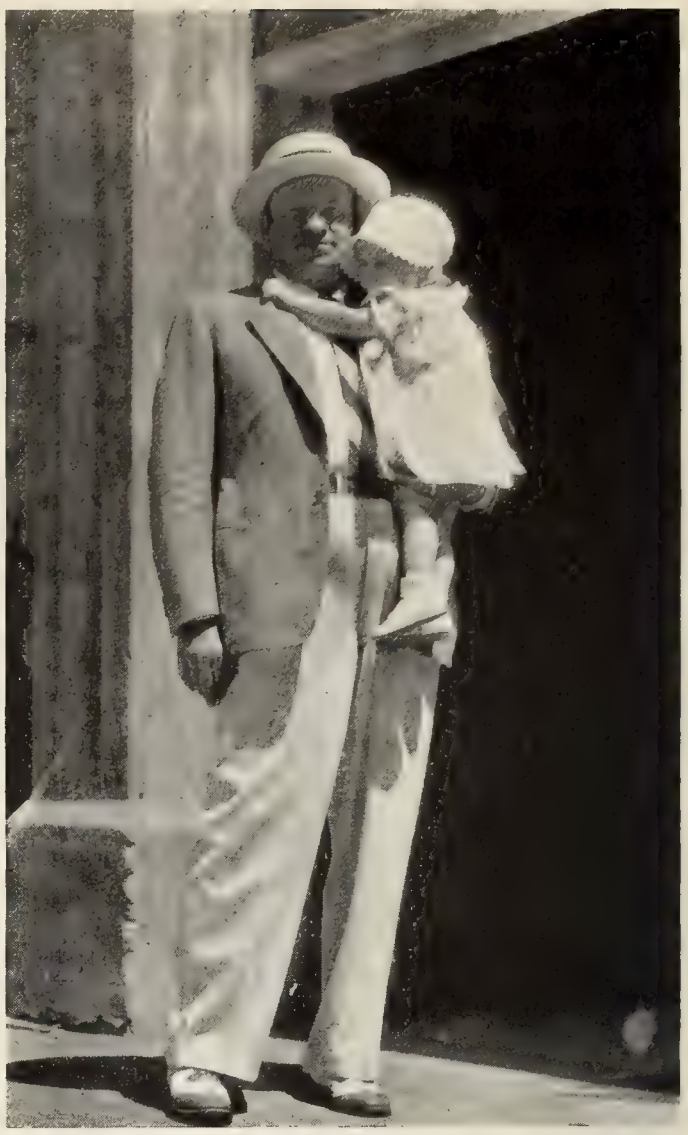
AMBUSHED. So to speak, this being another one of those undercover shots. In this instance, Bert Longworth has victimized Darryl Zanuck, associate to Jack L. Warner at Warner-First National, with his rapid-firing camera.

IN LEAD. Bette Davis, rocketing from the ranks at Warners', who has the chief feminine role in "Parachute Jumper," starring Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.

LOANED. Borrowed from Samuel Goldwyn. She is Shirley Grey, whom World Wide has obtained for "Uptown New York," in work at Tiffany.

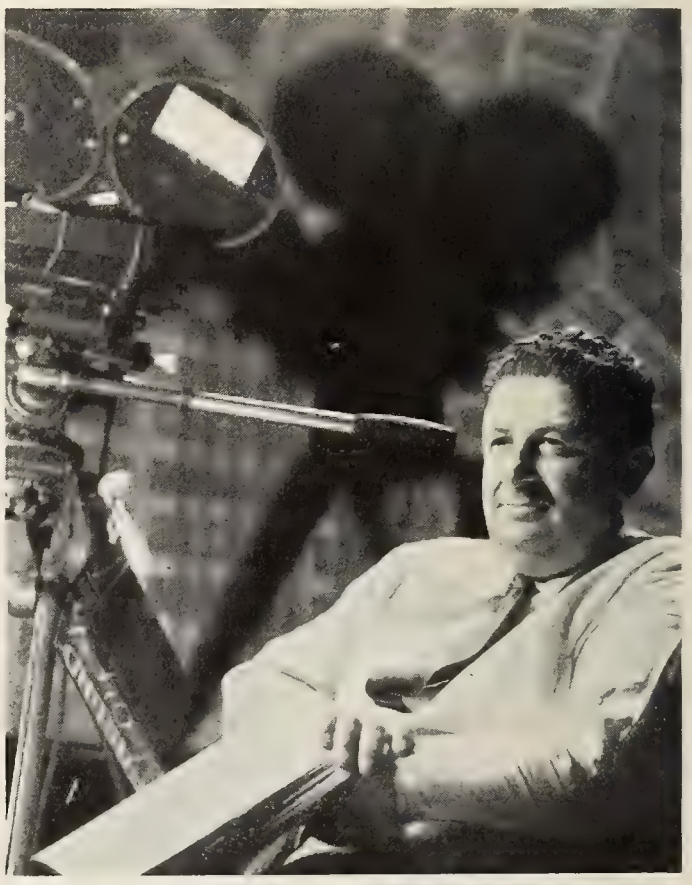
ON THE ROAD BACK. That's punning, of course, for James Whale, here shown aboard ship in New York harbor, has returned to direct Universal's "The Road Back." Whale has been vacationing lengthily in England.

JUVENILES. Of their kind, no reflections on the histrionic variety being intended. Nor, obviously, is William Powell referred to. The Warner star thus intrudes because (since he owns the momma-dawg) they're his pups.

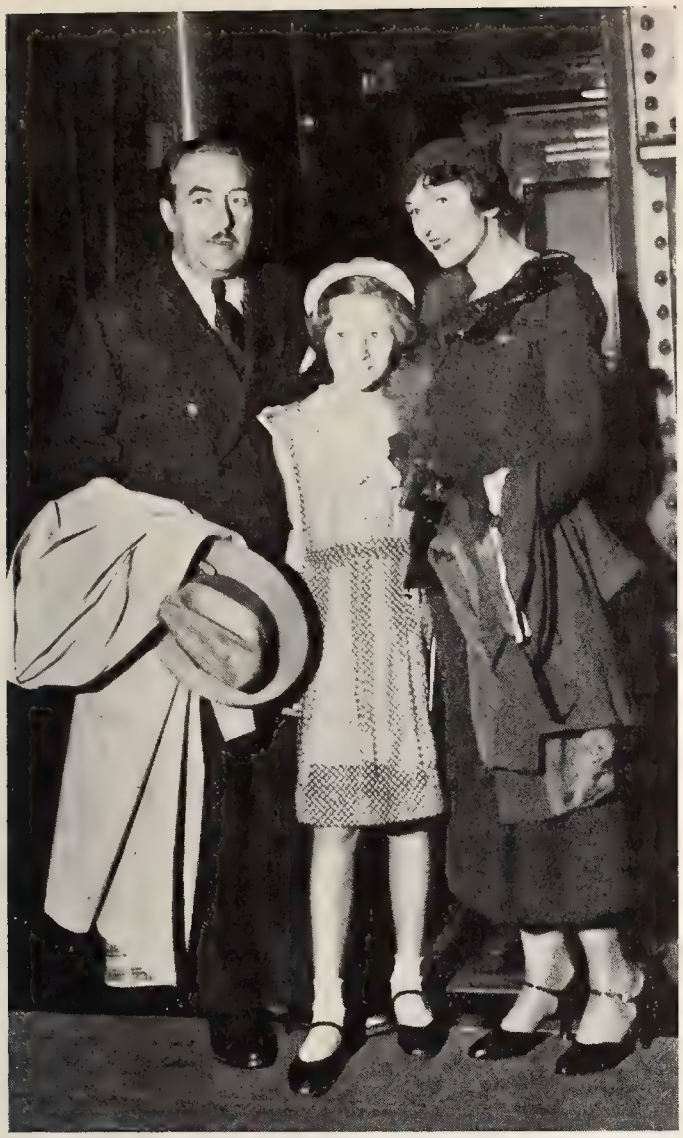


SIGNED. Ruby Keeler who has been signed to a long-term contract by First National. Her first role will be in "Forty-Second Street."

MENACE. But Jackie is apparently out of character for this pose with Patsy Ruth Miller and Brewster Morse. Jackie, and maybe Miss Miller, will be in Morse's "Roar of the Jungle," Freuler Film Associates picture.



BROADCASTING A PLAYLET. How it's done, in case you didn't know. Shown in action is a cast radioing episodes from Majestic's "The Phantom Express," which issued through ten stations. Similar broadcastings will be conducted for Majestic's "The Crusader." The air productions were arranged by Stewart Moss and Charles Reed Jones, in connection with the New York showings.



LOCAL TRANSIT. Carol Ann has come to tour the MGM lot, so transportation is up to His Daddy-ship, Wallace Beery (who can scarcely be called too small for the job). Carol Ann was adopted by Mr. and Mrs. Beery some months ago.

A PLEASANT INTERRUPTION. Or so it must have been when Director Lloyd Bacon and Star Joe E. Brown were visited on location at Catalina by Mrs. Bacon, Mrs. Brown, Dolores Costello-Barrymore and Helene Costello-Sherman. They are shown with friends in front of a swell marine background as Messrs. Bacon and Brown paused between scenes of Warners' "You Said a Mouthful."

PROMOTED. Following what would seem to be a logical development, Karl Freund (here shown at the Universal studio with the emblems of his craft) has been elevated from cameraman to director. His first assignment is Universal's "Im-Ho-Tep."

BACK TO BROADWAY. Walter Connolly, stage star who has just completed his first screen role in Columbia's "Washington Merry-Go-Round," arriving in New York for the premiere. Shown meeting him are his wife and daughter.

MADE FIRST OF GROUP. Members of the cast and technical crew which produced the first of a series of eight Remington productions. Among them will be recognized Mary Brian, Irene Rich, James Hall, Hale Hamilton, Noel Francis, Jed Prouty and Clay Clement. "Manhattan Tower" was filmed at Universal City under the supervision of Lou Ostrow, with Frank Strayer directing.

MECHANISM. A fine example of modern photographic art that made this production still runner-up to the picture ultimately chosen as the current "Still of the Month." This study is of George Marion, Sr., in Fox's "Six Hours to Live."

IS OUR FACE RED! And we don't mean the cover! Not that it is any surprise to find Our Gang with the Herald. But who thought they could read? Maybe, of course, they can't, and that—. At any rate, here the Hal Roach rascals are, Stymie, Spanky, Dorothy, Dickie Moore and Cotton. Readin'—or else just making sure they get their pictures in the Herald.

JOB FOR "SOME HOLLYWOOD IBSEN"

Says DeCasseres of "The Other One," and "Success Story" as Picture "Simply Howls for Muni"

by BENJAMIN DE CASSERES

SUCCESS STORY

This play by John Howard Lawson simply howls for Paul Muni in every situation and in every scene.

Sol Ginsberg, an East Side kid whose brother died a gangster's death and was buried in a fake $20,000 coffin, who himself has the soul of a gunman but climbs to the top of the commercial world, was played poorly by Luther Adler. Muni is the only actor on the stage who can pull the roots out of this remarkable character creation.

Sol is tough and rough. He is a radical dreamer. At bottom he is a rat, a cave-man, a frustrated Capone.

We see him first as a first-class statistician in a powerful advertising ballyhoo firm, whose head is a Gentile, Raymond Merritt (played excellently by Franchot Tone). Sol has a platonic love for Merritt's secretary, who got him the job.

Sol is a brazen, blatant, dynamic worker. He bawls out his superiors and so gets promoted because of his nerve and his "great schemes." He "don't take no fire—see?"

In four years and three acts he has taken away the business from Merritt, married Merritt's mistress (a loud platinum chiseler), and finally is shot and killed by his first love, the secretary to whom he tries to make tiger-love in the office at night.

The play, for all its interesting work-out, is phony. Sol Ginsberg is a remarkable character, but he is Vulgarity incarnate.

What Muni can do with his play and character is something that will be memorable, I think.

NONA

"Nona"—Gladys Unger did it. As a stage play it is moth-eaten and gives forth an odor of pre-McKinley staleness.

But there is Ulric—the luscious Lenore—who can pull "Uncle Tom's Cabin" out of the ice. But I fear the Ulric has overplayed. Oh, yes, she still glows, ferments, is superorganic, yowls, meouws and screams as of yore, but it is getting a trifle wearisome. Tiger Rose and Lulu Belle register no longer. I hate to record this, for I have been one of her pop-eyed victims. (Is she not the Knute Rockne of Sex?)

But "Nona" will be a picture when it goes through the half-sole-and-heel store out where the San Gabriel flows.

Nona is a German dancer. She has a red-hot temperament, a good heart, is without a sweetheart for the moment (the artists' room in Symphony Hall, Philadelphia), has a rich, married, platonic backer, and an entourage of the usual eccentrics.

In pops for no reason at all a rich Philadelphian (assumed name of Finale) who becomes her piano accompanist in the place of the fellow she just fired. She makes him agree not to make love to her (love is bad for Nona's toe-work).

Touring the country, the next scene is the private car of Nona, snowbound in Colorado. The eccentrics are aboard—'cellist, Nona's private secretary, a virgin who offers herself while stewed to Finale in case he is pressed to save Nona—this is a fine bit played superbly by Patricia Calvert, as is also the part played by a hard-boiled property man.

Of course Finale makes desperate love. Then he discovers a $50,000 check signed by the platonic backer for a home for Nona's "orphans."

He jumps from the train (hey! hey!) and goes through the snow to a small station. Nona, now caught in Love's Web (hey! hey!), follows him. Finale then reveals he's a rich man.

They all come in.

This piece of cheese can be transmuted into a passable piece of cinema lemon meringue pie in sturdy hands.

BIDDING HIGH

A battle between Wall Street and bootleg booze. Also between two sisters, Myra and Sylvia Crane.

The play, "Bidding High," is by Lois Howell. It doesn't click like a nickel in the automat, but it contains some of the stuff of which those slow-moving interior pictures are made. If the producer who grabs this off feels like it he can go into the stockroom and pull out the old panic-on-the-Stock Exchange shots. They'll fit.

Englewood, N. J., is where this opus is laid. Myra Crane, getting near the steep and blowsy forties, is in love with Mark Ellis, a Wall Street playboy with more jack than any Broadway actor has seen since Booth and Barrett's day.

Sylvia, her sister, meaner, and therefore younger and more appealing, grabs Mark (she loves him for his market clean-ups alone) from Myra and marries him. In doing this she gives the air to Jimmy Stevens, the local Capone.

Mark loses his shirt-tail in the market. Sylvia returns to the arms of her Georgie Raft (so to speak) and Myra has her Mark again.

The cast is good, but the play has pre-war asthma.

Picture value, oh, 40 per cent.

THE STORK IS DEAD

Al Woods, the man who invented the bedroom, the father of the nightgown and the communicating hotel doors, is at it again after laying off of the thing for some years.

Do you remember the cycle of breath-taking snickers that began with "Up in Mabel's Room" and "Getting Gertie's Garter"? (O Minsky, O mores!)

Well, here is "The Stork is Dead," a farce-comedy by Hans Kottow, a Viennese Boccaccio, done into socalled English by the Merry Hattons (Fred and Fanny), who will half-sole and heel any foreign three-acter while you wait.

Let's gulp it down quickly. French count, on the rocks, has got to marry a pure young thing with the baby stare in order to recoup.

The Count has his discarded women on his trail, and one of them threatens to tell the just-out-of-the-convent girl what a wiggle-waggle the Count has been if he goes through with the consummation (O Minsky, O mores!).

The parents of the girl "coach her." The bridegroom informs the girl "the stork is dead." But she appears in hardly anything—and the Count gives up the ghost, so to speak. It's a Bill Powell.

All the scenes in the three acts are laid in bedrooms. Uncle Will Hays and Judge Landis, please take notice.

Picture value, 25 per cent, if mutilated 100 per cent.

THE OTHER ONE

Here's a play that's got a good idea in the offing but went cock-eyed for some reason that is beyond my usually keen analytical powers. Maybe it was because it was played in whispers or because I'd rather see it in pictures than on the stage.

"The Other One" is by Henry Meyers. It is about a pair of twins, members of the Unfair Sex. One of the twins is caught dying as the curtain ups. She has been poisoned by her sister, who is married.

Now, the twin who did the bumping off marries the husband of the sister she bumped off. As she has the same kind of features as her beautifully poisoned sister, he, of course, is very little the wiser. One curve is as good as another.

The bumper confesses to her father-in-law that she has poisoned her sister, but as he is a busy man he refuses to be bothered by such commonplaces. Mysterious, eh?

You see, the idea is this—but if you've seen Pirandello's "As You Desire Me" you get it. Only Monsieur Meyers is not Signor Pirandello by a whole lot.

Some Hollywood Ibsen might make a twin-puzzle picture of this. There's also an Edgar Wallace in the theme—somewhere.

Picture value, 5 per cent, with free tea and toast.

CHARLES E. McDONALD

McDonald is Coast Representative of Herald and Daily

Charles E. McDonald, Hollywood representative of MOTION PICTURE HERALD and MOTION PICTURE DAILY, dates his career in the industry from the early 1900's, when he played in Essanay pictures. He has also been in the newspaper business, circus and carnival press representative, actor on the vaudeville and legitimate stage, and theatre manager. He wrote the book and lyrics of "Let's Go," musical comedy success of a few years ago.

Mr. McDonald was vice-president and general manager of Van Beuren Corporation for ten years, supervising production of more than a thousand short comedies. He also became vice-president and production manager of Wafilms, Inc., resigning late last year.

Ontario Sets Precedent With New Censor Ruling

The Canadian province of Ontario has decided to accept French language films for showing in Ontario theatres without censoring and a censorship fee, provided the subjects have been approved by the censor of Quebec province. The move is looked upon in Toronto as setting a vital censorship precedent. The principle has been created of recognizing the decisions of the censor of another province.

French films, by the action, are relieved of censorship restrictions in Ontario, while product from Great Britain, Germany, Russia and the United States must continue paying the censor fee.

New York Circuits Continue Only Seven Day Protection

Protection over subsequent runs in the Greater New York territory for the Loew and RKO circuits remains at seven days, as the result of a settlement reached by the circuits with local exchanges.

BIG BRITISH CIRCUITS SHOW YEAR'S PROFIT

Gaumont-British Records Profit of £490,300 in 1932; G-B Paying 6% Dividend, ABC 5%; Fight on Budget Taxes

by BERNARD CHARMAN

London Correspondent

We can now proceed to tell you what has been the state of the British industry over the last year, from authentic records. In other words, the trading figures of the two largest circuits are now out, showing that at least some people still know how to make money with pictures, even if they haven't coined as much these twelve months as in better times.

Associated British Cinemas made £373,-310, and Gaumont-British shows a profit of £490,300. ABC announces a dividend of 5 per cent; Gaumont-British will pay 6 per cent.

Since ABC published its results first, we shall follow the same order in our study of these figures. There was of course a shrinkage from the 1931 totals. The profit was £431,451 in that year. That such a thing should happen in these times is hardly surprising, and the report shows the directors to be undeterred by the fact. They say:

"The cinema business responds rapidly to any improvement in general industrial conditions, and the directors believe that there are now indications of such an improvement."

Now let us see what return British Internal Pictures obtained for the supply of life-blood it has pumped into the same circuit over the same period. Its figures, issued concurrently with those of ABC, show a similar state of affairs, the profit of £112,513 comparing with £186,661 for 1931. Again a dividend of 5 per cent is declared. (Both companies paid 8 per cent last year.)

A reminiscence of the ill-fated multi-lingual experiment appears in the BIP report, which says:

"During the year it became apparent to the directors that considerable difficulty and delay would be encountered in recovering substantial sums due to the company for foreign language versions of a number of pictures made some time ago and sold by the subsidiary company, BIP (Export), Ltd., for exploitation in Germany and other Continental countries. Owing to the financial instability and government embargoes on remitting money prevailing in these countries, the directors have deemed it prudent to provide for possible loss on these debts and have appropriated £100,000 from the general reserve, which has been applied to balances due by subsidiary and associated companies. Such losses will be non-recurring, as the company stopped making foreign versions a considerable time ago and does not intend to resume making them."

Optimism of the public in the outlook for the cinema is revealed by the fact that the issue of a million shares of five shillings in August this year was fully subscribed.

And now let us turn to the half million profit recorded by Gaumont British. The sum of £490,300 given as net profit for the year represents a decrease of only £11,758 on the previous twelve months, and leads to the conclusion that box office returns have been buoyed by the improved quality British pictures that the company has been able to play over its circuit.

A few days before the release of the foregoing figures two further Gaumont subsidiaries announced their annual results. General Theatre Corporation showed gross profit of £316,814, a drop of a mere £7,000, while Denman Picture Houses declared £332,795, only £3,000 below 1931. Both these companies are theatre operating concerns.

One may well infer from all these facts and figures that optimism is the dominating note in home cinema circles. The inference is backed by the statement in the Gaumont report that "the Corporation's dominant position in the film industry has been further strengthened by the acquisition through subsidiary and associated companies of additional theatres. The programme of construction of new theatres has continued to progress in a normal manner."

Australia Booking Deal

A new move to ensure external distribution of home product has been made by Gaumont British, this time with Australasia as their objective. As the result of researches undertaken on the territory by the British company, a contract has been made with British Dominions Films, Ltd., of Australia, whereby that company will distribute the entire output of G. B. in all the prinicipal cities of Australia and New Zealand.

British Dominions (not to be confused with British & Dominions of London) has its own circuit in the southern continent, and has also for long handled many of the most successful productions emanating from British studios.

New Fight on Budget

Before the last governmental budget there was great agitation in the trade for a campaign to have the entertainment tax reduced; unfortunately there was so much to talk about (or so it appeared then) that no concrete decision on policy could be made.

But next time it's going to be a lot different.

The general council of the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association inaugurated its autumn session by laying down plans whereby trailers shall be prepared in sufficient quantity to allow every member to feed his public with propaganda from now on. That there will be a practical development at last is ensured by the generous action of Mark Ostrer, of Gaumont British, to contribute £1,000 towards the campaign, on condition that each exhibitor shall make a contribution of his own. In consequence, the C. E. A. council proposes to impose a levy on all members, varying between 2 pounds 2 shillings for bigger halls and 10 shillings sixpence for smaller operators.

EISENSTEIN'S PICTURE RUINED, SAYS SINCLAIR

Novelist Declares American Cutters Eliminated All Scenes Favorable to Mexico from Production That He Inspired

by JAMES LOCKHART
Mexico City Correspondent

Charges that a pro-Mexican picture entitled "Viva Mexico" ("Hurrah for Mexico"), produced in Mexico by Serge Eisenstein, Russian film producer, were so cut by American technicians as to leave only scenes of the worst aspects of Mexican life and to distort the director's purpose in producing the picture, were made by Agustin Aragon Leiva. Señor Leiva, who claims to be an intimate friend of the Russian, made the criticism in a lecture on "Mexico and the Tragedy of Eisenstein," delivered at his Mexico City home.

According to Señor Aragon Leiva, Mr. Eisenstein, after walking out on some Hollywood companies who didn't agree with his views, was induced to come to Mexico by Upton Sinclair, American radical novelist, to make a unique picture depicting Mexican life as is. Mr. Eisenstein's aim was to reproduce stark realism, to make a picture without plot showing good, bad, and indifferent aspects of life in the Republic immediately south of the Rio Grande. Aragon Leiva declared that three sections of the picture had been made when Mr. Eisenstein had to go to Russia. He gave his incompleted work to Mr. Sinclair, the lecturer said, and the novelist, in an effort to retrieve the $40,000 spent on the production, endeavored to market it in Hollywood, but met 100 per cent turndowns. Mr. Sinclair then decided to complete the work himself, Aragon Leiva declared, and put the film into the hands of three American technicians to whip into shape for exhibition. The Mexican asserts that these experts cut out all scenes favorable to Mexico and left a thing that is little short of an insult to Mexico, her people and their customs and manners. He advised true Mexicans not to patronize it.

All for Dialogue Now

When the talkers made their debut in Mexico some three years ago, they took the picture-going public off its feet. Exhibitors who tried out the experiment of spoken pictures had no reason to repent of their enterprise. There was always good business for them; eager crowds formed queues before the box office impatiently waiting to plumb the mystery of sound and voices that came from the screen. True, not a few were attracted to these shows by skepticism. They thought that the talkers were nothing more than a clever Yankee trick of placing actors and actresses back of the screen to speak lines for the action and to make appropriate noises. That notion was knocked on the head when they found that all such pictures were spoken in English and had Spanish titles to clarify the action for persons speaking only that tongue.

After the first enthusiasm for this novelty, doubts were expressed in certain quarters as to whether or not Mexican fans would continue to favor pictures spoken in a language which the majority of them don't understand. This dubiousness was supported by demonstrations made by audiences in two leading Mexico City cinemas, uproars which were so strenuous that the lights had to be switched on and the police called to restore order. However, such manifestations were not so much against the talkers as expressions of resentment that the producers spaced out the Spanish titles too much, leaving the Mexican audiences bewildered as to what the pictures were all about. One such picture had only 65 Spanish titles in ten reels. That situation has since been straightened out, and not even the most rabid nationalist in these parts can complain now about the paucity of titles in Spanish.

MGM Appeal Effective

It is a well-established fact that Mexican picture show patrons like the talkers. There is, of course, a decided favoring of such pictures in Spanish, but at the same time large audiences continue to be attracted in first line and neighborhood houses by talking pictures in English, French and German, with the English leading in general popularity. It is now difficult to find a cinema in Mexico City that is not wired.

So popular have dialogue productions become that Mexican picture fans have completely soured on silents, and manifest restlessness during exhibitions of films that have only sound effects or accompaniment. It is only in obscure nickelodeons in the larger cities and tiny cinemas in towns of the hinterland that silents continue to be exhibited.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer is using full-page advertisements in Mexico City's daily newspapers, setting forth the merits of its productions and showing its battery of stars. This publicity has attracted great attention in the national capital and throughout the Republic. Metro's chief display theatre in Mexico is the Teatro Regis, Mexico City, which heads a circuit of several large cinemas.

Fredman, London Editor, To Study Situation Here

Ernest W. Fredman, managing editor of The Daily Film Renter, London motion picture trade publication, will arrive in New York next week from London, stopping en route for a short stay in Canada to review the film situation there. Mr. Fredman will spend a week or ten days in New York, stopping at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, and then will go on to the Coast for a study of the production center.

Serkowich Back with Publix

Benjamin H. Serkowich, former editor of Publix Opinion, Publix house organ, has returned to the organization. His first assignment is an effort to stimulate business in the Balaban and Katz group of Chicago houses.

Use of Exclusives Spreads; Protest of Exhibitors Too

proved profitable and practical in several spots, gives rise to the belief that the policy will be widespread in another year."

By the end of last month it was evident that the exclusive run idea was taking hold among exhibitors in smaller towns in the Kansas City territory who saw in it a means of eliminating competition.

Glen Dickinson, who operates in 15 towns in Kansas and Missouri, was a staunch supporter of exclusives for his circuit. "I think second-runs are demoralizing to the business and a great detriment to the possibilities of first-runs," he said. While he believed that exclusives within a town would prove beneficial, Mr. Dickinson was opposed to exclusives at one situation over neighboring towns.

Circuits Seeking Exclusives

It was also reported that circuits in the territory were seeking exclusive bookings this year from several large distributors for towns outside Kansas City. Fox Midwest theatre last year effected exclusive contracts with Paramount and MGM and a similar arrangement is reported for new product. MGM was believed to be willing to grant Fox theatres exclusive playing time in Topeka and Wichita. However, an executive at one exchange explained the situation as not involving exclusive, but as first-run deals where suitable subsequent-runs are not available.

United Artists has decided to ignore New Orleans with regards exclusive selling, and because of the comparatively few competitive spots in the territory, which includes Alabama, Louisiana, Mississippi and Florida, it is unlikely that the company will sell exclusive anywhere in the district.

Warners' Trenton theatre at Lynchburg, Virginia, is trying out exclusives. Pictures playing the house are advertised as "gone forever" on termination of the Trenton run.

Publix Plan in San Antonio

Publix brought exclusives to San Antonio the other day when an exclusive run deal was closed for product of the circuit's parent company and for United Artists and MGM. The policy was inaugurated at the Texas, local ace house of the company, which contracted to each all pictures in the deal for a minimum of one week. Pictures included, and which will not be shown elsewhere in San Antonio, include "Grand Hotel," "Blonde Venus," "Phantom President," "Movie Crazy," "Big Broadcast," "Smilin' Thru," "Prosperity," "Kid from Spain," "A Farewell to Arms," "Sign of the Cross," and "No Man of Her Own." Most of these are Paramount releases and it is assumed that the same group will also be shown exclusively in towns where Publix effects such deals.

At Houston, Will Horwitz, independent exhibitor leader, launched a campaign against exclusives and inserted advertisements on film pages of local newspapers condemning companies committed to the policy.

Exclusive runs are continuing at Wilmington, where independent exhibitors several weeks ago threatened organized opposition. The city was one of the first to use Metro's exclusive selling. At Harrisburg, Pa., Loew's theatre is playing exclusives against four other neighborhood theatres and six towns in the immediate vicinity.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer abandoned its exclusive run policy at Oakland, Cal.

The first theatre in Wisconsin to go exclusive is the Capitol at Manitowoc, which signed with Metro and started off with "Grand Hotel."

OPERA—A NEGLECTED FILM SOURCE

O'Sullivan Calls "Carmen" and "Tales of Hoffmann" Unusual Possibilities in Utilizing Music

by JOSEPH O'SULLIVAN

In discussing the general role that the music of grand opera might play, intelligently handled, in the modern motion picture, Mr. Joseph O'Sullivan deals with a subject close to his rich experience with the singing stage as well as the screen. First a student of music with Karl Schmidt at Louisville, Ky., Mr. O'Sullivan followed a period as dramatic and music critic by stage directing Boston and Chicago English Opera companies. Next he had charge of musical settings for Mutual Film Corporation and composed several numbers with motion picture scoring in mind, numbers that can be found in every music library. Later he was placed in charge of presentations on the Granat Circuit in Mexico. Eight years ago he joined the W. W. Hodkinson organization and subsequently was with Pathe.

While the production brains of the industry seem to have assorted ideas as to the function, if any, of music on the screen, they are evidently in agreement on one point, namely, that no definite formula has yet been evolved that fuses pictorial action, talk and music without sacrificing the entity of one or other of the different media.

This is somewhat annoying, although the problem is as old as the drama itself. It is not necessary to go farther back than the adolescence of what we call "opera," and to trace that hybrid art up to the period when a talented Teuton named Richard Wagner threw his beret into the musical ring, discarded the term "opera" for the more definitive "music drama" as applied to his work, to find the protagonists of the lyric stage waging a battle of words and music, the relative importance of each and what should be done about it.

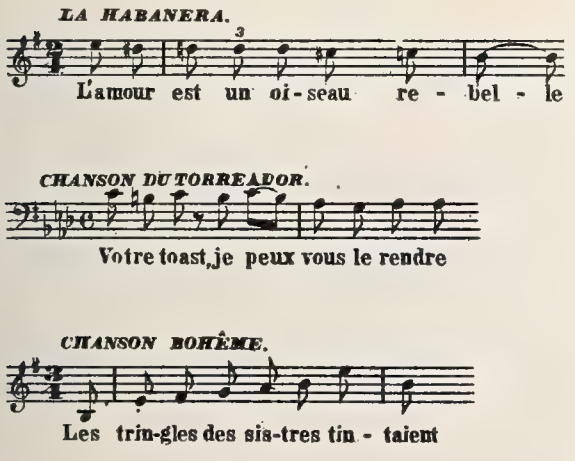
In the long run music seems to have received the decision of hoi polloi as well as the judges. Operas that are hoary with age and even archaic in their harmonic structure, still survive in the repertoire of the world's foremost opera companies. Assuredly this is not because of their inherent dramatic texture; it is due, rather, to the sublimating power of the music. Even such an antique piece as "Il Trovatore" retains its appeal to the opera-minded, most of whom have not the faintest idea what the story is all about. But the melodious strains of "Trovatore" go lilting on, while the "Anvil Chorus" means something more than the "Bronx cheer" even to the musical philistine.

A consideration of these facts should lead our picture makers to the conclusion that there is something essentially vital in music, even when hung on to a libretto that is out of time, out of joint and otherwise null and void. It would also seem to imply that when and if music and words and action are intelligently welded on the audible screen, the life of such films will not be so ephemeral as the screen masterpieces thus far produced, although it would be rash to predict that they would approximate such perennials as "Faust," "Carmen," "Rigoletto," "Don Giovanni," "Die Meistersinger," "Norma," "Freischutz" and other war horses that for a half century and more have made opera almost selfsustaining in spots, while yielding munificent salaries to gifted songbirds.

As there is an impression to the effect that motion pictures are produced primarily for money-making purposes, it is obvious that opera as opera will never come to the screen; nor does any intelligent observer expect such a phenomenon. Grand opera, adequately produced, has never been profitable on the stage; and there is no reason to assume that even with the distribution and mass reduplication facilities, film opera as opera would pay. The American public does not want it.

However, those who are in the film business for the purpose of capitalizing on what the public will pay to see and hear, should not ignore certain facts and fundamental truths—that there is something in inspired music that exalts even the banal; and that "age cannot wither nor custom (repetition) stale its infinite variety."

Some years ago, before sound inundated the silent screen, an astute producer used Bizet's "Carmen" as the basis of a screen vehicle for Geraldine Farrar. The picture showed satisfactory box office returns and a corresponding profit to the producer.



Is it futile to suggest that with the picturesque settings, a story that is rich in color, romance and the play of elemental emotions, and music that for three-quarters of a century has delighted audiences of all types, "Carmen" affords material for a screen music-drama of real distinction and power?

The Habanera, Toreador Song, Flower Song and other arias have an everlasting appeal and are an integral part of the drama, as they segue naturally into the romantic situations. Such scenes as the Inn of Lillas Pastia with its exhilarating ballet; the smugglers' camp where Carmen reads her impending fate in the cards; the great octet; the music in the last act which brings on the soldiers and toreadors; the bull ring with its characteristic music and impressive spectacle; all these scenes with the music are as closely welded in spirit and action as if they were written for the sound screen. The opportunities for descriptive and atmospheric music are unlimited, the score containing a plenitude of colorful music that will reinforce the dialogue and pictorial matter.

There is another opus of the lyric stage that has been blooming perennially for something over 60 years, and still shows no sign of abating. This is the "Tales of Hoffmann," the work of a certain Jacques Offenbach who flourished in Paris in the nineteenth century. The delectable "Barcarolle" has been sung, played—even crooned—without surcease for several generations. But there is much music in the score of the opera that fascinates through its melodic charm and is

Voluntary Advertising Campaigns Point Out to Public the Recreational Value of Motion Picture Entertainment Today

Leading daily newspapers of New York and Chicago have launched an institutional advertising campaign of their own to make going to motion picture theatres a habit again. Following the lead of the Chicago Evening American, where Fred McQuigg is head of the amusement department, the Herald and Examiner and Daily News in that city, and the American in New York have joined the movement, indicating that the effort in behalf of "one of the newspaper's best customers" will be ultimately extended to other publications in these and also other cities.

Harold Holt, in charge of amusement advertising on the New York American, opened his campaign on September 29, with an advertisement entitled "The Eighth Art." A second in the series, "Let's Go to the Movies," followed on October 5.

"We have not undertaken this campaign either to curry favor with motion picture interests or to increase advertising," said Mr. Holt. "Mr. Hearst, who has always had a special interest in motion pictures, believes that they constitute one of the greatest forces of the century—both for entertainment and education. Our paper admires the courage shown by motion picture producers who have gone right on with their schedules and improved their product regardless of the fact that the forces of depression have heavily cut down picture Movies," followed this one in the American on October 5.

Mr. Holt went on to point out that the public is a creature of certain habits. "Right now," he said, "the depression has forced thousands of people to practically reorganize their habits of living. If they were accustomed to seeing a movie three times a week, the chances are that these same people are going only once a week now. Others who used to go to the pictures once a week are going once every two weeks. What are they doing for amusement? Well, I suppose, if they have a radio they stay home and listen to that. Or they go to the public library and get out two or three good books. Even the rental libraries would be fairly cheap. Most people take about a week to read a book—and at that it would be five or six evenings of entertainment for a quarter against two or three hours in a picture house for the same money or more.

Habit Seat of Problem

"The most important problem before the motion picture industry today is concerned with that question of the change in the public's habits. A desire to go to the movies must be re-created in men and women that will be stronger than the forces that are now holding them away.

"The campaign that the New York American has begun is designed to help the industry do that. And it is also by way of being a salute to the courage and efficiency shown by motion picture producers which has been in decided contrast to the moral collapse evidenced in so many other industries."

Mr. Holt, who writes the ads himself, has found that the campaign has aroused considerable interest in the industry. He has received quite a few letters of commendation, some of which contained suggestions for future copy. While there is no time limit set for the campaign, it is likely that it will continue for some little while. Other papers should follow suit, in Mr. Holt's opinion.

Because the motion picture industry has no definite advertising appropriation like other industries, the amount of money spent for newspaper advertising varies from week to week. However, a number of interesting generalizations can be made, such as that by S. Charles Einfeld, director of Warner advertising and publicity. "About 78 per cent of the theatrical advertising budgets is spent for newspaper advertising," said Mr. Einfeld. "From that standpoint the industry spends about $1,000,000 weekly, of which $780,000 goes into newspaper advertising."

Media Records is authority for the statement that in the nine leading newspapers of New York City approximately 4¾ per cent of the total advertising space taken in the first nine months of 1932 was devoted to amusement advertising, or 3,372,200 lines against a total of 70,954,593 lines. Eliminating the relatively small amount of legitimate theatre advertising, it is fair to assume that about four per cent of the total is taken up by motion picture advertising. The same percentage should apply relatively to the entire country.

Approximately 82 per cent of the total advertising budgets of the leading circuits is allotted to newspapers. A similar proportion is shown by the independent circuits.

In commenting on the assistance which newspapers can give to the industry, Mr. Einfeld discussed the institutional campaign started by the Chicago American several months ago. As in the case of the New York newspaper, this earlier campaign was started, according to Mr. Einfeld, in a sincere effort to help the industry by stressing to the public the fact that theatres are clean and healthful and that pictures have improved. "Theatre advertising gets circulation for newspapers," said Mr. Einfeld. "As a matter of fact, many people buy newspapers just to see what is playing at the local movie houses. And what is even more important, attendance at motion picture theatres has a marked effect on general merchandising. It creates a demand for many different kinds of commodities from gasoline to ice cream soda."

A series of specially prepared photographs, six of which were reproduced in last week's issue of the MOTION PICTURE HERALD, has been designed by Mr. Einfeld to show that when "Mrs. Smith" goes to the movies, a demand is automatically created for a number of other commodities and services with resultant sales.

The First Advertisement

"Movies lead the way," said the first full page advertisement in the Chicago American's campaign. "Things are better! Word has spread from lip to lip that Chicago is better. And Chicago can get better faster and go farther than any place in the United States.

"Out in the forefront of better things are the pictures already here marking the start of the 1932-33 movie season. For six months the great film companies have been working together to make these better pictures. They lead the way to new prosperity. All of Chicago's motion picture theatres are celebrating the start of the new year.

"You can keep track of the celluloid arrivals from Hollywood most easily in the Go to the Movie Guide in the Chicago Evening American. This Guide, which for years has been the most complete listing of movies in the city dailies, is printed every day of the week on the same pages with news, reviews and pictures about movies."

Other full-page ads followed a few days apart, one with the theme, "The talkies' coming of age," and another headed "1932-33 better days for better plays."

Referring to these examples, Mr. Einfeld said, "What has been successfully accomplished in Chicago, can and should be accomplished in other communities. The campaign there has shown good results, not only for the motion picture business but in other lines."

Few Ads Institutional

From figures quoted it is evident that the great majority of newspaper advertising is specific and not institutional, although Paramount-Publix and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer undertake the latter type of newspaper advertising annually. In the case of general advertising by distributors, about 90 per cent of the budget goes into trade papers. Up to the present time very little outdoor advertising has been used.

If the practical gesture of business friendship that took place last week up in Springfield, Mass., is any indication, it would appear that co-operation between newspapers and the motion picture industry is just beginning. Local newspapers there returned a percentage of the net profit on advertising revenues for the first six months of 1932.

Another sidelight on the advertising question comes from Milton H. Field, Publix division manager, who advocated early this week that advertising budgets be increased for "specials" which warrant extra ballyhoo. In selecting pictures to come under this classification, managers are to consult with division heads for approval.

OVER THE STUDIO GOAL

Lubitsch Does It Again; KBS Turns Out Third Production Above Much of Hollywood's

by LEO MEEHAN
Hollywood Staff Correspondent

That clever master of light comedy has done his stuff again. Lubitsch, of course. This time Paramount calls it "Trouble in Paradise," but between you and me there isn't much trouble; mostly it is thoroughly delightful nonsense, with Miriam Hopkins, Herbert Marshall, Kay Francis, Charlie Ruggles, Edward Everett Horton, Aubrey Smith and Robert Greig staging the laughs and the chuckles for the genial Doctor Lubitsch. We don't know what the police and the censors are going to think about Hopkins and Marshall running away with a couple of hundred thousand francs worth of jewelry and a hundred thousand in that one-sheet French money for a fadeout. But if they take it as it is done, as comedy, it will be all right.

Lubitsch has outpointed all the boys who have tried whimsical incident, merrily turned quips, episodic, unorthodox story handling. Surprise piles upon surprise, laugh upon chuckle. It is all about a couple of international crooks, Miss Hopkins and Mr. Marshall, and their adventures in robbing a lovely Parisian perfume heiress, Kay Francis. Just when you think it is going to get serious, Herr Lubitsch pokes you in the ribs, kids you.

A Screen Personality

It is more than likely that this picture will complete the establishment of Herbert Marshall as a definite and generally popular screen personality. His work to date has all been distinguished, but this is his best and biggest role—and he boots it right between the goal posts lustily. He's going to be marquee material from this one on. As for the Hopkins lady, if you liked her in "The Smiling Lieutenant," you'll cheer her in this role. Kay Francis hits her peak, both in lusciousness and histrionics. While they play minor roles, Horton, Ruggles and Aubrey Smith contribute merrily to the proceedings.

Sophisticated? Yes, but certainly not too sophisticated—no more so than a lipstick. And gorgeously mounted. It is Class AA entertainment.

Coincidentally, the other outstanding picture of the week also features a "heavy"—and also is not to be taken seriously, even though it is something of an indictment of crooked physicians. "False Faces" is notable for two or three reasons, the first two being the performance and direction of Lowell Sherman; and the last being that it is undoubtedly one of the most clever and pretentious comedies made this season by an independent unit. It was produced by KBS (which is Kelly-Bischoff-Saal) for World Wide. Sherman is something of a rake, as he was in "What Price Hollywood," but this time he poses as a grafting and profligate physician who poses as a specialist in plastic surgery and also has a decided weakness for comely nurses, secretaries, patients. In a melodramatic climax, while on trial for malpractice, he is shot and killed in court by one of his victims, after he has succeeded in obtaiing an acquittal through his monumental nerve and blandishments. The picture is elaborately mounted, the direction is first class, and there is amusing novelty to the story which holds the interest. Recently I mentioned a tip, brought in by one of my scouts, that this was a clever picture. Seeing it, I know it lives up to the tip, and how!

Which reminds us, by the way, that this KBS group is doing very well for itself, with such attractions as "The Last Mile," "Strangers of the Evening," and this one, all of which rank well up with any production this year; better than much of it. World Wide, through which they are released, is also fortunate in having some other excellent attractions, such as William Sistrom's "The Crooked Circle," and Bennie Ziedman's thriller, just previewed, called "Trailing the Killer." This last one features a remarkable wolf dog, Caesar, recently brought over from Australia. The dog stages a bang-up fight with a rattlesnake. He also encounters a mountain lion. With very little dialogue, a human story, the picture is packed with thrills, drama and good comedy. World Wide is entitled to a large bow this week.

"Golden West" Elaborate

By far the most elaborate Western starring George O'Brien in some time is "The Golden West," from Fox. Even though it looks suspiciously as if someone had dug into the library and found some shots from "The Iron Horse" and "The Big Trail," still the shots give the production some tremendously big backgrounds, Indian fighting, building of the Union Pacific, and so on. George appears in a dual role, first as a young southern gentleman who gets into trouble and has to go West with a wagon train. Later he appears as a white Indian chief, the son of the first character. The earlier character and his wife, pioneers, were massacred by Indians, the baby kidnapped by the redskins. It is thus he grows up a tribal leader in the second episode. Fast riding, millions of rounds of ammunition, war dances, Indian fights—plenty of action.

Going a little further about Hollywood's present "gold standard," we saw Tom Mix's latest yarn, entitled "Hidden Gold." Tom does his stuff, and so does Tony, to run down a crowd of bank bandits. He even goes into prison to win their confidence. There is a pip of a forest fire sequence, and Tom does a prize fighting episode to make for diversity. Able support is given by our old friend Raymond Hatton, and Eddie Gribbon. Judith Barrie makes an attractive leading woman.

RKO-Radio presents a delightful show featuring Mitzi Green in the comic strip role of "Little Orphan Annie." She is supported by a youngster named Buster Phelps, who certainly is a prodigy, and by the ever-amusing veteran, May Robson. There are many clever gags and the production is full of mirth. Mitzi does some of her priceless imitations, including one of three of the Marx brothers. Annie should make good fun for the adults and the children as well.

Special interest attaches to MGM's production, "Faithless," because it presents Tallulah Bankhead, with Robert Montgomery, under the management of another major studio. Her Paramount appearances have not been any too auspicious, so when MGM borrowed her to play opposite Montgomery, the Hollywood crowd naturally wondered what would happen. The consensus seems to be that she does the best job she has done yet, shows a little more fire and vivacity. But the story itself is pretty sordid, one of those things where she has to go out on the street and sell herself to pay the doctor bills of the man she loves. The performances by Bankhead and Montgomery are the strongest items, and because of the sacrificial character of her role, la Bankhead may win the sympathy of many who have not cared particularly for her past performances. It will be interesting to see the public reaction, because it is pretty generally understood that Paramount has little or no intention at this time of taking up her option next month.

Opera Is Neglected Film Source, Says O'Sullivan

wonderfully effective when heard in conjunction with the situations of the fantistic drama.

The stein song for chorus in the prologue is a rousing number. The scene where the mechanical doll talks, dances and sings is one of the most unusual and entertaining scenes ever produced, and never fails to register with an audience. The last act, in which that Mephisto-Svengali-like character, Dr. Miracle, hypnotizes Antonia and compels her to sing a passionate swan song, has possibilities for screen treatment of the most advanced and effective character.

There is phantasy, color, romance, and the basis of a compelling story in "Tales of Hoffmann," with music ready-made for the motivation of every bit of action awaiting the molding into a superlative screen production at the master-hand of one who knows his musical-pictureplay materials.

Given a screen treatment in which the music that falls naturally into the unfolding of the story is utilized, and reinforcing the dialogue with underscoring of music of the recitative and of the descriptive, both "Carmen" and "Tales of Hoffmann" are unusual possibilities for the sound screen.

Incidentally, among the list of standard dramatic works that seem to be peculiarly adaptable to music and sound treatment are many plays that hitherto seem to have escaped the discriminating eye of the producer. These plays are certainly not outmoded, as they are still doing business in the repertoire of stock companies that have survived in the land. It might be profitable to delve into the archives and bring forth some of these works—the brain-children of writers who knew the stuff of which drama is made and mastered the knack of sustaining interest while building to a climax. These plays paid the salaries of knights of the buskin of other days; perhaps they would pay dividends now if adapted with discretion to the audible screen.

The Traveling Studio-Theatre of MGM Leaving the Shops for Five-Year Tour

MGM TOURING STUDIO AND THEATRE TO VISIT 33 COUNTRIES IN 5 YEARS

Goodwill and Educational Factors to Be Emphasized; Talkers Made and Shown; Contests and Screen Tests Planned

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer within two weeks will launch a combination traveling motion picture studio and junior theatre on a five-year educational and goodwill tour of 33 countries of the world, during which it is expected to contact the public in 30,000 cities and towns. Constructed secretly during the past year and a half at a cost given as approximately $150,000, the unit consists of a specially built locomotive and cabin coupled up with a trailer coach which will be accompanied by individual "pilot" and camera cars and an advance truck. All are painted in bright red and gold with appropriate descriptions of the expedition.

The traveling studio combines standard facilities for both the taking and projecting of talking pictures, and while full use will be made of the possibilities for exploiting Metro productions and theatre accounts, the company believes it simultaneously will serve as a medium for public enlightment as to certain of the socalled "mysteries" and mechanics of sound recording and projection, besides fostering visual education and stimulating public interest in the theatre and the industry. Short subjects of an educational nature will be shown and a direct appeal for the public's goodwill is contained in a special sound reel featuring Will H. Hays.

According to Metro's plans, every city of importance in the United States will be visited before the studio starts for Europe, Australia, South America and the Far East. Contests in direct tieups with theatres and newspapers will be arranged in advance in a search for new talent for the company. When the studio arrives in each city, voice and screen tests will be taken. In addition to the program of short product, talent tests and a public inspection of the studio's equipment, the schedule to be carried out in each city will embrace a civic reception and tie-ups.

A full camera and projection crew will be carried, besides five chauffeurs, an advance man and labor staff. Eddie Carrier will be in charge, working under direct home office supervision of Howard Dietz, Metro's advertising and publicity director, and William R. Ferguson, in charge of exploitation.

The studio, which is hauled by a large gas locomotive, measures over 55 feet in length. Its forward part is given over to a small sound studio and the rear portion of the projection booth. Recording and reproducing equipment is standard Western Electric apparatus. Rear projection which permits of daylight showings is used; the screen is located directly on the end of the coach.

The studio is also equipped with a powerful public address system, large searchlights and arc lamps and neon signs which run the entire length of the car. It has its own power system, regular 110 d. c., and a complete recording outfit with sound camera. The company expects to exceed the audience possibilities of its "trackless train," which, during 1925 to 1929, is estimated to have been viewed by 125,000,000 in a similar round-the-world trip covering 750,000 miles.

Metro's traveling studio is the third international traveling exploitation project to be used by that company. The "trackless train," which was sent out on a four-year world tour, was followed by a round-the-globe expedition with Leo, the Metro trademark lion.

New York SMPE Meets October 19

The first meeting of the season of the New York branch of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers will be held on October 19 at the Electrical Institute of the New York Electrical Association. David Mendoza, musical director, and Joseph Henabery, director, of the Warner-Vitaphone Studios, will speak on "The Practical Problems in Recording and Reproducing Music for Audible Pictures," and "The Engineering of a Picture," respectively.

Nominees for election are: P. H. Evans, for president; L. W. Davee and D. E. Hyndman for secretary-treasurer; J. A. Norling and John Spencer for manager.

Roxy Reduces Admissions; Special Price for Children

The Roxy theatre in New York has inaugurated a new price scale, effective Friday, October 14. Under the admission revision, the orchestra is 55 cents and the balcony 40 cents during weekday matinee performances, with the orchestra 75 cents and the balcony 55 cents on weekday evenings. The prices include tax. A slight increase will be charged Saturdays, Sundays and holidays.

An innovation among large Broadway motion picture theatres is included in the revision, providing for a special price of 25 cents for children at all performances. According to the announcement of Frank Cambria, managing director of the Roxy, there will be no alteration in the performances as a result of the price decrease.

High Cost of Censorship Rankles; Then There Are Special Duties on Imports, Sales and Excise-Tax Added to Burden

The federal government at Ottawa was expected on Thursday to announce a new film rental tax on features from all countries other than Great Britain as a concession to Great Britain made in the recent trade pact signed at the Imperial Economic Conference. This move is interpreted in Canada as an encouragement to British films in place of the suggested quota. It is understood that the tax to be collected from Canadian distributors will be based on the rental value of prints.

The tax hits principally at United States product, but French and German pictures also are included, it is understood.

More than 200 tariff revisions were to be announced in addition to the film rental tax. This is the first direct tax on films by Canadian Parliament apart from tariff excise and sales levies.

by W. M. GLADISH

Toronto Correspondent

It is significant and appropriate that, while the Dominion Parliament is deliberating with matters arising from the recent Imperial Economic Conference, trade figures should be released which show that the theatres in Canada contribute an annual average of $5,700 each in taxes to the federal and provincial governments, either directly or indirectly. It has been found that a total of $5,130,000 is charged up to the film business in Canada during a period of 12 months for the privilege of functioning and the argument has been advanced that exhibitors have the doubtful honor of being the most heavily taxed group in Canada.

Say Exhibitors Foot Bill

According to military practice, the best defense is in attack and this talk about heavy taxation probably makes interesting reading for Canadian legislators at a time when there is consideration of quotas and special levies. That the exhibitors of the Dominion carry a heavy load is evident in the following summary of taxation for the year, based on trade figures:

Amusement taxes, $2,000,000; censorship in seven provinces, $200,000; real estate, corporation and business taxes, $2,000,000; seat taxes, $230,000; customs duties on films, $400,000; customs duties on advertising material, $80,000; customs duties on theatre equipment, $50,000; theatre license fees, $20,000, and other taxes paid by film exchanges, $150,000; total—$5,130,000.

Although some of these items are paid by film distributors, they are included in the list for exhibitors because the exhibitors foot the bill in the long run, it is claimed.

The high cost of censorship is a large grievance in the Canadian industry. The cost of censoring a seven-reel picture in all provinces runs to $178, as compared with around $50 in Great Britain and $17 in Australia where there is one board in place of a multiplicity of censor bureaus as in Canada. A point that is annoying is that the cost of censoring more than pays for the actual work, the Ontario Government having a clear profit of $90,000 with its censor board last year.

Another sting is found in the regulations covering the collection of special taxes on imports. In addition to the duty of 3 cents a foot on films from the United States and 1½ cents from Great Britain, there are such levies as a sales tax of 6 per cent and an excise tax of 3 per cent. The claim is made that the Dominion Government gets more than double its rightful share in these percentage assessments because of the arbitrary valuation of 8 cents a foot on film imports for tax purposes. The actual cost of the printed film is less than 3 cents a foot, it is claimed, as against the set value of 8 cents. A vexatious fact is that the Dominion collects something like 80 per cent in duties and taxes on advertising accessories imported with the films.

Canadian film distributors have been bringing in the negatives so that the required number of prints can be made in the Dominion but the Government collects 4 cents a foot in duty on these negatives and this is not refunded when the negative is returned to its original country after the positives are made.

A Word of Anathema

With regard to the amusement taxes chargeable to patrons, the exhibitors say that the theatres pay these levies in full—and more. The argument is advanced that the ticket tax reduces attendance at least to the extent of the tax percentage. In round figures, this would be 11 per cent.

The statement is made that the physical number of theatres in Canada has been reduced by 25 per cent because of special regulations requiring costly alterations and additional equipment. It is claimed, also, that Government requirements in this respect have put the theatre owners to expenditures averaging 10 per cent more than otherwise necessary.

In view of all this, every exhibitor in Canada fairly bristles whenever he hears the word "tax."

200 GOLFERS MEET IN QUIGLEY TOURNEY

With 40 valuable trophies and an entry list of 200 of the best golfers, the sixth annual West Coast golf tournament sponsored by the Quigley Publications will be run off Saturday and Sunday at the Rancho Country Club, Hollywood. Jack Warner is general chairman of the tournament committee, with Eddie Mannix of MGM, newly elected president of the Rancho Club, on hand to assist.

Wynn, Hopkins Pool Radio Ideas To Help Programs

Ed Wynn and Arthur Hopkins have decided to pool their ideas and plans for improvement of radio programs. The result is the newly organized Amalgamated Broadcasting System, now planning to equip seven specially constructed studios in which the "creative radio program organization" will stage its efforts to work out a new radio technique.

It is expected that the present low state of the Broadway theatre will still further attract talent from the stage to the broadcast studio. Irving Berlin already has added his name to the new ABS and Mr. Hopkins hopes to have a number of "world famous artists" affiliated.

Word has gone out that ABS does not wish to be influenced or interrupted by "copy men, idea men, studio assistants and business men who are commercially minded and not capable of directing or producing what the present organization is planning to produce."

Or, to be specific, the ABS says:

"It is our sincere belief that the time has arrived for a material improvement of radio entertainment. . . . Continued criticism by the listening-in public and the daily press has encouraged these leaders . . . to combine and apply their world-famous talent. . . ."

Amalgamated Broadcasting System has announced that it has closed with two advertising agencies which will bill more than $1,000,000 in radio accounts in the coming year.

Luescher Succeeds Waxman As Roxy Publicity Director

Mark A. Luescher has succeeded A. P. Waxman as director of public and press relations for the Roxy theatre in New York. The appointment is effective on Friday, according to Frank Cambria, managing director of the house.

Mr. Luescher was at one time managing director of the New York Hippodrome under Charles B. Dillingham. Later he was national director of public and press relations for the Orpheum Circuit and for the RKO Theatre circuit. Most recently he has handled the advance publicity for Radio City.

Simmons Is Advertising Director for Monogram

Mike Simmons has joined Monogram Pictures as director of advertising and publicity. He will also devote time to the analysis and preparation of screen stories. With Educational for the past three years, Mr. Simmons is a former president of the AMPA and is now a member of the board of directors of that organization.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

HARRY ARTHUR'S traveling auditor dropped in on the manager of the circuit's Poli at Springfield, Mass., the other day to go over the books. Everything went well until the auditor happened across a batch of petty cash vouchers for taxicabs to the bank. All were for 35 cents, except one, which read: "Taxi to bank, 40 cents." And then the battle started.

"Why 40 cents!" thundered the auditor, happy at the thought of having unearthed such an important discrepancy. He then followed with a healthy tirade against the inconsistency of managers with regards petty cash. The argument lasted 15 minutes or more and finally the manager was ordered to deduct the five cents from the taxi slip and charge it up to something else—anything but taxis. Which the manager did, after explaining that on that particular day it was raining quite hard and instead of walking to the corner to hail a cab, as was customary, he waited in front of the theatre. Also, he was carrying $2,300 in cash.

Elias Sugarman, a columnist of The Billboard, asks if RKO is trying to help out NBC by keeping vaudeville actors at home to add to NBC's radio audience. It seems, according to Mr. Sugarman, that the new weekly budgets for vaudeville acts have been trimmed to a new low. The State-Lake, in Chicago, it is said, may spend only $2,500 on seven acts, while the Trenton house is down to $900 for five. Others have been ordered to fall within this range.

A Columbus, Ohio, circuit manager recently was looking over an assortment of Christmas greeting cards being displayed by a salesman.

"Here," said the salesman, "is a beautiful card: 'The Three Wise Men Coming Out of the East;' that certainly typifies Christmas."

"Nothing doing," exclaimed the manager. "One wise man coming out of the East is enough for me, and when he comes it generally typifies the Fourth of July, judging by the fireworks."

Phil Strong, whose best-selling novel, "State Fair," is being filmed by Fox, returned to Kansas City the other day from three months in Hollywood. He told reporters at the train that he could tell "plenty about Hollywood," but asked the scribes not to quote him yet because he has two more novels on the griddle.

"Expert hints on how to break into the movies" is the title of a little novelty booklet which Universal has prepared for picturegoers as exploitation for "Once in a Lifetime." How to be a Star, How to be a Director, Supervisor, Producer, etc., are among the subjects which are prominently noted on the front cover. Also, "What a Mother Should Know."

The Kansas City Star reports that a Stockholm correspondent spent an hour with a chatty young woman under the impression that he was interviewing Greta Garbo. He returned to his office and found he had a pretty good story, which was his first intimation that it wasn't Garbo.

Edward G. Robinson, Warner player who travels cross-country considerably, was asked by one of our reporters what he thought of the exclusive-run policy, one of the industry's larger problems at the moment. Mr. Robinson expressed some surprise at the existence of the idea. "Who's doing it?" he asked.

Dr. Arnold Fanck's vivid and expensive radio description from Greenland of his activities while shooting "SOS Iceberg" for Universal would shame a studio press agent of the most imaginative type. Dr. Fanck, who is accompanied by Ernest Udet, radioed Carl Laemmle, Jr., in Hollywood that "the shots of our men fighting polar bears hand to paw with ice cakes as their only weapons, the breaking of the glaciers which marooned even our own company for 10 days, and the heroic daring of Udet's landing (in an airplane) on an iceberg are so thrilling that even you, Mr. Laemmle, will believe we have tricked the photography."

Universal immediately released a story of the incident to the press, with the notation that "SOS Iceland" has been recorded in four languages, English, German, French and Spanish, and will receive simultaneous world-wide distribution next month.

A World War citation for honorable service with the American Expeditionary Forces in France 14 years ago will be awarded shortly to A. A. On his return from France, Gene Tunney will officiate at the presentation of the Order of the Purple Heart to "Wally," at a ceremony at the Marine Barracks in the Navy Yard in Brooklyn. Mr. Tunney and Mr. Wallgren, both "buck" privates with the marines, were buddies during the conflict. "Wally" received the Meritorious Service Citation from General John J. Pershing.

Murray W. Garsson's secret service duties for the Federal government have currently brought him in touch again with the motion picture industry. Mr. Garsson was well known in the business some years ago. He engaged in certain film activities pertaining to the Harding presidential campaign and later he was rewarded with a post at Washington, which has developed into his present important position as assistant to Secretary of Labor Doak, in the immigration service of the department. Recently, Mr. Garsson has been quietly looking up racketeers and motion picture players who have overstayed their time limit in Hollywood. "Hunt Aliens in Hollywood" is the way the New York Times reports Mr. Garsson's activities there.

By the light of a kerosene lamp, Manager Rodetsky of the Grand theatre in Brooklyn signed his contract for a Buck Jones Rangers Club tieup. Nothing but the four walls of the Grand are standing, and Mr. Rodetsky, besieged by architects, carpenters, bricklayers and plumbers, the noise of riveters and film salesmen, finally broke down under fire of a Columbia salesman. There are no seats, there are no doors, there is no screen and there are no floors, yet he took pen in hand, and using a packing box for a desk, signed the contract which Marvin Springer, the salesman, proferred as a means of saving the independent—or something.

That interesting pictorial showing on our treasured Page Eight last week, depicting how the motion pictures help all the businesses in town, came, we hereby record, from George Bilson, western advertising manager for Warners, through S. Charles Einfeld of New York. The sequence was, incidentally, much to the point in line with some of our earnest editorial preachments that the advertising and other messages of this pictorial industry can well be made pictorial, by the special use of the camera for something besides pictures for the screen.

WHEN Bh Rogers, brother of Buddy Rogers, was signed as a player by Paramount in 1930, a report said that the contract was for five years and the consideration $100,000. Now, by the young man's own admission, it is revealed the deal involved a one-year contract at $150 a week.

Bh was in his first year at the University of Kansas and 20 years old when Paramount called him to Hollywood. "That was pretty funny," he now reminisces. "I was drawing the money and thinking any minute I'd be sent for to appear in a picture. But not once did I go on the lot. When Buddy heard I'd signed, he raised holy Cain. Said I was a fool, that I should get an education."

In this week's issue we discover the Fox advertising department, which has been stepping out a bit of late—see Page Six of recent issues—getting quite modern in aluminum and black, with symbolism, etc., of the same commanding attention. BRITISH FILMS WINNING FOOTHOLD IN AUSTRALIA; 91 IMPORTED IN YEAR

by CLIFF HOLT
Sydney Correspondent

The jibe of almost every theatre goer just three or four years ago, and the bane of every exhibitor who had to run them because of quota requirements, British pictures are gaining a hold on Australian audiences that American producers may find hard to loosen. Last year Australia imported 368 feature pictures from the United States and 91 from the United Kingdom. Had more British pictures been available it is certain that the margin would not have so greatly favored America; and as the studios of England are now turning out increased and improved product, there can be no doubt that the statistics compiled at the end of the succeeding twelve months will show very definitely and plainly how Britain is digging into the market here.

With this favoring of British productions by the public, it is noticeable that politicians, who formerly found it politic to tolerate foreign product, are now giving American films a rather rough passage—not altogether by legislation, but by wholly unnecessary expressions of opinion detrimental to their successful presentation, and not at all in accordance with the public's reaction to them. It is noticeable, also, that almost invariably accompanying these attacks on American output is a quiet boost for the English—possibly justified in certain instances, but, in the interests of the maintenance of harmony between the industries of the two countries, rather out of place.

Victorian Premier Critical

No one concerned over the welfare of the motion picture resents criticism of a constructive nature, but where, for example, is one iota of value in this morsel from the Victorian premier, Sir Stanley Argyle, which was featured by the leading newspapers of the country: "I must confess that my intelligence has frequently been insulted by some films. Most British films I have seen are very good; those to which I take exception are American productions. Some are very vulgar, displaying a lack of intelligence which is extraordinary. I do not refer to all pictures, some of which are excellent, but so many are frightful." And he often wondered why, when Americans had such a wealth of literature in fiction and history available to them, they tolerated the concoction of some of the rubbish that was screened.

Criticism of that nature is not only useless, but also very childish. If it were true that the screen ignores the best in literature, then that part of his comment might be termed constructive because producers could take his tip and get the best. But they already do get the best that money can buy, and they can't do more than that. One frequently is forced to wonder how political leaders can find the time for this sort of thing. One also wonders why the press so frequently gives it prominence. It is all a re-hash of identical outbursts that have besmirched the newspaper columns so repeatedly and over such a long period that it has become monotonous and yet acutely irritating. There is another discomforting aspect of this seemingly studied campaign against American motion pictures: it appears to be inspired not so much by a genuine feeling that they are inferior as by the fact that they are American. On that score I do not for a moment suggest that Australia has anything but the most friendly international regard for America; but I do suggest that Australia is becoming a little piqued because America for so many years has successfully exploited an industry that Australia herself has never been able to conquer. To my way of thinking it is a poor policy to condemn foreign goods because they are foreign, especially when the home factories cannot manufacture anything better; and though my statement that Australia is doing precisely that in respect to American pictures would never be granted this side of the Pacific, I nevertheless stand by it in the conviction that it is in every respect true. Meanwhile it shall be interesting to see how America accepts the first Australian talking pictures placed on the American market. Will they be judged on merit? Or will they be slandered by politician and press because they come from some far-away colony?

Censorship Ruling Protested

Every theatre owner operating a house in Victoria has been actually frightened into protest against the Conditional Clause, which the trade press here aptly terms "The Crippling Clause." The conditional clause is a censorship regulation peculiar to Victoria. It prohibits the attendance of children between the ages of 6 and 16 at the presentation of any picture unless it has been classified by the authorities as fit for general exhibition. If it is graded "adults only"—and the majority of them are—the exhibitor must lose the patronage of every child between the stipulated ages. In the past exhibitors have been inclined to wink at the ruling—mostly through force of circumstance—and have been getting away with it. Now the Government has decided to enforce the law, and so unexpected raids on theatres showing conditional pictures are becoming the regular thing. It is estimated that the enforcement has cost Victorian exhibitors 25 per cent of their patronage.

"The Crippling Clause" should be repealed, or else amended. It is not workable. Owing to the enormously high percentage of films graded "conditional," theatre owners cannot possibly arrange their programs in a way that "conditional" and "general exhibition" pictures don't clash. The result is that a parent bringing his child on these occasions must either leave at intervals with the youngster, or send him home alone. Usually, however, neither comes.

So serious has the position become that the Victorian Exhibitors Association has decided to embark on a state-wide campaign advocating that the conditional clause be wiped out. An organizer will visit all country theatre men and impress upon them the need for action. Petitions for the removal of the clause are to be prepared, and the signatures of patrons favoring its repeal are to be obtained. Finally, when the preliminary work has been carried out, and the association is well armed with anti-"Crippling Clause" propaganda, an exhibitor deputation will wait on the Victorian Chief Secretary.

Each spring, the Australian branch of Paramount conducts what it calls a Paramount Week, a period in the year when every endeavor is made to obtain representation of the company's product in the greatest possible number of theatres—in the key cities, and throughout the outlying districts. The week seems to become a greater success with each year, and true to formula, 1932 probably will set a new record.

In the cities alone during Paramount Week the company will release 23 features on the screens of 14 de luxe first-run houses—truly a booking achievement.

The 47 Club—Sydney publicity men's forum—which was created only this year, has done one good deed in particular for which the industry here thanks it heartily. It has established an Industry Benevolent Fund to assist any bona fide member of the business who at some time may be down on his luck. It is a fund that should have been started in the years of affluence, when the amusement business, forgetting that charity starts at home, freely spread the huge sums it raised by all sorts of social functions among outside institutions.

Tax Increase Threatened

Victoria, which seems to be the hotbed of all the States as far as theatre interests are concerned, again is threatened with increased theatre tax, according to report. This time it looks pretty serious, for it is said that a proposal is being considered by which theatres will be required to be registered at a rate based on seating capacity. On the surface of things, the scheme appears to be so illogical that nobody but a politician could have thought it out.

Surely officialdom must know that the successful theatre is not necessarily that which is the biggest, and that one theatre, exactly twice the size of another, does not necessarily earn twice the profits of that other. In Sydney, for instance, is a theatre of a capacity of 1,300 which never has failed to return a profit on a year's trading; while another, with a capacity a little in excess of 3,000, has a terrific job to keep out of the red. Yet the 3,000-seater's "registration"—a term that probably could be better replaced by "surcharge"—would be greater than that of the 1,300-seat house.

NOMINATIONS MADE FOR ACADEMY AWARDS

Members Make Primary Selections of Pictures and Personalities for Final Balloting; Officers Also Nominated

Members of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences in Hollywood have made their nominations for the annual awards of merit for the season of 1931-32. These nominations are made by members of each branch. The entire membership will now proceed to ballot on the selections—ballots to be opened and the winners ascertained the night of the annual banquet, set tentatively for November 12.

The nominations for achievements, as selected in the primary voting, are:

Best Performance by an Actress: Marie Dressler in "Emma"; Lynne Fontanne in "The Guardsman"; Helen Hayes in "The Sin of Madelon Claudet."

Best Performance by an Actor: Wallace Beery in "The Champ"; Alfred Lunt in "The Guardsman"; Fredric March in "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde."

Best Direction: Frank Borzage, "Bad Girl"; King Vidor, "The Champ"; Josef von Sternberg, "Shanghai Express."

Best Photography (Cinematographers' award): Ray June, "Arrowsmith"; Karl Struss, "Dr. Jeykll and Mr. Hyde"; Lee Garmes, "Shanghai Express.

Best Art Direction: Richard Day, "Arrowsmith"; Lazare Neerson, "A Nous la Liberte"; Gordon Wiles, "Transatlantic."

Best Original Motion Picture Story: "The Champ," by Frances Marion; "Lady and Gent," by Grover Jones and William Slavens McNutt; "Star Witness," by Lucien Hubbard; "What Price Hollywood," by Gene Fowler, Rowland Brown and Adela Rogers St. John.

Best Motion Picture Adaptation: "Arrow smith," by Sidney Howard; "Bad Girl," by Edwin Burke; "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," by Percy Smith and Samuel Hoffenstein.

Best Produced Picture (Best Production): "Arrowsmith" (Samuel Goldwyn, Inc.); "Bad Girl" (Fox); "The Champ" (MGM); "Five Star Final (First National Productions); "Grand Hotel" (MGM); "One Hour With You" (Paramount); "Smiling Lieutenant" (Paramount); "Shanghai Express" (Paramount).

Best Work in Sound Reproduction (four studios nominated): Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Paramount, RKO, Warner-First National.

Seven out of 21 nomination spots in production branches involving personalities were won by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, and six by Paramount. Fox and United Artists' personalities won three honors each and Warners, RKO and Harold Auten, one each.

Of the eight pictures nominated for award of Best Produced Pictures in 1931-32, Paramount has three, Metro two, and Fox, Warners and United Artists, one each.

Nominees for offices in the Academy for the coming year are announced, with the annual election October 15.

The following were nominated for the board of directors: Actors' Branch, Sam Hardy; Directors, John Cromwell; Producers, B. P. Schulberg; Technicians, J. Theodore Reed; Writers, Oliver H. P. Garrett. Members of the board serve three-year terms, expirations being on a rotating basis, so that one vacancy in the representations of each of the five branches is to be filled each year.

Nominated for the branch executive committees for one-year terms were: Actors—Edward G. Robinson, Chester Morris, Warner Baxter, Reginald Barlow and Hedda Hopper. Producers—L. B. Mayer, B. P. Schulberg, David Selznick, Winfield Sheehan and Jack Warner. Directors—C. B. de Mille, Alfred Green, Robert Leonard, Rouben Mamoulian and Fred Niblo. Technicians—Hans Drier, Nugent Slaughter, J. M. Nickolaus, John Arnold and I. James Wilkinson. Writers—Ralph Block, William Slavens McNutt, Ernst Vadja, Howard Green and Bartlett Cormack. Assistant directors—Scott Beal, Fred Fleck, Gordon Hollingshead, Jack Mintz and William Tummel.

The president of the Academy and other general officers will be elected by the board at its first meeting after October 15. The new officers will be formally installed at the annual awards banquet.

John Rogers, Grandfather of Press Agents, Is Dead at 92

John Russell Rogers, who termed himself the grandfather of all press agents, and who signed himself "Merrily Yours, John," was found dead in a New York hotel room last week. Though he was 92, he never admitted his correct age to any one except his intimates. He declared himself to be 82, but appeared hardly more than 60. Death was attributed to natural causes, despite an altercation with a taxicab and an elevated pillar a week before his death.

His late hours, hearty eating and drinking and unfailing appearance on Broadway often brought criticism from friends. His only answer was, "Every doctor who disagreed with my way of living is now dead." "Merrily Yours, John" began his exploiting career 60 years ago, and in the course of decades owned and rented theatres on every continent. He publicised many famed stage players of an earlier day, including Minnie Palmer, whom he married and from whom he later was separated.

"Six Hours To Live" is one of the finest pieces of entertainment this reviewer has seen in the past six months of looking at pictures. It is a swell production, marvelously directed and brilliantly cast and acted. Any and all who had anything to do with the making of this picture from the original story of Gordon Morris (Chester's brother) and Morton Bareaux, through Bradley King's adaptation, the supervision of Al Rockett, the direction of Dieterle, the camera work of John Seitz, the acting of the entire cast and the fine production given it by the technical staff at the studio, should take plenty of bows.

It is an unusual yarn, totally different from anything you would expect, as refreshing in its telling as an April shower and packed with a million dollars worth of suspense from the opening shot to the final fade-out.

Rarely have we seen a preview audience (always conscious they are looking at a preview) rivet such attention on what was transpiring on the screen. And did they voice their approval of a story that almost any production executive would have thrown out with but two pages of reading?

The story centers around the figure of Warner Baxter as a representative of a small foreign country, standing alone in defiance and holding up for ten days a great conference, attended by a representative of every other foreign government. Baxter believes if he votes approval for the act of this Congress that his small country will be wiped out and he stands the gaff, only later to pay the death penalty at the hands of an assassin.

But in between the main theme of the story, a sequence or two is injected around the act of a learned scientist bringing life back to the dead body of Baxter, but only for six hours. Crazy, you think, telling it as we do, but in the picture it turns out to be a smashing piece of enertainment, handled by master craftsmen and affording audiences, long weary of our present picture trend, something to go out and talk about after they have enjoyed the unreeling of his fantasic yarn.

Great credit should go to Wilhelm Dieterle. Watch this fellow. He has only started. His handling of the story and the cast was a revelation to this, so-called, critic. In other hands, it is hard to even think what would have happened to this picture. He directs with a foreign flair, but outdoes the best, whether here in Hollywood or in Europe, in the composition of his scenes, the movement of the cast and the lights and shadings and the lifts and tilts of his story.

John Seitz gets our next credit for as fine a phoographic feat as you have ever seen. Then give the production department a hand and turn to the excellent screen play of Bradley King.

Of the cast—Warner Baxter has never been better or as good. His Captain Onslow was the acme of fine acting. Miriam Jordan, a newcomer to pictures, is distinctive in appearance and enacts her part brilliantly. George Marion Sr., Halliwell Hobbes, John Boles and John Davidson work expertly. Beryl Mercer, Irene Ware, Dewey Robinson and Edwin Maxwell added greatly with their support.

You showmen looking for something new, something unusual, something ENTERTAINING, pay no attention to our story synopsis on "Six Hours To Live" (Fox should change the title) but look at the picture and we feel certain you will feel as we do.

Powers Denies a Split with B. I. P.

Commenting on the report that he has discontinued the distribution of British International Pictures in America, P. A. Powers, president of Powers Pictures, said Wednesday that, while certain differences exist between B. I. P. and himself, they are merely of the character which arise between practically all producers and distributors.

"The report that I have even temporarily ceased distributing B. I. P. product is wholly erroneous," Mr. Powers said. "We have our current season's product available and prints and accessories are going forward to our existing exchanges. Furthermore, J. W. MacFarland, vice-president, in charge of distribution, and Jerry Marks, western division manager, are both engaged in setting in the few remaining branches required to complete our exchange system.

"Assurances of full cooperation have been received from John Maxwell and Arthur Dent, of B. I. P., and arrangements are being completed for a series of conferences to be held here in New York in the near future, which will have for their objective, the continued improvement in our product, something in which B. I. P. is just as interested as myself."

"While it is true that several pictures have been received which we did not feel would be suitable for the American market, it is equally true, and importantly so, that we enjoy the privilege of selection on all product submitted and are free to reject such pictures as, in our opinion, would not be well received by American audiences, even though they might have been successful in England.

"I have every confidence that B. I. P. will be in full agreement with us as to the type of product we require to compete successfully in the American market, and can promise now an even better array of pictures during the coming months than that which we have been offering with excellent success since this company was formed seven months ago."

Steffes Suit Hearing In Minneapolis October 17

W. A. Steffes, president of Allied States, said on Thursday that the hearing for a temporary injunction in his suit, as a Minneapolis theatre owner, against distributors and the Film Boards of Trade will be heard in Minneapolis October 17. In addition to Abram F. Myers, chairman and general counsel of Allied, Mr. Steffes will be represented by Paul F. Good, a candidate for attorney general of Minnesota. Publix Northwest Theatres is also a defendant in the zoning, protection and antitrust action filed in U. S. district court at Minneapolis by Mr. Steffes.

The president of Allied made the announcement in Chicago, where he was attending a meeting of a joint committee of Allied and the MPTOA.

New Firm Acquires Agency For German Carbon Company

The Noris Carbon Company, Inc., has been organized in New York, with headquarters in the Mohawk Building, 160 Fifth avenue. Eric W. Schumacher has been elected president and managing director.

The firm has acquired the exclusive sales agency here for C. Conradty of Nuernberg, Germany, manufacturers of carbon and carbon products since 1855, and known as one of the largest producers of projector carbons in the world.

McCarthy's Contract with Paramount Is Settled

Settlement has been made of the contract of Charles E. McCarthy with Paramount Publix. The contract of the former public relations director of the company, who resigned last Friday, had until 1934 to run. Mr. McCarthy is vacationing in Bermuda.

St. Louis MPTO Elects Officers

The eleventh annual convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of St. Louis, Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois was held last week at the Coronado Hotel, St. Louis, with an attendance of 118 members representing 340 theatres. President Fred Wehrenberg presided. M. A. Lightman, MPTOA president, addressed the session.

Officers were elected as follows: Fred Wehrenberg, St. Louis, president; S. E. Pirtle, Jerseyville, Ill.; I. W. Rodgers, Cairo, Ill.; J. C. Hewitt, Robinson, Ill., and A. M. Beare, Chester, Ill., vice presidents; Louis C. Hehl, St. Louis, treasurer-secretary. The new board of directors includes J. C. Hewitt, Charles C. Perry, Marvin Harris, Louis K. Ansell, Charles Goldman, Harold G. Evans, David L. Nelson, Bess Schulter, Frank Speros, H. E. Miller, Oscar C. Lehr, I. W. Rodgers, Victor B. Thien and Fred Wehrenberg.

Dr. Wingate Is Honored By Milliken at Luncheon

Dr. James Wingate was the guest of Carl E. Milliken, secretary of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, at a private luncheon given at the Town Hall Club, New York, on Thursday. Only a few intimate friends of Dr. Wingate and Mr. Milliken were invited, among them outstanding women's club leaders. There were no speeches. Dr. Wingate will soon leave for the Coast, where he will take up his new duties as head of the studio relations committee of MPPDA.

Wheeler, Woolsey, Cline Incorporate in California

Planning to form their own producing company, Wheeler and Woolsey, comedians, and Director Edward Cline this week filed articles in California for a proposed incorporation for the making of pictures, financing, sale of motion pictures, stage plays, vaudeville, radio and television sketches. There are to be 500 shares of capital stock, with a $500 par value on each. The new firm will be known as Robert Corporation.

Kuykendall Re-elected Tri-State President

Officers elected at the second day's sessions, on Tuesday, of the annual convention of Tri-States exhibitors were Ed. Kuykendall, of Columbus, Miss., re-elected president; M. S. McCord, of Little Rock, secretary-treasurer. W. E. Ruffin, of Covington, Tenn., succeeds E. L. Drake as regional vice president.

Thalberg Denies Leaving Metro

Irving Thalberg, Metro studio executive in Hollywood, now visiting in New York, issued the following statement on Wednesday:

"It has not been my custom to make statements. I have always preferred making pictures. However, to answer the reports that I am leaving Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, I should like to state the following: I am not leaving Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. My association with Nicholas Schenck, Louis B. Mayer, and J. Robert Rubin and other members of the organization, has been, and I am confident will continue to be, a most happy and inspiring one.

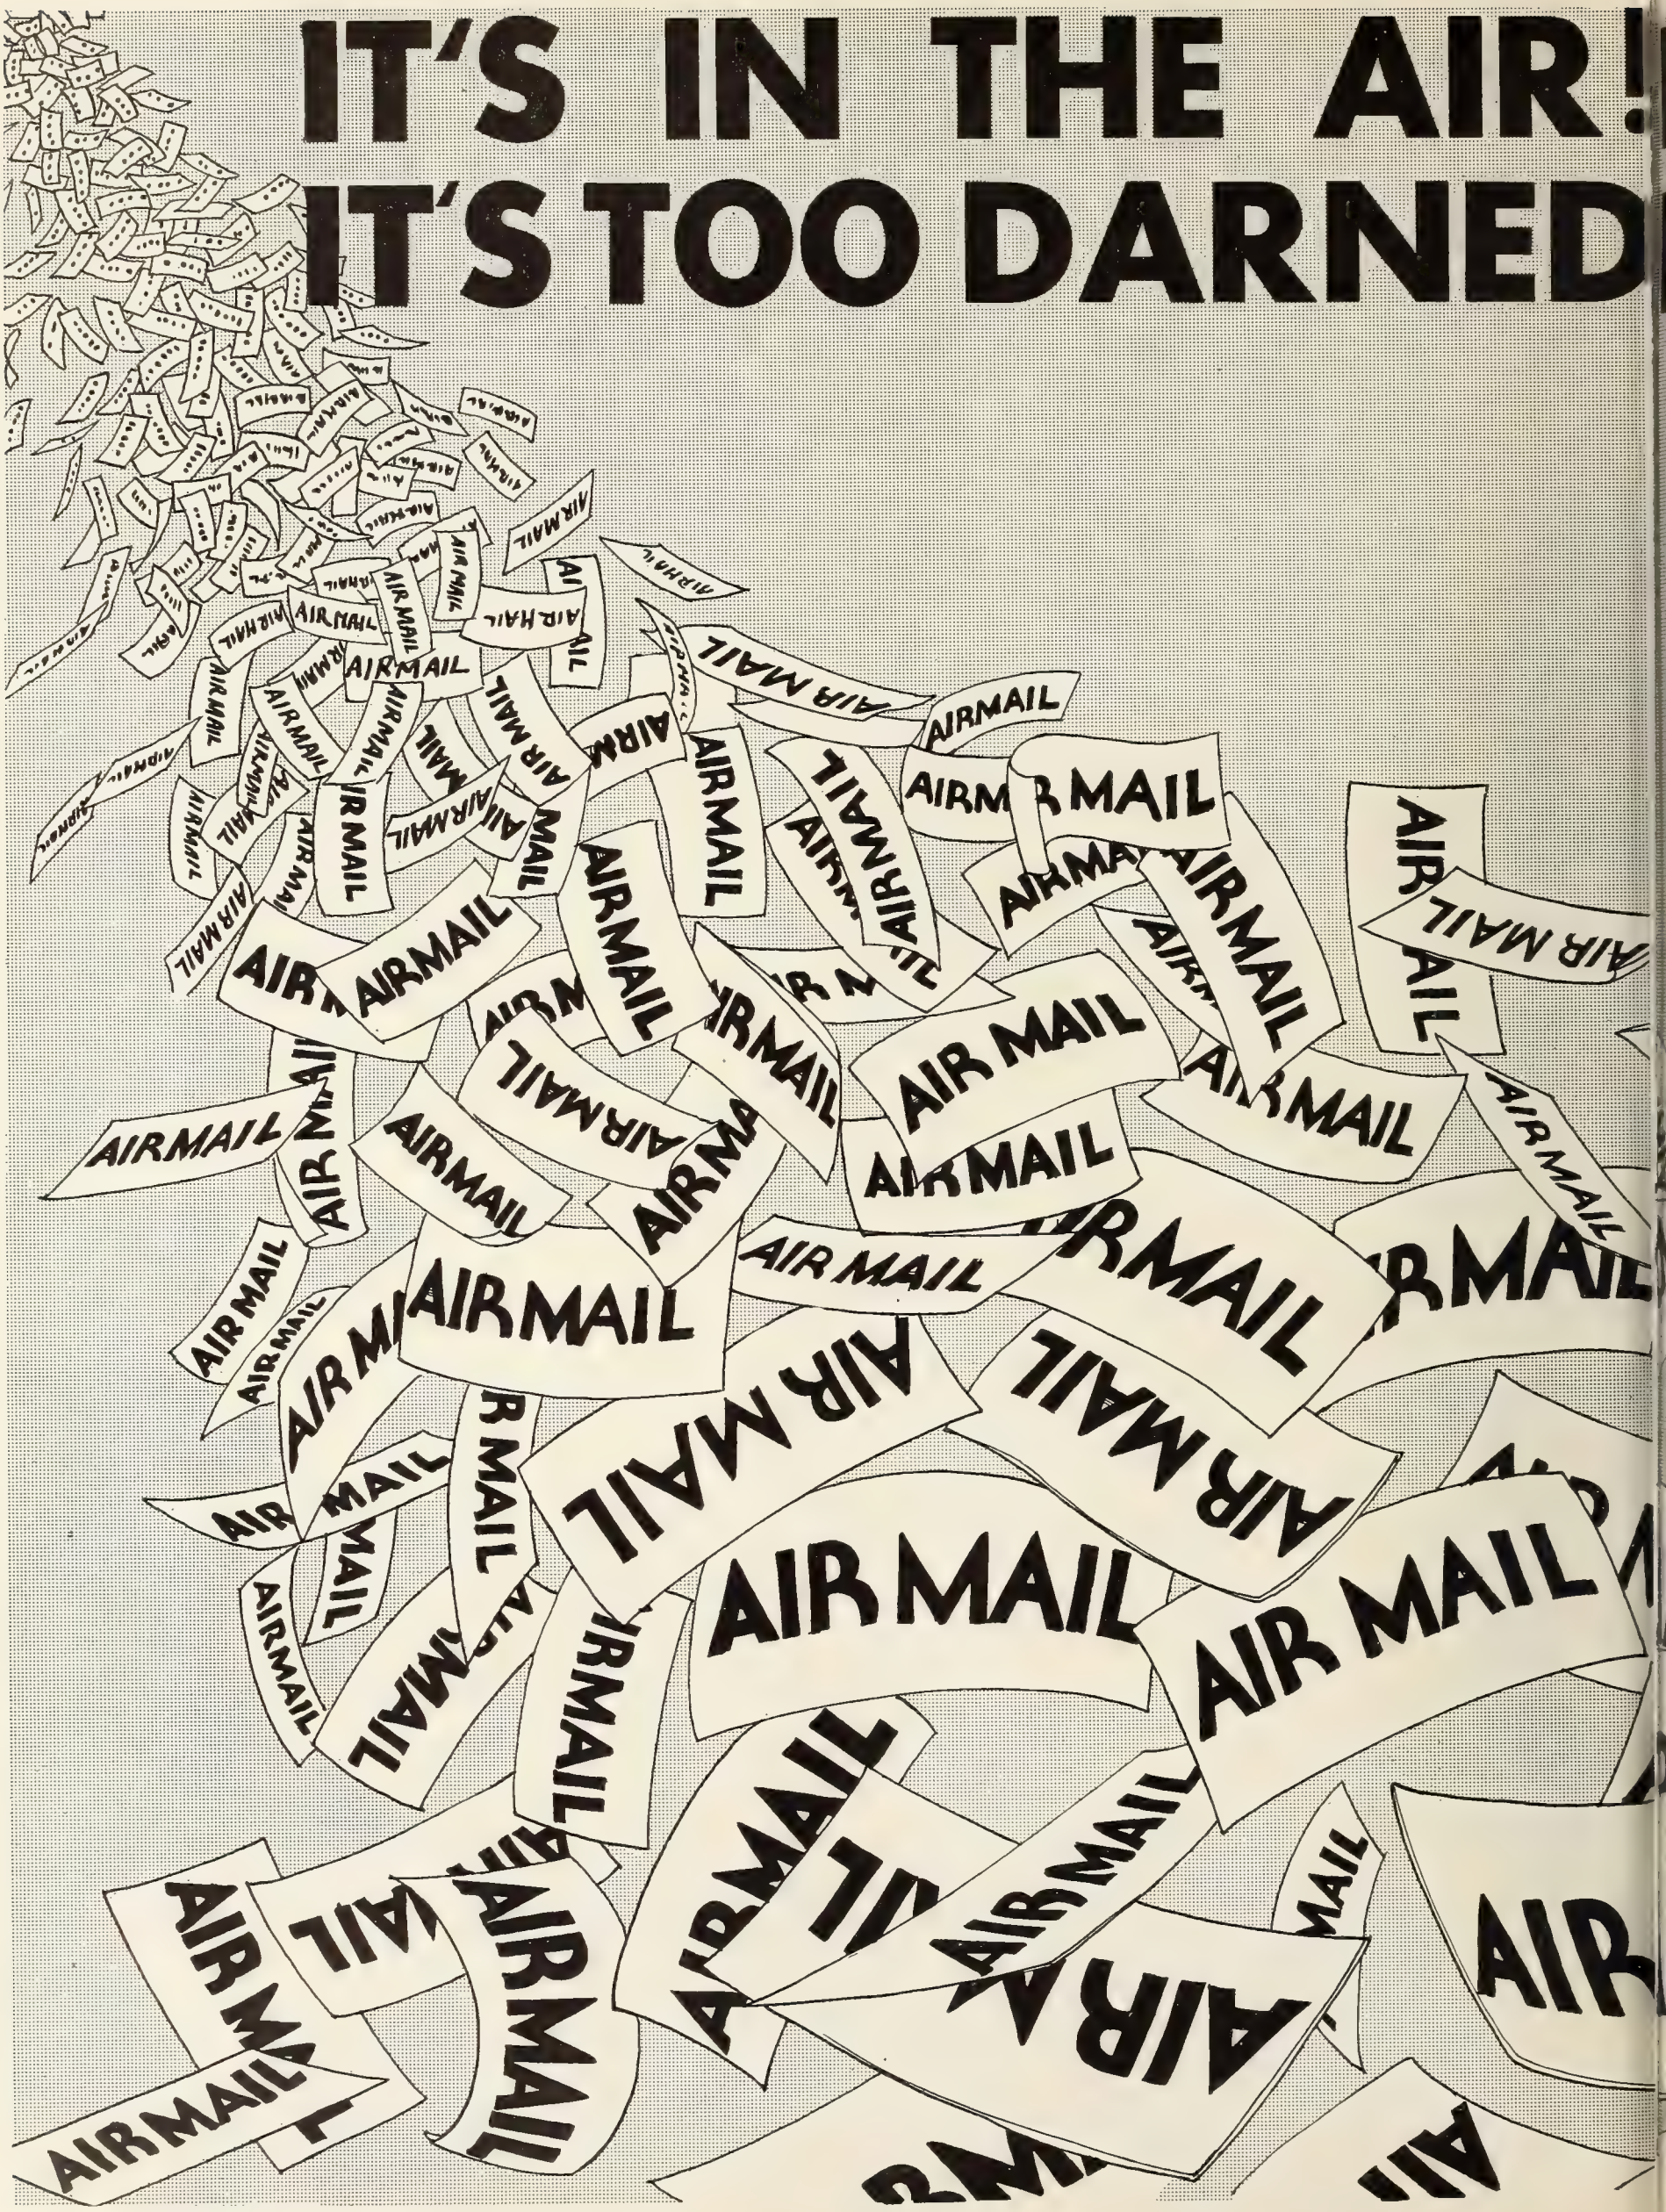
"My trip to New York is for only one purpose, to wit, the business of making pictures. I am determined, with such ability as I can muster, to not only maintain our present standard in the picture business, but to improve it by making more important box office attractions. I think the times have made it evident that the making of great pictures is not only a company matter, but an industry matter. The public must be always aware that in motion pictures there is a consistent source of entertainment.

"This is a business of stars and favorites. The placing of stars and favorites in attractive roles and interesting stories is the obligation of the producer. It is not enough, mind you, to merely have a box office title and a star that attracts the public into the theatre. The public must like the picture for itself as well.

"The producing of pictures is a job that I believe will always interest me. And I can't think of a better group of associates to work with than the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer outfit."

Officials of Italy Protest War Film

Officials of the Italian government in Washington will preview within a few days Paramount's "A Farewell to Arms," adapted from the war novel of Ernest Hemingway, published in 1929. It is understood the future attitude of the Italian government toward Paramount product may be seriously affected by the results of the preview.



The book related the story of the retreat of the Italian troops at Caporetto, and it is noted that it made no mention of the subsequent spectacular victories of the Italians in the same region. The Italian officials, in an entirely unofficial capacity, complained to Paramount that if the film were to follow the book, it would be considered an unfair treatment of the part the Italian troops played in the war.

Count Alberto Marchetti di Muriaglo, counselor of the Italian Embassy at Washington, said, "We never made a formal official complaint. We complained to the company that some scenes were rather unfair." Italian officials would not comment on the report that action may be taken, resulting in the possible barring from Italy of all Paramount pictures, should the film still be found "unfair."

TECHNOLOGICAL

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 146.—(A) Is "direct current" really that in every sense of the term? (B) How many alternations occur per second in 60-cycle current? In 120-cycle current? (C) Just what trouble would you expect to encounter if obliged to use 25-cycle current at the arc? (D) Why is low-cycle (25-cycle) current used? Is it served to theatres anywhere in this country or Canada?

Answer to Question No. 138

Bluebook School Question No. 138 was: "(A) Does spacing condenser lenses farther apart than is necessary involve light loss? (B) How may the projectionist using a plano-convex condenser satisfy himself that the light beam from the collector lens more than covers the converging lens? (C) In what way is spherical aberration useful in the condenser light beam? (D) What is meant by the aerial image of a condenser?"

Two or three correspondents have protested because their names were spelled wrong. Can't help it, gentlemen! The job of going through the great mass of answers is a very heavy one at best. A name gets mixed sometimes for the simple reason that it is not written plainly. It is best to print your signatures. Also, as I have told you several times, please put your name and the number of the question you are answering at the very top of the first sheet.

Another correspondent (in fact, several of them) have inquired why I ask certain questions twice or even three times, perhaps in a different form. It is usually done because I desire to fix the matter in the memories of the students. I shall doubtless repeat that offense, if offense it be.

We will listen to brother G. E. Doe on Section A of Question 138. He says, "By reference to Figure 40, Page 170, Volume 1 of the Bluebook, or by removing the converging lens and blowing smoke in the light beam from the collector lens, it will be observed that the beam is not a parallel one, that it diverges. This being the case, it follows that any unnecessary distance between the collector and converging lens will set up some light loss, though the actual loss will depend upon the condition at the projection lens. If that lens admits all the light beam from the aperture, then the loss, whatever it may be, will be total, though only the poorest light in the beam will be wasted. On the other hand, if the projection lens does not admit all the light beam from the aperture, then the loss will not be total. (See Fig. 47; p. 182, vol. 1, Bluebook.)"

May I remark that this is an answer which shows that the man who compiled it understands the matter very well indeed, in all its phases. May I suggest that many of you whose answers I have accepted as correct, study Brother Doe's answer. (Wish I knew who he is. He writes as "Doe," from Chicago, but that is not really his name. He has been in the "school" more or less continuously for a long, long while.)

On Section 3 we will listen to H. Love and J. Williams. They say, "If it is possible to look at the edges of the converging lens, as one may with most modern condensers, it is only necessary to observe the width of the ring of light falling outside its circumference. If this cannot be observed, then it would be necessary, with the light source in proper working position, to remove the converging lens and take whatever steps are necessary to measure the diameter of the beam at the plane occupied by the edge of the curvature of the converging lens, comparing that measurement, of course, with the diameter of the converging lens."

As to Section C, we will let Messrs. Rau and Evans have the floor. They say, "It would be poor practice to have the crater floor sharply focused at the aperture, because of the fact that the crater floor does not present an area of even illumination. Obviously, this being true, if it be focused at the film plane there would be uneven illumination at the screen. The crater image must therefore be broken up, which is partly accomplished by removing the point of focus from the aperture, and by the further fact that spherical aberration helps in the aforesaid 'breaking up' by the fact that it brings various zones of the beam to a focus at different points in length of beam."

Concerning Section D, T. Van Vaulkenburg says, "There is an image of the face of the converging lens formed in front of the projection lens, as may be demonstrated if a screen be held in the light beam. This is known as the 'aerial image' of the condenser, though more properly speaking, it is the aerial image of the face of the converging lens of the condenser."

ALTER YOUR BLUEBOOK

All Bluebook owners get out Volume 1 and turn to Page 393, where you will find, near the bottom, the statement that the positive crater causes a 35-volt drop, the negative carbon tip a 10-volt drop, and the arc or gas stream a 15-volt drop, which represented the best information available when the book was written.

I am advised by the National Carbon Company engineers that these figures should now be altered as follows: Positive element causes a drop of from 30 to 32 volts, arc stream from 10 to 12 volts, and the negative carbon tip a drop of from five to seven volts.

I therefore advise all Bluebook owners to alter the figures as above indicated, using a fine-point pen and ink, or typewrite the figures on white paper, cut out a small square containing them, and paste the square over the old figures.

STANDING DRAMATIC SENSATION OF THE AGE

THEATRE RECEIPTS

The total of theatre receipts for the calendar week ended October 8, 1932, reached $1,587,973 from 115 theatres in 20 key cities of the country. The figure is $34,165 greater than the total for the previous calendar week ended October 1, when 112 theatres in 20 cities reported an aggregate gross of $1,553,808. No new high individual theatre record figures were recorded during the more recent seven-day period, while two new low records were noted. This compares with no new "highs" and seven new "lows" for the preceding week.

OUT of the RED

He has done an amazing, courageous thing for the screens of America!

CONGRATULATIONS MR. FITZPATRICK!

You are the first to film RUSSIA TODAY as it really is!

TWO TRAVELTALKS ON RUSSIA! NOW READY FOR BOOKING!

Put a sign in your lobby!

At last! Pictures of Soviet Russia as it really is today! The first American to give you the Inside Facts! How they live! How they work! Answering America's curiosity about that strange land! Typical of the new-fashioned travel series Fitzpatrick gives you!

"MOSCOW, The Heart of Soviet Russia" is the first. To be followed by "LENINGRAD, Gateway to Soviet Russia."

It's a SNAP!

HARRY LANGDON

MERMAID COMEDIES

"Here we have an Educational short that is truly spice for any man's program. For a laugh getter, 'The Big Flash' is unexcelled.

"Harry Langdon is at his best, ably assisted by Vernon Dent. His frozen pan blundering in the character of an assistant newspaper photographer snapping the robbery of a jewelry store, kept the audience at the Uptown screaming. Whoever said Harry Langdon is to make a comeback in pictures is absolutely wrong. As far as the public is concerned he never went away. He is more welcome than ever."

Monogram's BEST TO DATE

says— BOX OFFICE

Klondike (Monogram), Lyle Talbot, H. B. Walthall, Thelma Todd and strong supporting cast. A young doctor barred from the Medical Association on account of the death of a patient following an operation sets out for Japan and his plane wrecks, landing him in the Klondike where he is confronted with a similar operation plus falling in love with his patient's sweetheart. Suspense and intrigue comes thick and fast while plot and counter plot makes it out of the ordinary film fare and one of the best pictures to come from the independent field in many moons. Direction is a feather in the cap of Phil Rosen and photography is excellent. Lyle Talbot gives a convincing performance in the doctor role and the picture is easily Monogram's best to date! Preview audience simply ate it up.

CHICAGO

Return to single features was easily the big event of last week. And, by far the majority of exhibitors are sticking to them. While the first week of business under the single feature policy was anything but something to rave about, there remains a determined effort on the part of the city's exhibitor to carry through. Twin bills will not return except as a last resort. This seems to be the popular opinion.

Lee Verscher, who has been connected with several companies in the trailer field, has joined the Filmack Company, where he will take charge of production for Irving Mack.

Joe Stern has taken over the Colony theatre.

Moe Lasker, who originally owned the Bertha theatre, will operate the Music Box on Southport avenue.

The local Allied office has asked exhibitors for information regarding a man giving the name of H. J. Riley, who says he represents a company named Daily Publicity Service. It is reported that he sells tickets on an automobile which the theatre is to receive as a giveaway. After receiving payment for the first block of tickets the man diseappears, the Allied office is informed.

Harry Schwartz has opened the Gage Park theatre at 51st and Western.

Henry Bombaras has opened the Blaine theatre on Southport avenue with a policy of German films, changes being made weekly.

Abe Blumstein, for fifteen years connected with the Fox circuit, has joined Columbia and is in Chicago as short product sales manager at the local exchange.

Harry Willard of the Illinois Cooperative Theatre Booking Service, has added fourteen theatres to his clientele.

"Wings Over the Andes" and "Hit That Line," three-reel subjects, have been booked by Balaban & Katz and Great States theatres for the entire circuit, Henri Ellman reports.

Jones, Linick & Shaefer, it is reported, will open the Woods theatre on November 1 with a film policy of five changes weekly at admission prices of 15 and 25 cents.

Essaness has taken over the Crown theatre. The Panorama theatre, on Sheridan road, has been reopened by the owners of the building. Van Nokomis has run his circuit up to six with the acquisition of the Logan Square.

Florence Hillegand, who has been assistant cashier at RKO, has joined the Columbia office force, where she will assist Mon Delano.

Florence Paley has adopted a policy of stage shows in addition to pictures at the Imperial.

HOLQUIST

Talmadge, Jessel in Film

Norma Talmadge and George Jessel will co-star in a picture based on the European musical drama, "Die Wunderbar," according to Ivan Kahn, manager for the two, on his arrival in New York last week. The film will be produced in Hollywood independently under the supervision of John Klein. It will go into work about November 15, when the stars complete their vaudeville tour.

U. S. Films 85% Of Brazil Total

Approximately 85 per cent of the films shown in Brazilian theatres are from the United States, according to a bulletin just issued by the Department of Commerce. From the standpoint of footage, it is pointed out, Brazil ranks among the five best outlets for American films.

Brazil has the largest number of motion picture theatres in Latin America, the bulletin discloses, with more than 1,700 theatres giving employment to 20,000 people. The total investment represented is approximately $40,000,000.

The advent of the sound film has tended to narrow the Brazilian market, as not more than 20 per cent of their motion picture houses have been wired for sound. This fact, together with the high customs duties, has served to limit the importation of any large number of prints of one film, which in turn has had the effect of providing a ready market for practically all pictures brought into the country.

Referring to the possibilities for the sale of United States film equipment, the Commerce Department bulletin points out that there are several obstacles which so far have prevented its wide use. Among these adverse factors are an inadequate supply of electricity, high tariffs and taxes. However, the market for theatrical equipment is capable of considerable development through intensive cultivation.

Monogram Plans to Aid Exhibitor in Exploitation

W. Ray Johnston, president of Monogram Pictures, has inaugurated a new exploitation policy for his company by which sales representatives will assist executives in the exploitation of the Monogram product.

The exhibitor, according to Mr. Johnston, may communicate with the home office for a prepared campaign, or on request a representative of the company will be dispatched to cooperate with the exhibitor directly. All salesmen are being instructed in the exploitation details particularly suited to each picture he handles.

Grauman May Extend Work

Sid Grauman, Coast showman handling the Chinese theatre in Hollywood, is negotiating to supervise the Fox Pantages, Egyptian and United Artists, Hollywood houses, when they reopen shortly. Loew's State may be included in the deal and Mr. Grauman may also stage the prologues for the houses.

Newsreels, Unions Sign A One-Year Salary Agreement

All major newsreel organizations, including Pathe News, Hearst Metrotone News, Fox Movietone News and Paramount News have signed the one-year agreement with newsreel cameramen, which, retroactive to September 19, was negotiated by Pat Casey for the Producers' Association and O. V. Johnson for Locals 644, New York; 659, Hollywood, and 666, Chicago, all of the IATSE.

The text of the union agreement with producers follows:

On and after September 19, 1932, it is agreed that the following salaries and working conditions shall govern the employment of all newsreel cameramen within the jurisdiction of Locals 644, New York; 659, Hollywood, and 666, Chicago; of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees of the United States and Canada.

All newsreel cameramen regularly employed or employed as hereinafter provided by any and all newsreel producing organizations shall be members of any one of the three IATSE locals designated: 644 of New York; 659 of Hollywood, California, and 666 of Chicago, Illinois.

Newsreel cameramen employed under this agreement shall not be assigned to non-theatrical, industrial or production work without the permission of their local.

Working Hours

The standard week shall consist of six consecutive working days. Newsreel cameramen, regularly employed, who shall be required to work on a Sunday, shall have a day of twenty-four hours off during the period of the next four weeks. It shall be optional with the producers to pay the extra day's pay for the Sunday's work.

Any man on "call" for any cause whatsoever shall be considered on duty.

Any newsreel cameraman who shall have been on duty for fifteen hours or more on any one assignment shall have the right to decline any assignments until nine hours have elapsed.

All assignments of newsreel cameramen noted as special risks by accident and life insurance companies will carry special protection for each man to the extent of $10,000 insurance to be paid to the newsreel cameramen, his heirs or assigns, and a special compensation over and above the regular pay of $25 per day, or at option of the company, newsreel cameraman may be insured for additional $10,000 in lieu of $25 per day.

Engagement

Newsreel cameramen may be engaged by the day, week, or as regular employees. The newsreel producing organizations are to notify the respective locals as to what classification the man is employed under.

A regular employee shall give or receive two weeks' notice in the event of resignation or discharge except that it may not terminate his employment before the end of any assignment accepted on or before the day of notice.

All newsreel cameramen regularly employed shall receive not less than $90 per week. All newsreel cameramen employed on a daily basis shall be paid at the rate of $35 per day. All newsreel cameramen employed on a weekly basis shall be paid at the rate of $100 per week.

No reduction in salaries of newsreel cameramen now paid above the minimum scale of $90 per week shall be made to any of the newsreel producers except in the event of general salary reductions applying to the producers' company as a whole.

Traveling Expenses

First class transportation, accommodations and meals shall be allowed the newsreel cameramen when incurred on the company's business.

Conditions of Acceptance

The locals agree that its members shall obey all rules and directions of any authorized representative of the employer, insofar as they do not conflict with the terms of this contract, with the By-Laws and Working Rules in force in the Union, or with the rules and regulations of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and Moving Picture Machine Operators of the United States and Canada.

This agreement shall terminate in one year from date and shall be subject to renewal by mutual agreement and notifications by either side at least sixty (60) days before expiration.

The conditions and wage scale for newsreel cameramen as set forth above will be agreeable to the officers and members of Locals 644, 659 and 666.

Palace to Shift For Cantor Film

Samuel Goldwyn's United Artists special, "The Kid From Spain," starring Eddie Cantor, will have its world premiere at the RKO Palace on Broadway, in accordance with negotiations completed this week between Mr. Goldwyn and Harold B. Franklin, president of the RKO Theatre Companies.

The present policy of the Palace, feature pictures combined with vaudeville, will be changed to a two-a-day policy of films only with reserved seats, and continue with that policy indefinitely. The Cantor film will open about the middle of November, simultaneously with the Coast engagement, at Warner's Western theatre, Los Angeles.

The shift in policy of the Palace will coincide approximately with the opening of the two RKO theatres in Radio City. "The Kid From Spain," a musical comedy feature, has Lyda Roberti, Ruth Hall, Robert Young, Noah Beery and the Goldwyn girls in the cast. J. J. McCarthy is expected to handle the roadshow engagements of the film.

Mrs. Roosevelt Writes on Films

Writing in the current issue of Modern Screen Magazine, Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt says in part: "There are many signs, today, pointing to the fact that in the movie industry itself there is a realization of the possibilities for education along many lines for service to the community in this comparatively new art. With that power goes, of course, a great responsibility. The educational value of the movies seems to me quite limitless if the men at the head of the industry have sufficient imagination to see what possibilities lie before them."

Mrs. Roosevelt also discussed criticisms which have been aimed at the industry for its emphasis on gangster pictures. Among other things, she said: "There is, of course, justification for these criticisms, and one which is even more valid is that the movie, in picturing every day life in socalled high society, falsely teaches bad taste, bad manners, not to say bad morals."

Youngclaus Sues 13 Firms; Charges Decree Violation

William N. Youngclaus, young Madison, Neb., theatre operator, who last June obtained a federal injunction forbidding thirteen principal motion picture producing and distributing companies from discriminating against him in the matter of "protection" agreements, filed a $255,000 damage suit against the thirteen corporations in federal court at Lincoln last week.

The defendants are Paramount-Publix, First National Pictures, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, United Artists, Fox Film, RKO-Pathe Distributing, RKO Distributing, Vitaphone Distributing, Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., Publix Theatres Corporation, Publix-Nebraska, Inc., Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., and the Omaha Film Board of Trade, Inc.

Mr. Youngclaus alleges that the defendant corporations have violated the injunction which Federal Judge T. C. Munger granted last June, enjoining them from enforcing the "protection" agreements, long a source of trouble between independent theatre operators and distributors and producers. Mr. Youngclaus alleges that as a result of the defendants' having continued to enforce the "protection" agreements in favor of a rival theatre at Norfolk, Neb., giving it the benefit of first run films, his patronage has been taken from him and he has been damaged to the extent of $85,000. He asks triple damages, amounting to $255,000, allowable under the Sherman anti-trust law.

No appeal has been taken from Judge Munger's ruling, which branded the protection agreement as a conspiracy in restraint of trade, giving arbitrary and unfair advantage to certain favored theatres. Judge Munger also wrote that he found most of the favored theatres were owned or controlled by the Paramount-Publix Corporation.

Mr. Youngclaus operates the Capitol theatre at Madison, and his nearest competitor is the Granada, a Publix house, at Norfolk. Under the protection agreement negotiated by the defendants the Granada would have ten-day protection over the Madison theatre, a smaller house. Mr. Youngclaus' refusal to participate in the agreement proposed in July, 1930, resulted in the injunction suit.

Lomb of Optical Firm Dead at 66

Funeral services for Adolph Lomb, vice-president of the Bausch & Lomb Optical Company, of Rochester, who died at his home in Pittsford, N. Y., after a brief illness, were held last week. Interment was in Mount Hope Cemetery, Rochester, N. Y. Mr. Lomb was 66 years old.

The eldest son of Captain Henry Lomb, the co-founder of the Bausch & Lomb company, he has been connected with that company for 53 years. Besides being an executive of the organization, Mr. Lomb was identified with a number of scientific and patriotic societies, chief among which was the Optical Society of America.

"PRODUCER UNWILLING TO PLAY FAIR"

T. E. ORR, EXHIBITOR, ALBERTVILLE, ALA.

CALLS EXHIBITOR ACTION INEVITABLE

Thomas E. Orr, president and general manager of Amusement Enterprises, Inc., with headquarters at Albertville, Ala., and newly elected president of the Southeastern Theatre Owners Association, was asked by the HERALD correspondent to express his views on the recent joint decision of Allied States and the MPTOA to press for federal regulation of the industry. Mr. Orr wrote that until the matter was acted upon by the association's board he was not at liberty to speak for the association. Consequently the following comment represents only his personal reactions.

I regard the action of MPTOA and Allied as the inevitable. During the twelve years in which I have been engaged in the business, I have watched the producers and distributors heap abuse on top of abuse on the backs of the theatre owners and operators, and all the begging and pleadings of individual owners and all the resolutions and condemnation of unfair trade practice by the various theatre organizations through this land, augmented by numerous conferences with distributor executives, seems to have fallen on deaf ears, or if it has accomplished anything it seems to have intensified the abuses, until at the present time thousands of owners find themselves with heavy investment which represents their life's earning and efforts, facing a crisis that is sure to result in disaster unless something drastic is done.

I have read the proposed bill which has been drafted with a view of introduction in the next Congress and I see nothing in it that should cause any producer, distributor or theatre owner, who wants to conduct a fair and honest business, to fear. Of course, it will break up the gigantic monopoly, prevent hundreds of unfair trade practices and keep a small coterie of men from dictating to ten thousand theatre owners how they shall run their theatres, which this small coterie of men haven't a thin dime invested in.

Cites Other Industries

I believe those in our industry who fear federal regulation have overlooked the fact that ours is the only major industry in the United States of America that has not yet had to yield to some kind of federal regulation in the interest of the man outside the inner circle and in the interest of the general public. The large oil companies, the steel and iron companies, the harvester companies and the railroads of the country came under the regulation of the Sherman antitrust act and the Clayton act many years ago and no sane thinking man can justly say that these regulatory acts of Congress did not bring about order out of chaos and place these several businesses on a higher plane of business ethics and that the regulation was really beneficial to the business itself and to the general public.

I have yet to see the United States Government outlaw any legitimate business by regulation. The trouble is that the producers and distributors have used their unregulated freedom as an unbridled license to wreak their wrath of greed on a long-suffering legitimate business, and have heaped upon it so many unfair and unjust trade practices and got away with it that they now feel that they have an unalienable right to oppress the theatre owners at their will for their own selfish gain.

"Unwilling to Play Fair"

If the action of the exhibitor organization is not pleasing to the producers and distributors, then they have no one to blame but themselves. They have demonstrated at every turn of the road their unwillingness to play the game fair. However, they have had their own way so long that I believe a great many of them think that anything they want is just and right and that their word in this industry should be the law of the land. This attitude has been demonstrated on more than one occasion when our organization has pointed out abuses and made requests for their correction.

When the Sherman and the Clayton acts were enacted into law the film industry was in its swaddling clothes; therefore, it was not designed to fit our situation and is, therefore, not effective, except in rare cases as a regulatory measure for our industry and we, therefore, need an act which applies strictly to the film industry.

If the proposed measure is enacted into law there will be no further need for censhíp and in a short while you will hear very little about this subject, for the simple reason the exhibitor will have a little something to say about the class of pictures he runs in his theatre, and when he quits buying salacious, indecent sex pictures which he is now forced to buy, just so soon will the producers quit making them and they will lend a listening ear to the voice of the public expressed through the local theatre owners in the several communities throughout the United States.

I deny what some have said, that this measure will hurt the industry. To the contrary I sincerely believe that the industry will always be harassed and torn asunder by misunderstandings and untold litigation between distributors and exhibitors, and that the chasm of misunderstanding now existing between distributor and exhibitor will grow wider and wider until the government steps in and says to each party to the controversy, "Thus far you shall go and no further." This is exactly what happened in the steel industry, the harvester industry, the oil industry, the railroads and many other of the largest businesses of the world. In those industries greed overlapped conscience and fair business policies. Humanity is the same in this industry as it was in those and the industry has reached the point that no further progress will be made until the producers, distributors and exhibitors meet on common ground of understanding and begin to deal with each other through live and let live policies. All voluntary methods of reaching this happy fruition have heretofore failed and federal regulation is our only remedy through which relief will ever be obtained.

SHOWMEN'S REVIEWS

This department deals with new product from the point of view of the exhibitor who is to purvey it to his own public

THE concept of this department is that the exhibitor is concerned not with any critic's idea of "how good?" or "how poor?" but rather with the question of precisely what the product is and what is to be done with it when and as it is played. The exhibitor, in general, is concerned with the special aspects of strength and of weakness in the product, its appeals and shortcomings, that he may adequately deal with it when he becomes its sponsor to his public. These "review" pages aim to aid the exhibitor as the retailer of the merchandise concerned.—THE EDITOR.

The Golden West

(Fox)

Drama and Comedy

This is an elaborate production. It lags in spots and there are shots which appear to be from other big Fox pictures, so that the picture seems to go into the program classification. Despite its title, it is not a "Western," as that term is generally understood. In fact, the story is split up into four sections. The first is centered in the old South, prior to the Civil War, and deals with an eternal family feud, which is climaxed when David Lynch shoots a scion of the Summers family. The next division concerns the flight of Lynch to the wild west and his joining up with a wandering peddler and a wagon train, which is finished when the senior Summers catches up with him and exacts his revenge. The third sequence is of the pre-railroad days on the plains, with Lynch married and the father of a two-year-old boy. Indians raid his cabin, kill him and his wife and take the child away with them. Then an interval of years and Lynch's son as Matano, renegade leader of the savages, is the leading spirit in raids on the railroad builders. The daughter of Betty Summers and Calvin Brown is on her way to join her father and is captured by Matano. Jealousy of a rival chief forces Matano to realize that he is a white man and deliver her to her people and to take up the battle against his foster people. Then, of course, comes the breaking down of the age-old barrier of the feud.

There is entertainment enough in the production, along the lines of romance, drama, human interest, spectacle and comedy, to suit all but the most critical audiences. But aside from George O'Brien and Janet Chandler playing double roles, there is comparatively little on which a big interest creating campaign can be pegged.

As a Zane Grey story, there should be plenty of reason for going after his readers, as well as for making tieups with book stores and libraries. The historical sequences suggest that something can be done with the schools, but care should be taken that you don't become too enthusiastic in picturing it as a saga of the country's development. While the picture is not primarily educational, its second part is alive with that type of entertainment that appeals to the youngsters. School authorities and parents should be contacted in an effort to pull heavy juvenile business.—McCARTHY, Hollywood.

Trailing the Killer

Animals

(World Wide)

Animals native to the United States are the principal actors in this novel and interesting yarn. A well-trained wolf dog, Lobo, is the hero; a mountain lion is the vicious killer; a bunch of snarling wildcats supply much of the glamour; a half-crossed wolf and her litter of puppies provide the romance and comedy, and a sensational battle between Lobo and a rattlesnake is the dramatic highlight. The humans are essentially atmospheric background, providing the dialogue and a little of the action that makes the story completely understandable.

Lobo, because he is seen in the vicinity of some sheep carcasses, is suspected of being the killer. The herders want to destroy him. But it is early shown that a fierce mountain lion is the real villain. Trailing the lion, Pierre is killed by it, after he and the dog have put up a vicious battle. Herders finding the body place the blame on Lobo. A reward is offered for his capture, dead or alive. One of Lobo's pups is marooned on a floating island. The lion stalks it. Lobo hears the plaintive yelps and dashes to the rescue, again battling the lion, who attacks him as he is caught in a trap. Their struggles free the dog and another whirlwind battle is finished by the sheriff's posse and Lobo becomes the pet of the herders.

The incidental combat between the rattler and Lobo is one of the most sensational things shown on the screen, fully on a par with the mongoose battle and the tiger-python struggle of recent memory for thrills and suspense. It's a feature of the picture that can be widely ballyhooed, and alone, properly exploited, it should sell plenty of tickets.

Not only is "Trailing the Killer" great children's entertainment, but there is plenty of drama of nature in the raw to intrigue the interest of adults. It's wide open for all sorts of effective showmanship. You've had your jungle animal pictures that whetted up great patron interest. Here's something with a real story, with animals occupying roles synonymous with those assigned men and women and with the dog Lobo taking direction with almost unbelievable intelligence, and the wild beasts acting with the fury of animals fighting for their lives. You have drama, romance, action, thrills and spectacle, plus a novelty that should mean certain box office dollars.

The running time is short, but it is crowded with action and suspense that make for startlingly novel entertainment. If possible, see this picture before you play it, or else watch the results at its first showings.—McCARTHY, Hollywood.

Faithless

(MGM)

Dramatic Romance

Two factors, story and cast, make "Faithless" a woman's picture. Primarily it is a dramatic romance that portrays the lengths to which a woman will go for the man she loves. It is built around the personal and sentimental results of the economic situation and its theme makes it possible for Tallulah Bankhead to turn in an outstanding performance, more vivid than her previous screen appearances. Together with Robert Montgomery, she makes a rather sordid story seem real, one that should appeal to the women folk.

The opening is glamorous. Miss Bankhead, wealthy, is in love with Montgomery, who has only a $20,000 a year job. He will not marry her unless she agrees to live on his salary. Then comes the crash. Miss Bankhead's fortune is wiped out. Montgomery loses his job and can't get another one. For a time Miss Bankhead sops on newly rich people who are keen to bask in the reflected glory of her social prestige. Montgomery goes west in search of a job, while she slides down the ladder until she is but the paramour of a bootleg millionaire. Montgomery finds her in the man's apartment. Realizing her folly, Miss Bankhead goes in search of a job and finally winds up in the breadline. She is in a cheap restaurant when Montgomery enters. He has a job and the past is forgiven and they marry. Montgomery's job blows up the next day and he is injured by strikebreakers. Without a dime, Miss Bankhead takes to the streets and is picked up by a policeman who makes her forswear that calling and gets her a job in a restaurant.

Back in the room, Montgomery's brother, Murphy, is telling him about seeing this girl on the street. Then Miss Bankhead comes in. He learns that her motive was to get money to bring him back to health. Montgomery gets a $60 a week job and they are set for happiness.

The natural angle to play up is the sacrifice that a woman will make for the man she loves. There is human interest, drama and romance enough to kick up more than usual excitement among the feminine contingent. That and the names should prove sufficient to pull them in. Watch your matinee business. Go after it with special Shoppers' Shows. Ask the women patrons in advertising and publicity if a woman has a right to violate the moral code to protect the man she loves. Intrigue the women and you can count on them to pull the menfolk in with them. The picture is too strong for juvenile entertainment and has comparatively little that would interest them.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

This Sporting Age

(Columbia)

Drama

There is action, pictured through hard-riding polo players and racing automobiles, and drama, involving an army captain and his motherless daughter, for the exhibitor to sell in this film.

Jack Holt, two fisted and energetic always, contrives to present one of his active performances as the captain whose polo-playing ability draws him to the east from a western army post. There his daughter watches him become enmeshed with a woman of doubtful character, while she herself, misunderstanding the action of the wealthy young man to whom she is engaged, also becomes involved with a person of equally doubtful character.

The complications straighten themselves following a smashing sequence on the polo field which is not only completely authentic, including crowds and noise, but is also full of dramatic punch.

The exhibitor doesn't draw very successfully in the matter of the title, which is vague and rather lacking in exploitation possibilities. The best selling bet for show-selling is the name of Jack Holt, a favorite who can be depended upon for a fast-moving performance. Evalyn Knapp is attractive and appealing as the daughter, and Hardie Albright is a fairly strong name as the other half of the romance. There are two good names in the support, Walter Byron as the not-too-honorable polo player, and J. Farrell Macdonald as the very Irish sergeant, groom to the captain's horses when he comes east, and amusingly fond of the bottle. Do not overlook Macdonald. He has a following, and presents here an able character performance, as well as supplying the comedy.

Sell the picture as action plus drama and promise reasonably well rounded entertainment. There is nothing unusual about the story, but it has been directed in such a manner as to bring the most out of it, with action thrust into the breach whenever the dramatic sequences became too much reliant upon dialogue and the like. The picture maintains the pace admirably, in its swing from polo field to sick bed, from country club to racing automobiles.

Though the film, in its sophisticated aspects, is not particularly suitable for children, there is nothing seriously objectionable, and they will most certainly draw a thrill from the polo sequences.—Aaronson, New York.

In the Days of the Crusaders

(Monopole)

Drama

Definitely historically religious in theme, this Italian-made film lends itself particularly to audiences of such interests.

The picture has been done in silent form, with English subtitles in the style common preceding the advent of sound. A musical score has been woven into the film, adding a certain effectiveness. Austere and deliberate of movement, the film relates, with drama emphasized, the story of the life and religious belief of Saint Francis of Assisi. The film is also available with Italian-English subtitles.

It is pictorially indicated how Francis, son of a merchant prince in the ancient city of Assisi, could find no happiness in following the mercantile pursuits of his parent, and often incurred his anger by reason of his soft-heartedness. Deciding to join the military guard of a neighboring noble, Francis rides away with the applause of the community in his ears, only to receive their condemnation a short time later when he returns without having entered the service. He turns then to the teachings of Christ and Roman Catholicism and proceeds through the remainder of his life to practice these teachings, devoting himself to prayer and the aid of his fellows.

The picture therefore lends itself to tieups with religious groups in communities where that interest presents a field for attracting patronage.

An extremely large cast of extra people fills the screen throughout the film, which is done elaborately and in a manner often bordering on the spectacular. The reverence of the people eventually accorded Francis, his death in blindness and physical agony and the development of a miraculous visitation could be completely appreciated only by an audience wholly in sympathy with the religious precepts involved.—Aaronson, New York.

Louise, Queen of Prussia

(Associated Cinemas)

Historical Drama

Ably performed, ably directed, this historical drama centers about the life, as queen, of Louise of Prussia during the early years of the nineteenth century, when Napoleon had the continent of Europe in the hollow of his grasping hand and forced kings and princes to eat humble pie.

There is drama in the story thrown against a background which appears authentically regal and militaristic according to the fashions then existing. The pomp and ceremony which marked the movement of royalty is well represented, heightening the atmospheric effectiveness of the film as a whole. With the aid of the superimposed subtitles in English, appearing more frequently than is usual, and a brief English program synopsis, there is not the slightest difficulty following the sequence of events, despite a lack of knowledge of the German language.

The cast is pre-eminently fitted for its work and achieves excellent results. Henny Porten, as Louise, is widely known in Germany as an actress of charm and capability. In this work she lives up to her reputation, presenting a portrayal of the sorely tried queen which readily may be rated a distinguished performance. The natural dignity which might be expected from a queen is present in every motion, while she portrays, as the occasion warrants, mother, wife, sacrificing patriot and queen. The names of the others, even for the German audience in the United States, will likely enough mean little or nothing, yet they all do work of fine quality Since the theme centers upon a definite occurrence of importance in European history, and as the picture presents a foreign language, the possibility of valuable school tieups and special showings is apparent.

As far as the general audience is concerned, offer them a well directed, interesting film story, historically significant and highly dramatic. Strike the angle of the Louise of Henny Porten, a queen yet beset with all the worry and difficulty of position which confronts the average mother and wife. The story has contrived ably to present a queen who is, at the same time, very much a woman, facing trying situations as any other woman might, despite her regal position. Here is, then, a definite appeal to the feminine contingent of the audience, without at the same time alienating the masculine.—AARONSON, New York.

Looking on the Bright Side

(Associated Radio)

Comedy Drama

It is a difficult matter to give this picture a label, though for the sake of convention it may be pigeonholed in the "comedy drama" class. Actually it is composed of a mixture of drama, melodrama, comedy, broad farce and music, the last-named ingredient having been dealt out so generously that it flavors the whole too strongly, like a pudding in which the cook has spilled the entire contents of the sugar jar instead of a measured quantity.

There is no doubt that in its native country the film will register a clean-up, entirely on the personality of Gracie Fields, the undisputed queen of British vaudeville. Undoubtedly the production has its moments, especially when resorting to broad farce, when it will provoke laughs from any audience, black, white or yellow, and the songs in themselves are sufficiently tuneful to merit putting over in a big way. There is also a humorous interpretation of the Jewish producer by Julian Rose, which marks this famous Hebrew comedian for future film honors. Audiences who like the humor of Harry Green or George Sidney will take Julian to their bosoms at once.

Gracie works tremendously hard all through the piece, but it is noticeable that her success comes almost exclusively in the burlesque portions of the film. Sequences showing her as an English woman cop (one of our quaint old customs) are beyond price for foolishness, and she comes over faultlessly when singing her typically Gracie songs, as "He's Dead, But He Won't Lie Down." Furthermore, she reveals beautiful artistry in the pathos of a song with the expressive title, "I Hate You." In the romantic moments, however, she is not so good.

There's little on the story, which tells of two tenement dwellers in the East End who are attracted to the bright lights, badly singed, but eventually reunited in the manner proper to a picture of the musical comedy variety. That slender framework, nevertheless, has been covered deftly by Co-directors Dean and Cutts, and there are sufficient original touches. What, above all, may sell it to your public is the music, for there are five good songs, which should all prove popular meat. The title, too, suggests possibilities, and for street ballyhoo there is the opportunity to parade a woman cop, or even a squad, about the highways.—CHARMAN, London.

The Fighting Gentleman

(Freuler)

Drama

This production is suitable for the smaller subsequent run theatre, but cannot be considered more than ordinary motion picture fare.

There is comparatively little with which the exhibitor has to work in selling the picture, which centers about the young man who becomes a boxing champion and a husband in rapid succession, falls under the influence of a woman of doubtful character and thereby loses his wife. Eventually, as the offspring arrives, the boxer learns his lesson, is reconciled to his wife and loses the championship and his boxing career, to gain, we are given to understand, happiness as a father and garage mechanic.

The fast prize-ring sequences, of which there are several, should carry something of a punch for boys who have not yet attained the upper "teens." The title offers comparatively little from the standpoint of exploitation.

Several of the names constitute something of box office attraction, among them William Collier, Jr., the boxer; Josephine Dunn, his wife; Natalie Moorhead, Crauford Kent.

Use the angle of the young man who, impressed by a sense of his own ability and importance, is brought to his senses by a crisis of family relationship.

It would be well to draw all that is possible out of the boxing sequences, which in their appearance of authenticity, their fast action and the presence of James J. Jeffries, former heavyweight champion, as referee, form something in the nature of a redeeming feature.—AARONSON, New York.

The Lodger

(Twickenham Studios)

Mystery

"The Lodger" is a production that should enhance the reputation of British pictures in America. It presents a well-sustained mystery, based on a story which, if not entirely hole-proof, is more credible than the average, and backed by capable acting, brilliant direction and photography, and convincing settings. As a screen play it grips the interest from the word "go," carries its plot along in an uninterrupted sequence, and culminates in a situation that should raise your audiences from their chairs.

Mrs. Belloc Lowndes' famous novel made a first-rate silent film, but the new version merits an even greater reputation. Only an ultra-critical audience will be able to find fault with it, and even then will be obliged to admit its high entertainment value. A brief recital of the plot will indicate to showmen the opportunities it presents him for distinctive exploitation, its compelling mystery atmosphere alone being sufficient to arouse the irresistible interest of the ordinary fan.

A series of particularly brutal murders, the victims of which are always women, baffles Scotland Yard, and reaches a climax when the police commissioner's daughter is added to the list. It is established that the criminal is an escaped maniac from a Continental madhouse. To the apartment house of the Bunting family comes a young foreigner of eccentric behavior, whose actions ultimately incur the suspicions of Daisy Bunting's boy friend, a keen newspaper reporter. When a fresh murder is committed in the vicinity of the house and the lodger comes home dripping blood, the evidence is held conclusive and the police are called. Although arrested, the lodger escapes, and arranges by telephone a meeting with Daisy in the park that night. It is when she comes to the rendezvous that the story reaches its denouement in a scene in which the horror comes right off the screen and into the middle of the auditorium. The sentimental will be relieved to know that it works out all right, with Daisy safe in the arms of her new boy friend.

Who is the lodger? Who is the avenger? These are the keys to your campaign, giving you plenty of chance to work up ballyhoo with a mysterious stranger parading the streets athirst for blood. Conjure up the image of a terrifying figure looming out of the mist, a knife in his hand and murder in his eyes, the young heroine alone and at his mercy, and then—what? What is the reason for the lodger's nightly excursions into London's dark and foggy streets, and why is his manner so strange while he is in the house? It's mystery, mystery all the way through, and if you can't curdle your patrons' blood before they ever see the picture your showmanship is backfiring.

Ivor Novello in the name part makes the mysterious foreigner a figure of extreme sympathy, and with his sinister manner works the story up to a point of high tension. The innocence of Elizabeth Allan as Daisy makes a perfect contrast, and the rich comedy of A. W. Baskcomb as her father gives relief where it is most needed. Director Elvey has held them all in his hand and manipulated them in a masterly vein; the result is one of the most creditable pieces of work he has given us.

Fires of Fate

(British International)

Drama

"Fires of Fate" may not excel in dialogue, or plot, or acting, but it does stand out because of the genuineness of its settings and the many beautiful shots of Egypt, the desert and the Nile which form its main backgrounds. The unit making this picture took the unusual step for a British production company of getting its atmosphere in the proper place—on the spot.

The story, adapted from Conan Doyle's famous novel, "The Tragedy of the Korosko," is, by modern standards, novelettish in the extreme, being the familiar one of the man given a year to live by his doctor, his love affair, his do-or-die heroism and the ultimate revelation that he is not doomed after all. Unfortunately, Lester Matthews was not built to invest the role of Colonel Egerton with the he-man qualities necessary to the part, and the selection of the other principals shows equal lack of discrimination in casting. One member of the cast, however, who does deserve commendation is Clifford Heatherley, in an amusing study of the native guide.

Fortunately for the film's sponsors, a strong bout of action comes to the rescue before the film is lost, and the average audience should be excited to a high state of enthusiasm when the Camel Corps rushes up and works its will on the fleeing Arab hordes. Such audience also will find delight in the authentic scenes of Egypt at its most picturesque, and though it will probably laugh (at the dialogue) in all the wrong places, it can be guaranteed to come away from the show satisfied.

A noteworthy point is that this picture is an instance of that rara avis—the subject given the "U," or universal exhibition, certificate of the British censor, which suggests the film (and rightly) as good material to feed the youngsters. This should give the showman an opportunity of advising his customers that here is a picture to which they can bring the whole family. Its general exploitation should suggest itself; play the action part of the story, the idea of a man with a year to live, the exotic atmosphere of the desert and the Arab element up to the limit. Don't worry about names—except that of the author, Sir Arthur Conan Doyle—but concentrate on the suggestions outlined above and you should get back more than chicken-feed.—CHARMAN, London.

Romance

If ever a film was born with a silver spoon in its mouth, it is "Baroud." With Rex Ingram returning, not only as director of his first talking picture, but also making his debut as an actor through the same medium, the production might have been considered God's gift to showmen.

While it is not of the stuff of which box office smashes are made, nevertheless the picture does present opportunities for selling, and you might feel justified in making a big noise with them. Obviously you have Ingram's comeback as the focus of your campaign, and you can justly say that many of his famous directorial touches are to be found in this picture. You can be certain the damsels will fall for his attractive features, and there's appeal in his voice.

Add to that all the glamour of the North African desert, shown vividly in detail. Ingram has made marvelous use of his first hand knowledge of this part of the world, and the little touches of reality that he puts into it make its atmosphere pulse with life. With it all goes beautiful scenery; indeed, in artistic qualities the film is definitely a winner.

Scenes of tribal warfare (that's what "Baroud" means) give brisk action to the piece at a moment when it begins to sag and the Arabs should give inspiration to the showman. So pile on the eastern atmosphere, transform your theatre into an Arab citadel, have your attendants in flowing robes or Spahi uniform, put 'em on the streets mounted on thoroughbreds and brandishing guns, sabers and other forms of Arab cutlery.

Stress the romance between the French officer and the Arab maid all you like, though that won't help the picture half so much as the spectacular parts. Acting generally is competent, with Rex perhaps a trifle too restrained for his part. The best characterizations come from Arabella Fields, the Negress, Andrews Engelman, as the rebel chief, and Pierre Batcheff, as the girl's brother. Rosita Garcia, unfortunately, does not stand up to the heroine role, though she has a pretty enough face of its type.—CHARMAN, London.

Herzblut

(Cines-Pittaluga)

Comedy Drama

Forceful enacting of a homely story of filial love and devotion gives this production a sympathetic appeal which should draw a meritorious response in communities where pictures with German dialogue are appreciated. The picture, with its introductory scenes of Rome, varies from the modern German in the restricted use of music. In "Herzblut" the fact that the leading roles are of a composer and an art student makes the story a natural vehicle for a musical basis for the initial action. However, little of that appears later as the dramatic element enters.

A literal translation of the title into "Heartblood" is meaningless; a word or two concerning the theme will indicate the type of appeal to make. Maria and Heinrich are to wed as soon as he has made his marks with his masterwork. She returns home from a party to find that her mother has died in childbirth and the baby son is illegitimate. She gives up her own future for that of the child. Heinrich sees the boy and thinks he's Maria's. The father demands that Nino be given to him. Maria finally accedes and is about to end her own life when Heinrich appears and they start life anew.

But for the illegitimacy phase the picture would well be good for the days of the juvenile audiences, because of the frequent glimpses of children at play.

First of importance in publicizing the picture is the cast. In a community familiar with German productions Renate Mueller and Gustav Froelich will be known at least as well as any other German players. Miss Mueller gives a splendidly sympathetic performance while the same is true of the male star.—ROVELSTAD, New York.

Produced by Cines-Pittaluga, Rome. No American distributor as yet. Directed by Constantin David. Story by Luigi Pirandello. Adaptation by Pietro Sassoli. Cameraman, Ubaldo Arata. Release date, September 30, 1932. Running time, 77 minutes.

(Capital)

Operetta

Done in light and sprightly fashion, with naturally much concentration on the many musical phases, this German effort contrives to be reasonably entertaining, but is handicapped by the German dialogue as far as the American audience is concerned. There is a goodly portion of humor in the story, but it depends for its effect to a great extent upon the dialogue and its rendition. The complete absence of English subtitles or any means of English explanation, other than a brief program synopsis, makes the film almost exclusively adaptable to the German-speaking audience, and for them the film should find favor. An audience at one of New York's intimate houses responded heartily, apparently enjoying the production rather thoroughly.

Offering the picture, then, to the German audience, the exhibitor has, in the first place, the name of Gustave Froelich, one of the most capable and physically attractive young men on the German screen, in the role of the young composer who makes his way without his father's money but with the assistance of a well-known musical comedy star, who poses as an unknown to aid the young man she has met accidentally. Gitta Alpar, as the star, is a blondely attractive person possessing excellent voice and acting ability, the voice being especially pleasing.

The story is simple, not unusual, relies for the greater part of its strength on comedy and music and never becomes very serious. What it lacks in dramatic weight, however, it makes up in liveliness and melody. The theme number is an unusually melodious selection and may well be used for exploitation through the lobby amplifier, and in tieups with the local music stores.

It would seem advisable to direct the attention particularly to the German patrons, since the person without a knowledge of the language cannot be more than mildly entertained when losing the effect of the dialogue. Within its language limitations the film is diverting fare for the family.—AARONSON, New York.

Produced by Froelich-Film, Berlin. Distributed by Capital Film Exchange. Directed by Carl Froelich. Adapted from an idea by Tilde Foerster. Manuscript by Dr. J. Brandt and Erich Faber. Music by Nicolaus Brodsky. Text of songs by Dr. Johannes Brandt. Running time, 91 minutes.

SHORTS

Scram

(MGM)

Good

Where Laurel and Hardy, ace short comedy players, are concerned, there is usually a definite portion of comedy. This is no exception. The pair, as tramps, are ordered out of town by the court. In the rain outside, they meet and help Arthur Housman, gloriously inebriated, to find the key to his car. He brings them home, but the home turns out to be that of the judge who warned them away. In his pajamas, they make themselves comfortable and give his wife liquor instead of water by mistake. The judge comes in and it all winds up in a noisy blackout. The pair are really amusing, and worth a selling line in the advertising on any program. They have their following, and should be good for a patronage draw on their own account.—Running time, 21 minutes.

Screen Souvenirs—No. 3

(Paramount)

Splendid

These "movie memories" rate with the best of the diverting short subjects produced. Composed of newsreel and regular pictures of the motion picture's earlier days, the subjects are here repeated with the addition of a running fire of amusing comment. The heavy drama and comedy of yesterday becomes enormously amusing today. The newsreel shots are highlighted by a baseball game in which Ty Cobb and Hans Wagner appear, and by a most interesting shot of the impressive funeral ceremony of King Edward of England in 1910, with numerous of Europe's former crowned heads on foot behind the cortege. A superior short subject.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Hey! Hey! Westerner

(Vitaphone)

Fair Musical Bit

The rather effective, though somewhat liberal use of color serves to give this short novelty subject a touch of the unique among shorts. Included is a slight story idea, concerning the young man who is relegated to a western ranch in order to achieve the full benefit of his uncle's will. He turns the place into a night club and the audience gathers liberal doses of musical comedy, in eccentric and chorus dancing of reasonably good quality and in quartet and solo singing. The novelty of the subject is its chief value in occupying a slightly different spot on the program.—Running time, 16 minutes.

Fighting Fins

(Paramount)

Lively

Interestingly exciting is this subject, one of the Grantland Rice "Sports Eye View" series, in which are pictured two widely divergent varieties of fisherman's paradise. Two famed authors, Irving S. Cobb, humorist, and Courtney Riley Cooper, fish in a beautiful lake of the Rocky Mountains, while Cobb and Cooper are voluble, Cobb particularly amusing. The scene shifts to the ocean, where brawny sportsmen fish for the fighting tarpon, in exciting, backbreaking sport.—Running time, 10 minutes.

The Big Flash

Zippy and Funny

Besides marking the return of Harry Langdon, this comedy is an excursion into the technique of the silent days. Langdon as a combination janitor-assistant news photographer, is assigned to get a picture of a robbery for his newspaper. The way he considers and goes about his assignment creates a load of laughs and provides farcical entertainment for the kids as well as grownups. Everything is done as it shouldn't be done and in the most foolish way. The picture moves along in a zippy style. Careful restriction of the amount of dialogue coupled with abundant use of many of the oldtime gags that featured the silent short subjects gives the picture plenty to amuse your patrons.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Flowers and Trees

(United Artists)

Excellent

Among shorts, this number of the Silly Symphonies series from Walt Disney is worth special attention by any exhibitor. Unusual in execution and effectiveness, the subject is done in Technicolor with splendid results. The trees and flowers awake in the morning and there ensues a romance between two trees, while the ugly villainous tree becomes the menace and the flowers and birds come to the rescue. Excellent. This sets a new pace in animated short subjects.—Running time, 8 minutes.

The Mozelle

(Mary Warner)

Scenic Beauty

The beauty of the valley of the Moselle river has been carried faithfully to the screen in a production which blends the pictorial richness of castles looming in the background of the ribbony stream with the cheery industry of the people of the wine grape country. One notes less of the photographing of statues than is customary in the German-made screen travelogue. There is an accompanying lecture.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Announcing the Fall Buyers Number of BETTER THEATRES: NOV. 19

Quigley Publications is pleased to announce that the November 19th issue of Better Theatres will be the annual Fall Buyers Number. In design, this special issue will be of the same comprehensive, authoritative character that has established the Buyers Numbers of Better Theatres as the standard reference books of the motion picture theatre business. Published at a time when the motion picture industry has begun its 1932-33 season, the Fall Buyers Number will bring to its 12,000 exhibitor readers an editorial content built to be of practical aid in the industry's efforts toward a resumption of its normal pace.

The industry's standard theatre equipment directories —The Equipment Index and Theatre Supply Dealers— will appear in the Fall Buyers Number with all additions and changes necessary to make them complete and accurate for reference by those who buy equipment and other supplies for the theatre.

JENKINS' COLYUM

Neligh, Neb.

DEAR HERALD:

Well, we're back in the old home town. There has been considerable improvement in the town since we left, in spite of the depression. Mayor Hewitt has re-shingled his hen house, our wife's favorite mouser has increased the mouser population by six, Otto Hartman, the village sleuth, is still on the payroll and sits on the curb in front of Doc Reynolds' drug store and watches the cars run red signals and hasn't missed a show in the Moon theatre for six months. Everything is lovely and the turkeys roost on the city hall as usual. The whisker club members have run a lawn mower over their foliage and removed a suspicion that they were a bunch of bandits from Chicago. When it comes to improvements, you've got to hand it to our town.

As soon as we lit into town our old golf enemy, George Sellery, challenged us for the championship of northeast Nebraska. He's going to lose. All bets will be promptly covered.

Art Miller, who operates the Lyric theatre at Atkinson, says he has been trading show tickets for baled hay, but the market on baled hay has gone haywire which leaves him out on a limb with nothing to feed his hay to but three roosters and one hen. This looks bad for Art, but they can't keep that boy down. He's bound to run good programs in spite of H. & H. W., which is characteristic of all these Nebraska boys.

Georgia Rasely of the Royal theatre at O'Neill says that her "family night" has increased in attendance until it has blocked traffic and the authorities are threatening to do something about it. Georgia knows how to get 'em. She has a lovely theatre with excellent sound and nothing less would suit Georgia; she's built that way, and nothing less than the best in pictures holds any interest for her. She knows how to run a theatre and she has made O'Neill understand that.

Did you know that the American dollar is the most cowardly thing in the world? The time was when the American eagle was the emblem of courage, but when they stamped it on the American dollar it took a nosedive into the cellar and today a canary bird could chase it off the premises. The Government estimates that there are $1,765,000,000 that are not in the treasury nor in the banks, but are held in hiding somewhere. If this volume of money was turned loose in the channels of trade, this depression would be over with before your ham and eggs were ready for breakfast.

There are too many people who are using this depression talk as an excuse to panhandle the public and who wouldn't work if they had the best job in the world. Drive the highways of this country for a while and you will learn a lot about this class of citizens.

John Hoffman, who operates the Plainview theatre at Plainview, says he eats regularly three times a day except on Thursdays, that's the day his wife plays golf. On Thursdays he gets his own meals, which no doubt accounts for his dyspeptic condition. John used to have a stomach like a blue crane, but these Thursdays are apt to get him in time. John ought to overlook his wife's propensities for golf because of her drawing power at the Plainview's box office. She is said to shine very brilliantly on the links, but she is really at her best in the box office. She told us she would invite us out to play with her, but it was strictly "Ladies' Day." That's what a guy gets for not being a lady.

Sometimes kids say things that put a crimp in you. A little while ago our little granddaughter came in from school and we told her she'd better go home and get her mother and go down to the store for there was something down there for her. She asked what it was and we told her it was some candy and a pair of shoes. Then she whirled around and rushed for the door, saying, "Boy, watch me go home."

Tonight we are invited to make a talk at the Rotary club dinner. It has been suggested that we give a talk on Hollywood, and that's a big subject for one who is not a public speaker, but, anyhow, that's our subject. We are going to tell them that Hollywood is not half as bad as she has been pictured by the yellow journals. We will most likely tell them that Marie Dressler is a motherly old soul whom everybody loves, that Clark Gable has never applied for a divorce and doesn't intend to; that Polly Moran loves shamrocks and spinach; that Wallace Beery has adopted a couple of youngsters and an airplane; that Will Rogers talks Republican and votes Democratic; that Charlie Murray is wet, but doesn't let his family know it; that Louise Fazenda is the life of the party; that Al Christie uses flea powder on his Airdale pup; that Chic Sale has quit chewing Horseshoe tobacco; that Joe Brown and Winnie Lightner are the best comedy team in Hollywood outside of Marie and Polly, Zasu and Thelma and Stan and Oliver, and that makes them plenty good enough. That kind of speech ought to knock 'em on the floor, but we'll betcha we faint before it's over. There are just three things we don't like to do, and making a public speech is all three of 'em. So, brethren, we ask an interest in your prayers that we may hold out for 20 minutes, provided they stick that long.

It always chills us when we try
To make a public speech,
And note the articles that lie
Within the public's reach.
But we'll try and hold our wobbly legs
While the Rotary throws cold-storage eggs.

Gentlemen:

Last November I advertised in the November 28th issue of Motion Picture Herald, "Wanted, pipe organ for church. Address R. C. Maxwell, Luray, Va." This advertisement cost me just one dollar, but brought me twenty-five offers of organs. We purchased a pipe organ from one of the theatres which answered our ad.

Now our high school auditorium needs chairs. Let's see what results we can get from the ad enclosed, which I wish you would publish in the next issue of Motion Picture Herald.

I enclose a check for one dollar.

CHARLES E. ("CHICK") LEWIS, chairman and editor

OUR BED-TIME STORY!

COME, BROTHER SHOWMEN, and gather around your ol' Uncle Chick and list' to a bedtime story. Don't be frightened; the wolf won't leave little Red Riding Hood lying in a pool of blood. Nay, nay. Don't even be surprised if Little Red eats the wolf. Uncle Chick's bedtime stories have the funny habit of ending up in the most unexpected ways.

WONCT UPON A TIME there was a big, greedy willain who thought that he ought to own the earth. Although he was but an errand boy, he spent all his spare time counting the days when he would be the pivot about which the whole world would revolve. "Ah," sed he to hisself, "it won't be long now."

JUST WHAT WAS EATING at the innards of this willain? Was it lack of nourishment? No! Was it lack of money? No! Was it overwork? No! Then watinell was he crabbing about? He had money; he had plenty to eat; he had all the time in the world to relax. But he was greedy. Whenever he had an idea that someone else was doing well, he wanted to take away that someone else's business.

SO, ONE FINE DAY he gathered about him seven hundred and thirty-two lieutenants—and a couple of privates—and started them out on a scouting trip to take options on everything they could lay their hands on. Of course, it was to the willain's credit and foresight that he forget(?) to mention where the money was coming from to pick up all those options. But, being an obedient army, they sallied forth and did his bidding.

SOON HIS GREAT AMBITION was realized. He owned eighty-five per cent of the earth. And was he glad! I'm telling, not asking. So he divided his army into territories, divisions, districts and what have you and bought hissenself a swell swivel chair with a good thick cushioned seat, and bought a few dozen telephones and push buttons for his desk. Just so he could look important when the occasion demanded it.

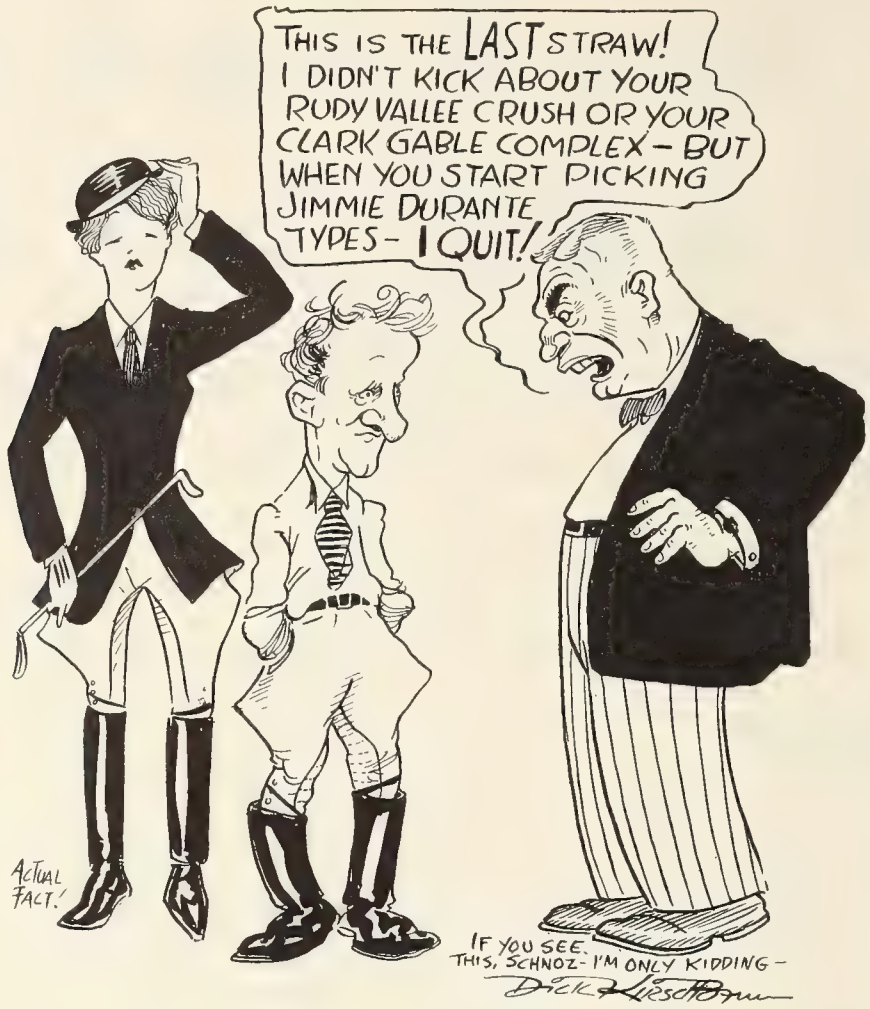
WELL, LITTLE BOYS and goils, at first everything wuz hunkey-doorey. His big hunk of the earth wuz producing grand profits. He pushed buttons and made 'phone calls. He listened to gossip and listened to rumors. He hired and fired and supervised; and, little children, it would raise the hair on your heads to know how this bird could hire, fire and "soup." It became a fetish with him. And his "louies" soon caught the germ themselves until the map of his eighty-five per cent interest in the world was a real checker-board.

WHY HADN'T HE THOUGHT of this monopoly business long before? Wuz he sore that he waited so long? Why it wuz a cinch. All you had to do was to take options and then find someone with enough cash to take them up when the time came due. His slice of the world was doing so well that even the banks broke their necks (and their banks, too) to offer him fabulous sums to keep that checkerboard moving.

BUT, CAME A CERTAIN SUMMER. Business all over the country took the well-known nose-dive. Grosses dipped to lows never before thought possible. Factories were closing down. Industries were at a standstill. Spending-money was getting scarcer than hen's teeth. And before many weeks went by this willain began to feel the effect whilst sitting on that padded seat of his swivel chair.

THE MONEY STOPPED COMING in and started an about face, not alone for the profits that remained from the more prosperous days, but from the reserves and banks. He became panic-stricken and started economy drives, salary cutting, money-saving and what not on a scale even more daring than his acquisition of the earth. But the more he saved the more his economy measures were hurting the income.

YEAH, LITTLE CHILDREN, 'twas indeed a sad plight. Little by little he was losing pieces of his earth. Little by little the money men and banks were closing in on him. But, worst of all, his own hunk of the earth was unsympathetic. They seemed to delight in his embarrassment and trouble. Maybe they were recalling all of those economy measures and salary cuts. Far be it from me to hint at such a thing. But at any rate, he was fast losing his grip and his earth was slipping through his fingers.



THE ONCE POWERFUL willain is now out job-hunting himself. Most of the earth has been returned to its original owners. Everything is again getting back to normal. They have almost forgotten the reign of terror, abuse, inconsideration and injustice which prevailed during the rule of the willain.

SO, LITTLE CHILDREN, let this be a lesson to you. Be content to be the little fish in a big pond. The chances of being hooked are much smaller. And if you ever find yourself wanting to own the earth, just remember what happens to such people and be guided accordingly.

Now run off to your beds, and pleasant dreams. Good night.

"CHICK"

DICK KIRSCHBAUM'S LOBBY LAFFS!

Just what Dick wanted to convey in this cartoon is rather vague, but we've got the utmost confidence that it must be good, or he would never have tackled it. However, here it is. Maybe it will prompt your assistant to do bigger and better things for you and your theatre.

GILLIS WAS ON THE JOB WHEN MERCHANTS STAGED FALL OPENING

When the Merchants Association in his city staged their Fall Opening campaign, Al W. Gillis, manager of the Fox-Rialto Theatre, Tacoma, Wash., was right on the job to tie-in with the event.

In a big parade, in which several bands took part, Gillis had seventeen banners advertising his theatre and current and coming attractions. The accompanying illustration shows a Veterans' Band and a portion of the parade halted in front of the Rialto.

Both the Veterans' band and the Musicians Union Band of 40 pieces were featured in theatre ads in the local newspaper. It was planned to bring vaudeville (F. & M. acts) back to the Rialto and Gillis made a big noise concerning the possibilities of this if good business resulted from Campaign Week.

"Devil and the Deep" was current at the Rialto when "Opportunity Week" was on and the resourceful Al enlightened the good citizens of Tacoma with sight of an "exact replica" of the drum used to take undersea scenes in the picture. In reality, it was part of an old heating plant, rigged up with light (on a flasher) camera inside the drum, and painted a silver color. This was placed in front of the Broadway Theatre, across the court from the Rialto, and caused considerable comment.

The next time you read of activities of Al Gillis in this department, notice of leading participation on his part in the Fox-West Coast Theatre Drive, under way for some time, will probably appear. At the time this was written the Northwestern division was 'way out in front and Al's district led all of the 24. We know for a fact that Frank L. Newman has a bunch of go-getters in his zone and it shapes up like prize money for him and his managers. We'll tell you more next time.

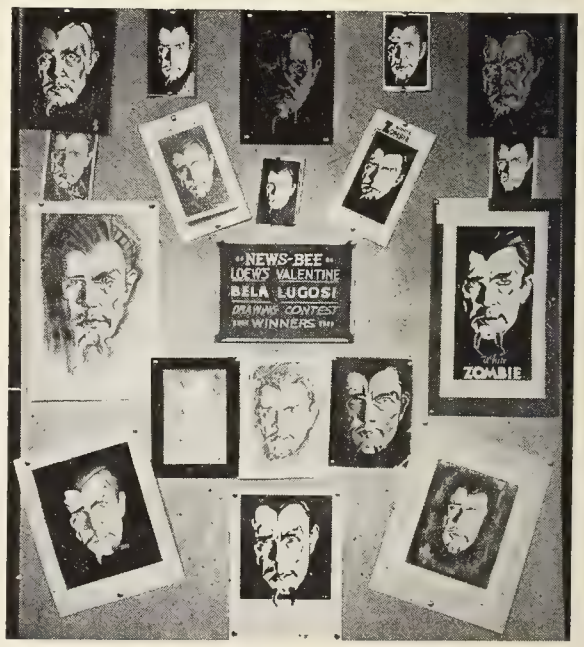
BARTHOLET IN CHARGE

Arch Bartholet, formerly manager of the Inland Theatre Circuit's house at Yakima, Wash., has been appointed by Senior and Junior Mercy, division manager of all theatres in the Yakima Valley. He will continue to make his headquarters at Yakima.

Bartholet is a well known member of this organization and his views and suggestions regarding showbusiness have been read by a host of fellow Round Tablers. Their good wishes follow him in his promotion to the new post, and without a doubt all houses in his zone are due to prosper under his diligent direction.

LAURENCE STAGED A BIG FASHION SHOW; SAYS VAUDE HELPED

Like most of our Club members these days, H. L. Laurence, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Paris, Tenn., has his shoulder to the wheel, and, although the wheel has been turning rather slowly at times, it has kept turning; which, after all, is quite a lot to crow about.



Among the thousand-and-one methods he tried out to boost trade was a big fashion show, in which over fifty models took part. Three or four of the young ladies were imported from each of the nearby towns, thus assuring a percentage of out-of-town patronage. Ten local merchants supported the move and it turned out to everyone's satisfaction. Stage attractions consisted of an 11-piece orchestra, several novelty acts and toe, tap and ballet dancing by pupils from a local dance studio.

This past year vaudeville has also helped Laurence over the tough spots; in fact, we are led to believe that without it the situation would have been much sadder. Well, anyway, the natives are talking higher prices for cotton, tobacco, corn and sweet potatoes, all of which are the big crops down around Paris, and things are looking up. With him we sincerely voice the hope for better times, which are sure to come along. Keep up the good work, H. L., and let's hear from you just as often as you can find the time.

He's Knockin' 'Em Dead!

Only in the town of Kenton a short six weeks and has everyone eating out of his hand already. Yes, sir! Grattan Johnston is his name and he's a product of the old school of Glenn (Findlay) Nelson. That a boy Glenn! Up on your toes and develop another protege. Warner Bros. always have a place for Live Wire men and you can be mighty proud of this one for he's sure doing a swell job!

CARTOON GAG!

Above is a reproduction of the winning cartoons in a Bela Lugosi drawing contest promoted by Wally Caldwell, manager of the Valentine Theatre, Toledo, through a tie-up with a leading local newspaper on "White Zombie." According to Caldwell, the several hundred sketches submitted broke all drawing contest records for the paper.

CHELLE JANIS PUT OVER "LAUGH RACE" AT LOEW'S CENTURY

Held just before schools reopened in the fall, a kiddie stunt styled a "Laugh Race," netted a lot of good publicity for Miss Chelle Janis, manager of Loew's Century Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y. She was assisted in her work by Lewis A. Doran, assistant manager. Here are the details:

On Saturday morning, Sept. 10, at 11 a. m., several hundred youngsters lined up in front of the theatre to receive a small, numbered envelope that contained 9 jelly beans, portions of some 30 pounds promoted from a neighborhood ice cream and candy store. Each kiddie brought along a teaspoon from home, on which the jelly beans were placed (a tight fit, so the report states) and the howling mob was herded into an area designated by the police and started off down Nostrand avenue in the direction of Church avenue, the object being to discover how many of the kids could get back to the theatre with the 9 beans still on the spoon and thereby gain free admission to the current show.

The laughing, shouting horde made a wide circuit of the neighborhood, even invading the zone of an opposition house with six large banners advertising the current attraction. All along the route of the race people watched and poked their heads out of windows to see what was going on. On their return to the theatre about fifty of the youngsters were admitted to see the show and partake of fifty ice cream sodas and twenty-five bags of cakes promoted from local stores.

As the kids who were not let in still milled about in front of the theatre, a blackboard was posted outside bearing numbers picked at random up to 700. Those with the proper numbers were given free ice cream, etc.

The remainder of the youngsters having paid to come into the morning show, it was a "howling" success from all angles. The kids had a great time, the entire neighborhood was amused and the theatre and current show received some corking publicity from the race and word-of-mouth advertising. Congratulations to Miss Janis for putting over such a novel stunt, and we'll hope to hear a lot more about her work at the Century.

HARVEY WATKINS IS GETTING ALONG WELL OVER IN PROVIDENCE

On the same newspaper amusement page tear sheet we have at hand, featuring in a two column head the "Twins" and Albee show, a three column photo and caption at the bottom shows Watkins, recently arrived in town, receiving the official welcome to Providence from Mayor Dunne at the City Hall, while Eddie Healey of the Healey and Cross team and a former resident of the city, looks on.

To all appearances it didn't take Harvey Watkins long to find his way around town, but that's not strange considering his background as a showman. No doubt his Twin Night was a "howling" success. Fifty-five sets of young'uns are a whole lot to dig up on short notice. We will hope to hear more about show-selling at the Albee.

HE SELLS HERALD'S "CHAMPIONS"

THIS is the manner in which L. A. Richmond, manager of the National Theatre, Boston, Mass., capitalizes on MOTION PICTURE HERALD's Box Office Champions. He definitely ties each month's selections to his coming attractions, thereby publicizing the fact that his theatre runs the cream of the industry's crop. We illustrate herewith the large and impressive lobby frame utilized by Mr. Richmond to convey to his patrons, and prospective patrons, this valuable information. A real example of showmanship.

BRODIE FEATURED A GIVEAWAY AND BALLY IN RECENT CAMPAIGN

The unique bally of two men dressed in a horse outfit (see photo) dragging around a tip cart such as used by street cleaning departments, attracted a lot of public attention to "Horsefeathers" for Ellis Brodie, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Haverhill, Mass.

This chariot-like affair, driven by a fellow dressed in comedy outfit and wearing a Harpo Marx red wig, circulated through the main sections of the theatre neighborhood and was placed on the street at small cost. Only the driver and the team were paid for time put in, as the tipcart and costumes were promoted at no charge to theatre.

Another stunt used was a Gift Matinee, at which cigarette lighters were given to the first 100 men and Marx Brothers coat hangers to the first 100 women. At first glance this appears to be a most generous move on part of Showman Brodie, but when we disclose that the lighters were matches, placed in small envelopes, and the coat hangers nails, you'll understand. However, the nature of the picture was taken into consideration by patrons and not one of them voiced any comment about having been tricked into believing that the management intended making a more elaborate gift; rather, they displayed a pronounced tendency to pass the gag along to friends. This brought about a lot of word-of-mouth advertising.

Additional advance and opening day effort included the spotting of a trailer in the newsreel 10 days in advance, which featured a "quiet, please" opening and then proceeded to a merry mix-up of comedy scenes; the running of a newspaper stunt to guess title of next Marx Brothers picture; use of an attractive still display in empty store next to theatre; use of four large cut-out heads of Marx Brothers from regular 24-sheet for front display, and a little-more-than-usual space in newspaper advertising campaign.

It's very gratifying to hear from Round Tabler Brodie again after several weeks' absence from the Club circle and we hope he'll keep up the good work.

Reward Offered!

A suitable reward is hereby offered for the safe return of a file of Club pages that mysteriously vanished a few weeks ago from the office of H. Cavanaugh, advertising manager of the RKO Orpheum Theatre, Des Moines, Iowa. A dastardly deed, say we, particularly in view of the fact that H. C. has been saving up "ads from other cities" over a considerable period.

"THE FOURTH NECESSITY"

Curiosity getting the best of me, I slipped in on a screening of that General Motors short subject, "The Fourth Necessity." They have certainly made an interesting nine minutes out of the progress of American motor cars, and, best of all, there is not the slightest taint of advertising about the entire action of the picture.

Here is, in our opinion, an excellent short subject that could grace the program of any theatre in the land. It is entertaining, interesting and, to a certain extent, educational as well. It takes you back to the days of the horseless carriage, with its incidental problems—and there were plenty of them, too—right through the years until the present day with its ultra-smart cars.

It is as fine a piece of screen fare as one could hope to book and you can get it entirely without cost, even so far as shipping expense is concerned. I do not hesitate to recommend it to every theatre for an early showing. From advance reports on bookings we are suggesting that you get your dates in right away.

"CHICK"

COLLINS AND JACK CHALMAN PUT OVER PREMIERE CAMPAIGN

With exception of the banner occasions of New Year and Thanksgiving Days, the following campaign made on "Horsefeathers" by E. E. Collins, Publix city manager in Houston, Tex., and manager of the Metropolitan Theatre, brought in the best single day's business of the year. Collins was ably assisted by Publicity Director Jack Chalman. The Met was chosen for the southern premiere of the picture.

The accompanying photo shows one of the highlights of the campaign. This display was approximately 25 feet high by 25 feet wide, with background painted in oil. The four heads of the Marx Brothers, out about five feet from the back-drop, were made of papier-mache. The grotesque, small bodies attached to the heads were animated and moved in unison from side to side. At night the whole display was lighted with spotlights (from marquee) and olivettes. The local art shop turned out such a good job that duplicate sets of the heads were supplied by the Met for Dallas, San Antonio, New Orleans, Fort Worth and Sioux Falls, S. D.

Advance and opening day activities included radio broadcast of the midnight show direct from theatre, with announcement of local celebrities as they arrived; parade of Legion drum corps through main streets and drill by corps in front of theatre; introduction of local celebrities at theatre, including "Panther Woman" contest winner; assignment of photographer to take shots of crowd, using flares and fake flashlight shots; lighting of entire front with all possible stage lighting equipment; display of telegrams from Paramount stars; floral displays throughout house; red carpet placed from box office to curb; assignment of cartoonist from newspaper staff to sketch impressions of local celebrities as they arrived; use of a 10 by 14 banner below vertical sign; pasting of 500 gummed circles on vacant downtown windows, etc.; distribution of 15,000 heralds by bonded distributing agency; ushers and soda men with ribbons advertising Paramount's Entertainment Season; distribution of 5,000 programs in connection with auto-give-away; three advance announcements daily over two radio stations; all advance lobby posters carried circles on premiere; use of institutional panel three weeks in advance; use of 10 16-inch circles, lettered on both sides with appropriate copy, and the posting of 21 24's, 50 6's, 100 3's, 100 institutional 3's, 200 22 by 28's and 50 street car dash signs.

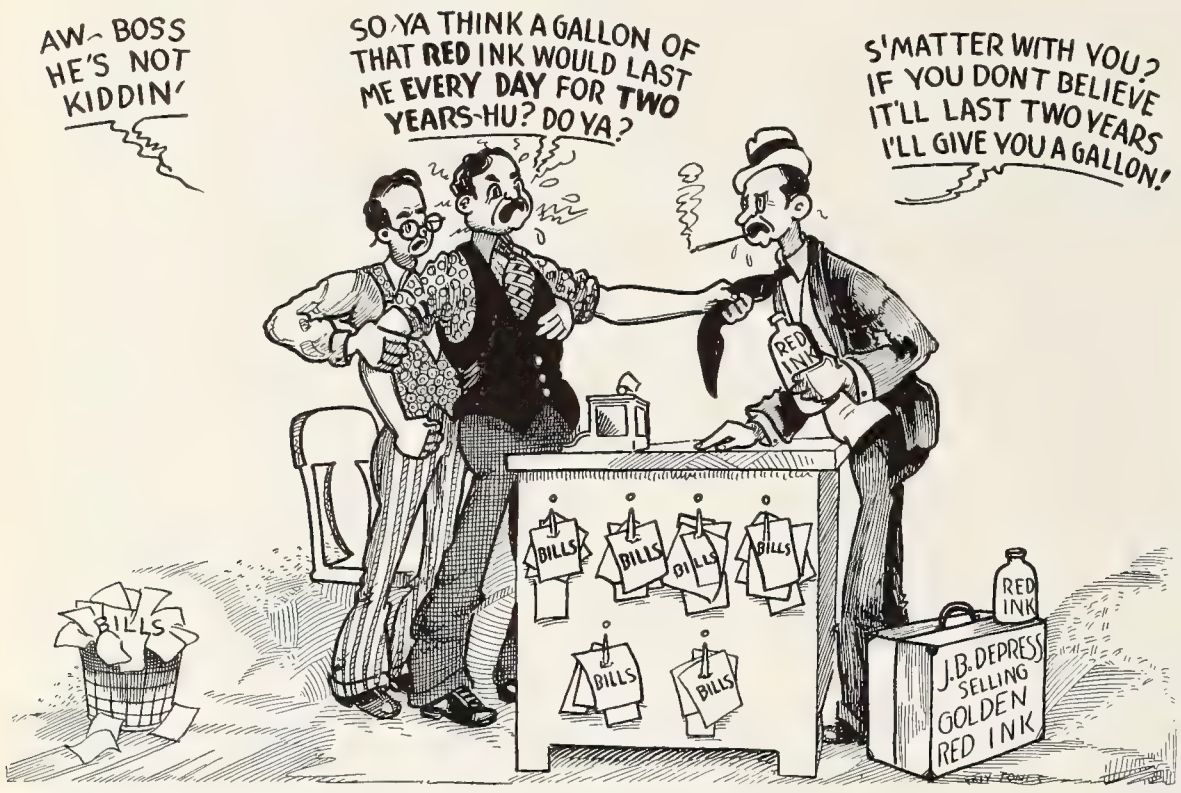
Quite a splurge, most all will agree, but the occasion was a combination of a premiere and send-off for Paramount Entertainment Season and no effort was spared to make the event a success. Many of the accessories used in the campaign were promoted free of charge by Collins and Chalman and both showmen are to be congratulated for their fine work. Local newspapers gave them excellent support with news stories and readers. The presence of the cartoonist at the midnight show and a preview for the critics helped this end of the campaign along in great shape.



REOPENING STUNT!

Picture above shows a newsreel outfit making a record of the reopening of the Europa Theatre, formerly the Little Theatre of Baltimore, Md. A popular local columnist made a brief speech of praise for the house policy. Manager Herman G. Weinberg engineered this stunt.

KEEPING UP WITH THE TIMES!

By GUY JONES

After a hectic summer you can't really blame this manager.

ED. HART IS SELLING SHOWS UP AT HAVEN THEATRE, OLEAN, N. Y.

Any mystery concerning the whereabouts of E. M. Hart, once a most consistent contributor to this department, is at once dispelled by a report from Olean, N. Y., where, we are informed, he's managing the Haven Theatre and showing the town a few slants on the Hart brand of showmanship.

One of the accompanying illustrations offers evidence that he still regards Boy Scout and kindred organizations an effective medium of tie-up for costless ballyhoo. The photo is self-explanatory except for a statistic or two. Fifty-two newsboys and six troops of Boy Scouts paraded through the streets with the big banner you see, all on their way to the Haven as guests for a showing of "Bring 'Em Back Alive."

The other picture also explains itself to a large extent and is concerned with exploitation of "Crooner." In addition to the huge megaphone extending from middle of theatre entrance more than half-way across the sidewalk, note the singer and his guitar, the mike for projecting his voice through the megaphone and the man standing by with sheet music of popular song hits of the show. While no information is at hand to bear out the following, Hart apparently tied-up with the local music dealer on this stunt.

We're mighty glad to hear from Ed Hart again and hope he is happy in his new location. Wherever he happens to be, we know he'll give a most excellent account of himself and, at the same time, remember that he's a member of the Round Table Club.

SCHLAX NEEDED NEW EQUIPMENT AND GOT IT THROUGH A STUNT

In need of a new, large screen and lenses which were denied him at the time because of old man hard times, Francis B. Schlax, manager of the Vogue Theatre, Kenosha, Wis., remembered that cats are killed by various methods and consequently secured the gadgets he wanted by virtue of a bit of head-work.

His staff consists of two operators, a cashier, a doorman and two ushers, and to them he outlined a plan whereby the screen and lenses might be secured. This was in the nature of a "Staff Popularity Contest" and tickets for the Week were sold three weeks in advance at the rate of 25c. each. The regular admission rate at the Vogue is 15c. for the first hour during the evening and 25c. thereafter.

Awards for ten dollars and five dollars were made to the staff members selling the most tickets and for an extra inducement a two and one-half cent commission was allowed. It wasn't so easy, reports Schlax, to put the stunt over, in view of the bargain hour, but they did, and by this time the new equipment has been installed.

Distribution of a plugger in the German and Italian neighborhood catered to by the Vogue, netted packed houses both nights for a return engagement of "Tarzan, the Ape Man." Copy on the bill read:

"We Apologize! If you were hurt in the crowd, Sunday, August 14th, which tried to get in our theatre to see and hear that Thrilling Jungle Picture, 'Tarzan, the Ape Man,' we are indeed sorry. For the many people who waited hour after hour and then became weary and left without seeing Johnny Weissmuller—the Swimming Adonis—in the featured role of 'Tarzan' but—If You Were Unfortunate—and unable to witness this new and sensational idea of Screen entertainment on Aug. 14 when hundreds were turned away, here is great news for you. Due to popular demand—by the many theatre-goers of Kenosha who were unable to witness this thrilling story of the jungle, we are playing a return engagement." (Title, playdates and theatre.)

While other theatre owners may be more generously inclined in respect to replacements (Schlax operates for an independent owner) his scheme for providing funds he could not otherwise procure may interest other Club members who find themselves in the same predicament. Certainly, we'll all agree that welfare of patrons was uppermost in his mind, when he started a movement to provide equipment which would allow him to present a better show—much praise is also due his staff for close co-operation.

ELECTION DAY (Nov. 8th)

This is just a reminder in case you have forgotten to make some plans for this date and your theatre. Being the year of a Presidential Election makes it unusually important.

The fight for the nation's highest office is going to be close if the newspapers are to be believed. Your patrons will most certainly want to know how it is going.

Arrange for a direct line through the newspaper of your town or install a radio in your own office. Flash on screen, announce from the stage or through sound equipment horns, the returns from various parts of the country. The holding of a straw vote among theatre patrons has also proven a popular move on the part of many Club members. Ballots for an occasion of this sort can often be promoted through an ad tie-up with some local merchant. A number of film distributors have ready political-theme pictures. Are you playing these off in season?

Do not overlook the local elections. City, county and state are likewise of great interest. Much can be done to bring patrons to your theatre on election night if you make the right kind of inducements.

MAKING HALLOWE'EN COUNT FOR INCREASED BUSINESS AND FUN!

Nutcracking, Apple Ducking, Jack O'Lantern and a Host of Other Reasons Why You Should Make Hallowe'en Pay

These Tried and Proven Ideas Have Come Through in Past Years for Others; Make Them Mean Something for You, Too

by FLOYD FITZSIMMONS

Here is another important link in the exploitation manual chain from the prolific pen of Floyd Fitzsimmons. Written by a man who has devoted many years to just this type of activity, Fitzsimmons is well qualified to "show the way."

There will be a limited number of reprints on this, as well as all other Fitzsimmons manuals. Requests must be made on business letterheads and should not be for more than is actually needed.

AS an introduction to this Hallowe'en stuff, lets skim over a few interesting facts we should know about its origin, etc.

The name Hallowe'en is given to the night of October 31, as the eve or vigil of all Saints' or All Hallows Day, (Nov. 1). Hallowe'en is a curious recrudescence of classic mythology, Druidic beliefs, and Christias superstitions. It was also the great autumn festival to the sun which the Druids celebrated in thanksgiving for their harvest. They believed it the very best time of the whole year for discovering just what sort of a husband or wife one is to be blessed withal. They practiced matrimonial vaticinations of all sorts. Most common of all and most intimately associated with the season was the roasting of nuts. They were placed together on the bar of a grate side by side in pairs, and named for supposed lovers. If a nut burned quietly and brightly it indicated sincerity of affection. If it cracked and jumped it told of unfaithfulness. While if the nuts burned together the youth and maid so indicated will be married. "These glowing nuts are emblems true, of what in human life we view" (Chas. Graydon, 1801). So much for Nutcrack Night . . . and why.

Next to nuts in importance came apples. At least they did in those days. Numerous games are familiar to all of you with this noble fruit even today. So . . . Snapple Night!

Hobgoblins, witches and ghosts represented the "bad times" which were obliterated by the good fairies. Nowadays this witchery has been supplanted by superstition. But like the Druids of old, we continue to celebrate Hallowe'en as a day of happiness, good times, and amusement. Thus, we turn to the theatre. Our own country has been severely criticized for a spirit of rowdyism which has in a measure superseded the kindly old customs.

Decorative Displays

This is one day of the year which offers a variety of appropriate displays at a minimum cost. Practically everything can be done in the way of lobby and front decorations with paper, scissors, paste and a few vegetables.

Cutouts of black cats, witches, owls, bats and scarecrows can be pasted onto transparent yellow or orange tissue set in the glass of doors. Paper Jack O'Lanterns can be effectively used over regular lights in your lobby. Place a Jack O'Lantern pumpkin on the top of your ticket chopper or box, so that the ticket-taker may drop them into the lighted pumpkin.

Your ticket office can join in the fun with the proper dress. How about a huge cardboard Jack O'Lantern pumpkin for the top of the box-office . . . built directly around it or covering that part usually seen by patrons? The bottom below the ticket window can be surrounded with cornstalks. Dress your cashier in appropriate Hallowe'en costume . . . bright colored dress with crepe-paper hat, etc. The pumpkin with usual cutout eyes, nose and mouth will present a novel display. Huge, glaring eyes can be painted on transparent paper through which the box-office light will shine. The mouth of the Jack O'Lantern pumpkin can be set at a level with the ticket window to eliminate any difficulty in the interchange of cash and tickets. Use a full cornstalk dress if you haven't facilities for making a huge Jack O'Lantern.

Cornstalks, real pumpkins and squash can be used for lobby decorations to accentuate the spirit of the evening's fun. The top of your marquee can be decorated for the occasion by Jack O'Lantern pumpkins, piles of cornstalks, etc. More atmosphere can be added by cutting the title of your picture into paper pumpkins which are hung from the marquee.

Dress ushers, ticket-taker and other help in witch costumes or ghost costumes for the occasion.

Fortune Teller

Telling fortunes is an indispensable feature of the Hallowe'en frolic. Scout around town and find someone who tells fortunes . . . perhaps you know a tea room which would be glad of supplying that feature in exchange for credit. Many towns have them. Arrange for the seeress to tell fortunes in the lobby that night free of charge. This gag will require sufficient space and should be augmented with the proper booth, etc. An ordinary folding clotheshorse draped with sheets makes an inexpensive and satisfactory booth. The back and sides are draped with the sheets, the front is draped with black crepe paper dotted with ghostly figures. If possible secure a caldron for inside the booth. Cornstalks can be used to bank the booth at the same time holding the draped sheets in place.

Make sure the fortunes are not lengthy. Everyone will want an interview with the seeress.

Jack O'Lantern Contest

Several days in advance of Hallowe'en arrange with your local newspaper or dealers handling Hallowe'en novelties to hold a O'Lantern. If the local newspaper is infourteen. Suitable gifts will be given to those who make the most unique Jack O'Lantern. If the local newspaper is interested in tying in with you on the stunt they will undoubtedly co-operate with publicity. Your Hallowe'en attraction and program will come in for mention here.

Start the contest far enough in advance so word-of-mouth publicity will have covered sufficient territory. As the Jack O'Lanterns are turned in . . . either at the newspaper or the theatre they can be used for displays. Judges for the contest can be selected from the paper, local women's club and possibly grammar school teachers.

Should you be unable to secure the cooperation of the newspaper this stunt is adaptable for tie-up with elementary schools.

Novel Invitation

This gag has been worked for various types of pictures and in many exploitation campaigns. It can be made an effective one for your Hallowe'en party nevertheless. Have printed on envelopes of cheap stock the following message . . . the number printed will depend upon the size of your town or neighborhood:

NOW WHAT ON EARTH DO YOU SUPPOSE IS IN THIS LITTLE FOLDER?
JUST KEEP RIGHT ON AND YOU'LL FIND OUT.
ERE YOU'RE A MINUTE OLDER.
TEAR THE FLAP AND THEN YOU'LL KNOW.
OH, GEE! AREN'T YOU EXCITED?
WE ENTERTAIN ON HALLOWE'EN
AND THIS MEANS YOUR INVITED!
STRAND THEATRE

There is always the possibility of an apple bobbing or pie eating contest being held on the stage. This bit of hilarious entertainment can be limited to ten minutes if necessary. Undoubtedly there are enough boys in your neighborhood who'll gladly enter either of these contests. Suitable awards can be made to winners.

Are the women of your town good pie bakers? How about a pumpkin pie contest? Here's a possible tie-up with a grocer . . . or better yet . . . your local newspaper. The women of Blanktown are to vie for honors in a pumpkin pie contest, the winner of which will receive a cash award or silver cup donated by the theatre and newspaper. All pies are to be turned in at the theatre on Hallowe'en. Judges can be a baker, newspaper representative, possibly the High School Domestic Teacher and the local Health Commissioner or a prominent Doctor.

All contestants must send in with each pie a list of the ingredients used and the name of the particular brand. This will afford the newspaper an opportunity of securing an ad or two after the winner has been named. This point will assist you in selling the idea to the paper.

HALLOWE'EN IDEAS!

To save time, pies most likely to be winners can be picked or set aside prior to the final selection on the stage. Or, if it is more convenient all pies can be turned in to the newspaper. The actual announcement of the winners being made from the stage on Hallowe'en.

Goodwill and a maximum of publicity can be gained by turning all pies over to an orphan asylum or some other charitable institution immediately after the contest is over. If there are enough pies to make a good news story . . . you can attract further attention by using a bannered truck to make the delivery to the institution on behalf of the newspaper and theatre. Try getting a picture of the pie loaded truck in the newspaper.

It is understood that all publicity prior to Hallowe'en and the naming of the contest winner should tie in directly with your program.

Parade for Kids

If you are not afraid of too strongly stressing the kiddie angle to your Hallowe'en program here is a splendid stunt with no little advertising value. It is aided considerably where you have a Kiddie Club of some sort to work with. But whether or not you have the idea is this:

Arrange to hold a Jack O'Lantern parade from some designated point in town to your theatre on Hallowe'en. This for kids under fourteen. Select an early hour for the parade as parents are apt to object to their youngsters remaining out at a late hour. Notify the children either through your local newspaper, heralds or an announcement in a trailer. The inducement for those who enter the parade will be Guest Tickets to your theatre. If you are unable to accommodate them on that night, make the tickets good for some future program or showing of the same picture (if appropriate). You might conveniently arrange for a special Saturday A.M. matinee following Hallowe'en.

Suggest the children bring along any noise makers they can get. Try promoting a number of inexpensive whistles, horns, etc., from a novelty merchant in exchange for credits in the way of stickers on the noise makers.

Banners can be carried by the larger boys with copy along these lines: Going to the BLANK THEATRE to celebrate Hallowe'en and see Harold Lloyd in "Movie Crazy."

Other awards can be made to those who bring the largest, the funniest and most grotesque Jack o'Lanterns.

Corn Husking Contest

Much merriment will be found if you can conveniently hold a corn husking contest on your stage. Secure a number of ears of corn, place them in a pile on the stage and invite women or men (separately) from the audience to come up and try their hand at husking. Set a time limit . . . the person husking the greatest number of ears within that time wins the championship.

You can elaborate on this idea, co-operating with the newspaper if possible. In farm communities it should go big. A few handbills will assist in advance publicity should the paper turn you down.

Speaking of farm communities, there will be many exhibitors in the vicinity of State and County Fairs during the month of October. If there are any unusual displays attracting special attention, arrange to use these in your lobby after the fair is over and in advance of your Hallowe'en celebration. You might also arrange to invite the farmers who raised the winning produce to the theatre. This could be done in conjunction with the newspaper and Chamber of Commerce. The publicity would help signally in attracting attention to your program.

Kiddies Costume Matinee

Here is another Hallowe'en stunt previously used with much success. Arrange to hold a costume contest for kiddies from three to seven and from seven to twelve years of age. In the first group awards can be made for the prettiest costume and the funniest costume. In the larger group awards for the most original costume and the most grotesque costume.

Possibly you can interest the newspaper in sponsoring this party for the kiddies. If not you can easily and successfully announce the affair through your trailer, regular newspaper ads and a throw-away. Try to present small cash awards. The inducement is considerably strengthened when this is done. In your announcement copy be sure to play up your attraction along with the Costume Matinee . . . and too, that older members of the family are going to enjoy the big show equally as much as the youngsters.

Selection of judges for this event is left to you. Where possible it would be well to use a local Child Welfare worker as one of them.

The foregoing Hallowe'en suggestions have been offered to assist you in making an event of the day with an eye to the box-office. If you choose, many of the ideas can be worked over a period of a week, using them as a build-up for your Hallowe'en attraction and program of special events.

SAVE THIS ONE FROM MANAGER PAUL KUNZE FOR THE NEXT ECLIPSE

It's not only late to let readers know about what one Club member did to offset opposition brought about by the recent eclipse of the sun by the moon but daisies may be sprouting on the majority of us when this extraordinary attraction is again billed as the greatest show on earth; however, we must go on record that Paul Kunze, manager of the Old Colony Theatre, Plymouth, Mass., had his wits working to stave off utter ruin for his matinee trade on that eventful last day of August.

Instead of a complete flop business was a little better than normal for the afternoon. The only cost was a small charge for film, eyelets and rubber fasteners being fixed up by theatre help. Credit for the idea, Paul advises, goes to Raymond Allard, chief projectionist, who has been with Kunze for the past five years.

HAUSCHILD IS NOW IN FULL STRIDE ON NEW SEASON FILMS

After a shutdown for two months during the summer, Thor Hauschild, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Steubenville, Ohio, reopened with "Horsefeathers." Here's some high lights of his campaign.

Two weeks in advance he built a large set piece, containing selling copy for the opening, stills, title and star name cards, and placed it in a large, lighted window on the main street. Ten days prior he posted 200 two-sheets in select locations about town, in neighboring towns and along all main highways, and, at the same time, placed 200 large window cards in windows, on highway poles and on street cars, busses and taxis. One week prior to opening, four large, empty windows on the main street were used for head cut-outs made from exchange paper.

One day before opening Hauschild also used a very effective bally, consisting of a boy-acrobat dressed to resemble one of the Marx Brothers. During his four days' work he performed (see photo) on a high ladder against a building on the main street at the peak of business hours—flirting, clowning on a small hobby-horse, and making himself conspicuous as possible. At all times he carried a sign on his back to plug the theatre and picture.

We're glad to hear that Hauschild is back in the saddle again and we and his fellow Club members will look forward to reading many accounts of his show-selling efforts during the new season. What say, Thor? Can we count on you?

HALL PROMOTED BIG CO-OP AS PART OF JUBILEE CAMPAIGN

Paramount Jubilee Week was made the occasion for promotion of a corking double truck by W. H. Hall, of the Paramount Theatre, Texarkana, Tex.

Across the top of the spread was the headline, "Get Ready for the Gold Rush—during Paramount's Jubilee Week—six golden days of entertaining and profitable surprises." Fully 40 per cent of the page was devoted to space advertising current and coming attractions and the stage show features for the week. The balance was given over to boxed ads from a wide assortment of local merchants.

Added attractions for the week included a stage wedding and the second annual revue put on by pupils of a local dancing school. Friday the big event consisted of a beauty pageant, in which 50 girls vied for honors.

INCREASING RECEIPTS WITH ART!

Harry Browne Finds Attractive Displays Actually Create B.O. Results When Done Effectively!

WHETHER or not you are fortunate enough to boast of the services of an experienced art man, you will agree that display work such as we are reproducing here is certainly a decided asset to any theatre. You need only close your eyes and visualize the possibilities of this sort of display work to best appreciate the effectiveness of such fine work, especially under showmanlike lighting to better emphasize its value as a business-getter.

Harry E. Browne, manager of the Fox Stanford Theatre in Palo Alto, California, is the Club member to whom we are grateful for the opportunity of passing along these swell examples of art work. Harry does not inform us whether he is the genius who turned out these displays so we are at a loss to pass along the proper credits. So if Browne will advise who his artist is we will make due mention of him at the earliest moment.

"Washington Masquerade"

Taking these displays one by one we find that the "Washington Masquerade" consisted of a six-foot head of Lionel Barrymore and a twelve-foot width of the Capitol buildings against a background of gold cloth with stills of eleven by fourteen's in the foreground. Incidentally, your imagination should need little stirring to picture what an effect this display must have been with good baby spots against that gold cloth. You must never forget the importance of proper and effective lighting for this kind of displays, or any kind, for that matter. Lighting is many times as important as the art work itself.

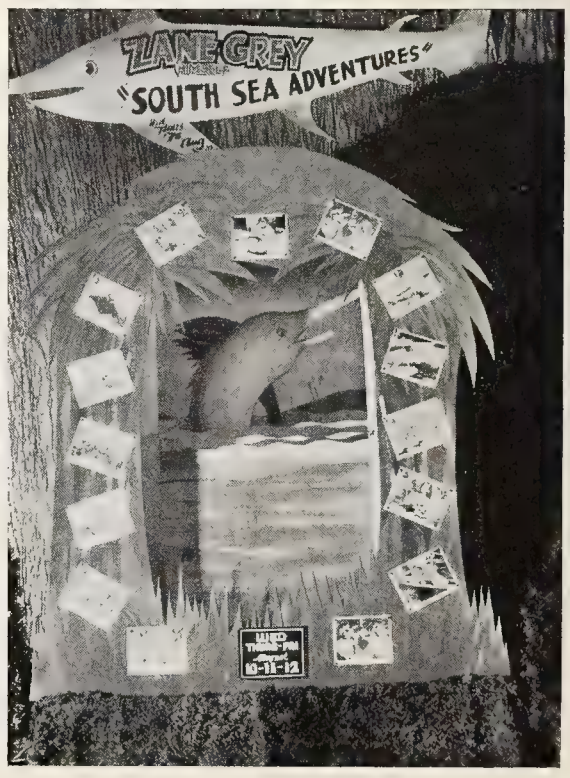
"Jewel Robbery"

The next in line for discussion is the one on "The Jewel Robbery." This was achieved by excellent likenesses on the cutouts, against a background that helped the display considerably with what appears to be a rug. On the finger of Kay Francis you will note that Browne hung a Woolworth pearl necklace. Just a little touch that makes for effectiveness. Otherwise you can see for yourself what the rest of the display consisted of. Incidentally, the man on the right of this photo is Browne himself.

Olympic Tie-up

The next display is probably the one that caught your eye first. Meaning the one with all those track figures which immediately reminded you of the recent Olympics. Well, that's exactly what it was supposed to remind people of when they saw it in the lobby of the Stanford Theatre. Browne cooperated with the Stanford University for the final tryouts for the Olympics held at Palo Alto. Each one of the figures were more than life sized and topped by a six-foot head of "Dink" Templeton, Stanford's track coach.

The entire display was made up in natural colors, and needless to say was the talk of the town for many days. The amount of goodwill created between theatre and university, not to bring in the folk around town, cannot be computed in dollars and cents.



"South Sea Adventures"

The final display for this group is on Zane Grey's "South Seas Adventures." This piece of art work was transparent gauze front on lower half with fish of bright tropical colors painted on background. Lighted from inside with marlin half in and half out of water. Front of palms covered with stills. Large twelve-foot cutout on gold cloth above shadow box.

Displays such as those pictured here will no doubt attract much attention from managers interested in this type of material and artists who are gradually finding the Club pages the best source of new ideas in their own line. Working together, the manager and artist or sign shop can achieve unusually fine displays by merely watching what the other fellow is doing and then following his example plus an idea or two of their own. The same spirit which guides the activities of other members of the Round Table Club applies here, too. "All For One and One For All." Let's have some more of your show-selling ideas, Browne and here's wishing you an SRO season. Go to it. You are a hard worker and deserving of success.

KNUDSEN HAS BEEN DOING LOT OF FINE PROMOTIONAL WORK

There's plenty of proof in a number of tear-sheets we have at hand that Harry S. Knudsen, director of publicity and exploitation for RKO theatres in Madison, Wis., and City Manager John Scharnberg, have been doing a whole lot of corking promotional work this past season in their town. Gag ads, co-ops running from two-columns up to single and double trucks, and many other tricks of their trade offer evidence that these two enterprising showmen are right on their toes when it comes to tying-in with merchants and newspapers.

Take, for instance, a tie-up they made with a cosmetic company, a number of beauty shops and a newspaper. This netted the theatre 418 inches of free space, $500 in permanent waves for give-aways and a lot of advertising in every one of the beauty shops. The awards were made in the usual fashion. The first week of the stunt an attractive young lady, compensated for her time by the paper, stood in the lobby handing out printed matter containing full information.

Here's the Hat Gag!

Then, there was the hat gag, which is one that can be used at this time of the year by the simple act of substituting a straw hat for one made of felt. The theatre divided 100 guest tickets among merchants on Straw Hat Day, the idea being that every purchaser of a new hat would receive gratis two tickets to the current show. The theatre received a break in all ads, many readers in the newspapers and a variety of window displays in the stores. One paper ran a large photo of the F. & M. vaudeville troupe wearing straw hats.

Another profitable deal was put over with a widely circulated student tabloid, whereby full pages of advertising were put over in return for a number of guest tickets. Halves of pages were devoted to a plug for the theatre and the balance made of smaller ads from local merchants.

Here's a little gag that captured from a newspaper a large, four-column ad when "Lost Squadron" was current. Knudsen inserted an ad on the classified page for one or two dogs trained to carry packages in connection with special advertising on the picture. Response prompted him to write a testimonial letter (which was what he had in mind when he inserted the ad) to the advertising manager of the paper, who ran a reproduction of it in the large ad.

The Grocer and Baker

Still another deal was made with a grocery and baking concern to plug an appearance of Harry Langdon. In return for a number of guest tickets, readers were asked to color with crayons a sketch of a young girl in the ads on heralds. 5,000 heralds were struck from the ads and distributed one week in advance to all children who came to the several stores.

Tie-ups with the classified ad departments of newspapers also netted prominent display ads for theatre and current attractions. For "Crowd Roars" license numbers belonging to local auto owners were scattered through the page; on "Around the World in 80 Minutes" names of countries visited by Fairbanks were used, and for "Symphony in Six Million," the paper asked readers to participate in guest tickets by sending in letters explaining why their classified ads were "killed," it being taken for granted that the ads were terminated because of getting the desired results.

Another full-page co-op promoted among a dozen local merchants was based on use of the Metro mat service carried by many of the country's leading newspapers. We published one of these ads some time ago and feel that most of our readers are familiar with this very striking page; however, for those who may have missed it, we'll explain that the page is divided into 12 sections, each carrying the mat of an attractive, smiling girl talking into a phone. The telephone numbers of the merchants are carried in large, bold-face type across the tops of each ad, with pointed excerpts of the telephone conversation underneath as a clue to the merchant's names. Space was left at the bottoms of ads for dotted lines to carry the filled in names. All a reader had to do was to call the several numbers to determine the correct name of the merchant and participate in guest tickets. The stunt was labeled "Shop by Telephone."

All of which is nice work and Kudsen and Scharnberg are to be congratulated for such a display of initiative. Owing to the pile of copy ever before us, the above material is a little late in making its appearance.

SPECIAL FRONT USED IN MASON CITY, IA.

A special, hand-painted front materially aided the fine business done on "Bring 'Em Back Alive" by Tom Arthur, manager of the Cecil Theatre, Mason City, Iowa. Ralph Speers, theatre artist, received many compliments from patrons on the fine piece of work he turned out.

Lew Preston to Milwaukee!

After many years of affiliation with local theatres and circuits, Lew Preston is now enroute to Milwaukee where he will assume an important post with the Skouras Midwesco Theatres.

Lew's experiences date 'way back to the independent days with the Small & Strausberg Circuit in Brooklyn; then he joined Fox Metropolitan Theatres as a district manager, later taking over the reins of the big Academy of Music on Fourteenth Street, New York. He resigned to become a supervisor for Frisch & Rinzler, which position he gave up to rejoin the Skouras forces.

We know he will continue his progress on the ladder of showmanship, and we'll expect to hear great things about him after he gets the situation in Milwaukee under his belt.

HERE'S AN EXAMPLE OF FRENCH ART FROM MONS. DE BOISSIERE

It's always interesting to get a line on foreign style of theatre advertising and this time we're indebted to C. de Boissiere, of the Braunberger-Richebe Theatre Circuit, Paris, for samples of French art work.

We picked from an assortment of ads the accompanying one because it appeared to our American eye the most striking of the lot and an excellent illustration of how the exchange mat may be combined with a hand-drawn sketch. Note the sketch, compelling to the eye for reason of its dominating proportions to the mat and the reverse negative process. Among other samples and in direct contrast to the serious tone conveyed in average ads on feature pictures in this country, copy and sketches for both dramas and comedies reflect the typical Parisian view toward showbusiness by resorting to the grotesque. Most of the sketches are hand-drawn and copy is couched in the lighter vein.

We will be glad to hear from de Boissiere again and in his next communication will hope to learn more concerning the handsome theatre his circuit is building in Brussels. This, the Metropole Cinema, will seat 3,000 people and have the latest in Pullman seats, sound and air conditioning.

There is always an interesting reaction to the activities of our many foreign members and now that we have a real active showman in France we sort of feel that the methods employed by theatres in that country will make fine reading on our pages.

RED CROSS ROLL CALL!

The Roll Call this year starts on November 11th (Armistice Day) and runs through to the 18th. Without doubt an active local committee is functioning in your town or community.

We suggest that you cooperate with them in every way so as to further the interest and success in this worthy organization. Many theatres in the past campaigns have found it a good-will builder in many respects.

Get in touch with your local committee and see what you can do to help them and possibly your theatre too.

NEWSPAPER HELPED McGINNIS PAVE WAY FOR CHANGE OF RATE

Herb McGinnis, enterprising member of the Warner theatre gang of go-getters out Ohio way, and who manages the Ohio Theatre, Sidney, pulled a clever stunt prior to announcing a slight advance in admission prices.

It wasn't so easy, observes Herb, to sell the newspaper the idea to run a column and a third story on "The Theatre As An Asset to a Community," but it went over and helped the friendly reaction when news of the new rates broke. The gist of the yarn was that with the advent of the talking picture theatre interests were faced with an increase of overhead and even loss on operation. It went into a short history of the local playhouse, cited the case of "Grand Hotel," which could have been played before had local management been willing to pay a high price and pass the cost along to the public; reviewed the rise of the "flicker" to its present amusement status; mentioned mechanical apparatus necessary to present-day operation; listed a number of outstanding coming attractions and gently planted the thought among readers that they, alone, were in a position to hold a worthwhile institution in town.

We note also that McGinnis made a profitable tie-up a short time ago with his newspaper and a number of merchants for the promotion of a Fall Fashion Pageant. Apparently he also tied in with a New York concern specializing in shows of this sort, for all of the several large ads in tear sheets we have at hand carry photos of "Miss Guest, Fashion Queen From Dixie," who was scheduled to visit each store and assist generally in picking local girls to represent the various merchants. A car was promoted from a local auto agent to carry her about town. The accompanying reproduction of one of the ads will serve to convey an idea of the style used for all. The newspaper generously supported the event with front page and other readers and we hear it was a success from every angle.

In line with general retrenchment, Mack passes along another tip which may prove a saving for many of his fellow Club members. Not long ago he put a five cent per inch reduction up to the newspaper management and his request was granted. Maybe, thinks he, some of the gang can also get away with this. Okay, Herb, and thanks for your contributions. We'll be on the watch for more.

SCHLINKER GAVE HIS AD READERS CHANGE OF DIET AS TO COPY

As a change of fare for theatre ad readers in his local newspaper and combining some institutional selling with a plug for the current attraction, Harry Schlinker, manager of the RKO Hollywood Theatre, Fort Worth, Texas, put it right up to patrons in the following manner:

"Who has kept their promise of showing nothing but outstanding pictures?

"What theatre can you attend Monday to Friday, inclusive, from 11 a.m. until 6 p.m. and sit anywhere in the house for 25c?

"What theatre gives you two big features on preview nights for one price?

"What theatre can you attend in nights and get choice seats for 40c?

"What theatre Saturday will show the season's outstanding hit, 'Bird of Paradise'?

"Of course it's the Hollywood."

Schlinker's change of style and statements in the form of questions were read and the ad brought good results to current and future shows.

BICYCLE GIVEAWAY ONE OF BEST EVER PUT OVER BY LAMM

Shortly before leaving his old stand at the Variety Theatre, Cleveland, to take charge of the Uptown, Warner's ace house in this city, Julius Lamm put over a merchant give-away that went over like hot cakes.

This time it was the Speedobyke, a kid's bicycle that resembles a motorcycle, that took Julius's eye as a novel gift for the occasion and he sold his idea to six merchants at the rate of $30 per bike. With exception of a one-card trailer on the screen, the merchants handled the entire deal. All expenses, such as cost of special tickets given out by merchants, heralds and window cards, were taken care of by the storekeepers. No tickets were given out at the theatre, all being handed out by merchants to customers.

The accompanying photo of the six kiddies on the bikes show the back-cards advertising the several merchants. The parade, in which they took part, was staged one week in advance. Motorcycle police led the procession, followed by the kids on bikes and delivery trucks from the stores.

Of all stunts of this sort put over by Lamm in a long time, and Club readers know that this Round Tabler has engineered plenty of them, reports state that the one described above was the winner by a wide margin. Merchants received a vast amount of response and were greatly gratified by results.

Next time we report on activities of Julius Lamm, maybe we'll be able to let his fellow showmen know what ammunition he used for the opening guns on his new job as manager of what is classed as Cleveland's finest theatre. Every one familiar with Lamm knows he is deserving of the promotion and we wish him lots of luck.

SALES POLICY USED BY MORRIS BROUGHT EXCELLENT RETURNS

"Far above normal" is the report that comes to our notice concerning business done on the run of "Back Street" at the New Broadway Theatre, a house in Charlotte, N. C., managed by Walter Morris.

The excellent returns are attributed to the reserved manner in which the picture was sold. In every advance and current newspaper advertisement the same, distinctive "announcement" tone prevailed and in no instance was an attempt made to play up any sensational angles. The book itself was stressed and the management sincerely believes that patrons were attracted by the very simplicity of the entire campaign.

The two newspaper ads reproduced here will serve to illustrate how ads may be shaped for two different newspapers catering to two different classes of readers and also offer evidence that Morris had his wits working when shaping his copy.

Readers will at once note that while one ad is simple to the extreme, the other is much more explanatory as to copy and general layout. The more conservative of the two was placed in a paper catering to the so-called intelligent class, while the explanatory ad ran in a paper going principally to the laboring element. In the former case, it was thought that people up on things literary would at once appreciate the importance of the title of a book by a well known author. In the latter case it was obviously an attempt to acquaint readers with the book's importance both as a literary and pictorial achievement.

Note that Fannie Hurst's name is not even associated with the title in the conservative ad, while, on the other hand, the ad placed in the less conservative paper not only explains in type that the book is one of the greatest novels ever written, but offers a small mat of a book with a by-line of the author.

The other illustration shows the front constructed for this same picture, with a background of light blue cloth pleated in curtain fashion. Title of film and panels of cut-out beaverboard were mounted on background, with a two-inch molding border of silver base with flitter highlight. The box office centerpiece is obviously a book, cut out for the cashier to sell tickets through opening.

All of which is typical of effort put forth by Round Tabler Morris when he campaigns a picture and we feel sure it will be of interest to his fellow Club members. That he carefully plans his moves has been brought out in former reports concerning his activities and the newspaper angle of this campaign is a good illustration of how he goes about this.

A RECIPE TO AVOID TROUBLE!

Inspect carefully every drain pipe and leader on all the different roof levels of your building. Clogged pipes mean trouble and expense and are difficult to repair during the winter months especially if there is snow on the roofs.

If you will head an expedition to the fan rooms, taking with you your assistant, projectionists and janitor; see that all the fan motors are thoroughly lubricated, commutators protected, etc., etc., we'll almost guarantee that they will be fit to work next spring when the weather brings blower fans to mind again.

Roof surfaces must be gone over by someone with an experienced eye to detect questionable spots and blisters. Leaks will start easier during the winter than the summer for the simple reason that snow and ice play havoc with weak parts of the roof. Costly redecoration of ceiling stains, etc., can result from moisture seeping in during the winter months. Watch this angle closely.

The marquee roof also comes in for its own share of responsibility. If you know how—and why—they build theatres, then you may know that a leak on the marquee roof can cause a short circuit in the lighting under the marquee and even a complete burn-out. Spending for proper repairs and soldering by a regular tin-smith or roofer is of the utmost importance. Finish it up with a coat or two of good metal roof paint. It should contain plenty of red lead.

If your auditorium radiators are exposed and you have had trouble with kids or cake-eaters stealing the air valves, an exhibitor on Long Island solved this problem for you by making up chicken wire cages which he wired, neatly too, to the radiators making it so difficult to remove that he has not had a valve stolen in two years.

Theatres far removed from key city spots from where they must secure their parts and supplies, are urged to check over and lay in a winter's supply of extra fuses, carbons, generator brushes, condensers, carbon jaws, reflector mirrors, extra intermittent movement or an extra complete mechanism, machine oil, film cement, extra reels, and, if you do not have a regular service visit from sound equipment company, extra exciter lamps, photo electric cells, etc., etc.

If the weather is unusually severe it may seriously interfere with prompt delivery of necessary equipment which ought to be kept on hand for any and all emergencies. In this connection check over with your projectionists, janitor and assistant what portions of your equipment have given you trouble in the past, are apt to require attention during the winter months or what parts ought to be kept on hand. Then be guided accordingly.

Keep a most careful check every few days on your boiler equipment. Of major importance is the safety water level. If you use a billposter in your house and have no hot water heater, you may find that the mysterious disappearance of water from the boiler was caused by said bill-poster pilfering a pail full every time he goes out posting. A cracked boiler section in the midst of a tough winter will never contribute to your peaceful frame of mind. Cash customers are so unreasonable you know. They DO insist upon a warm, comfortable theatre when they smack down their two bits, more or less.

To completely cover every phase of your theatre's equipment, etc., would require about three hundred and sixty-nine pages. Not having the room at this moment we are just going to call these few suggestions hints. You will either take the hint and check things over or else you'll pass it up as another one of "Chick's" wild raves. Do as you please, but we hope you'll follow our advice.

NAT WOLF HAS TIE-UP THAT HELPS OUT SATURDAY BUSINESS

Ever on the alert for some gag to promote interest in theatres in his zone, Nat Wolf, Warner's exploitation manager out in Cleveland recently made a very effective tie-up with a clay figure manufacturing company for the give-away of Bosco and other statuettes taken from the "Looney Tune" cartoons.

The effort was aimed at the juvenile element and the give-aways were announced through distribution of a large quantity of bookmarks to the kiddies. As they entered the theatre they were presented with a card which entitled them to one of a list of several stautettes.

We imagine the Cleveland office will be glad to furnish the manufacturer's name to any Club member who is interested in the above gag. The statuette concern is paying a major part of the cost in order to advertise its wares and the stunt is proving a corking build-up for Saturday matinees. It's a foregone conclusion that the little gadget is taken home and that means considerable word-of-mouth advertising.

Wins Jersey Bonus Drive

Saul Ullman, managing director of the Capitol Theatre, Newark, N. J., was recently named high man among the forty-three New Jersey managers who took part in the Warner Bros. Bonus Drive Campaign. He attributes his success to making a theatre a "house of hospitality, not merely a place for paid fares."

INTIMATE ADVERTISING!

Dinty Moore's Intimate Slang-Ads Strike New Note in Advertising and Are Clicking in Ohio!

THIS chatty style of theatre advertising is getting to be quite the cats out Ohio way, what with Dinty Moore of Lima and Herb McGinnis of Sidney both gabbing away at the rate the best of speedplanes fly these days.

Whether Mrs. Moore's little boy Dinty or Mrs. McGinnis' favorite son Herb' stated this nertzy line of chatter we don't know, but local responsibility for this combination of winchellingo, Will Rogers and numerous other styles of English as she shouldn't be used, appears to lie with one or the other.

As far as we're concened, it happened that Herb's contribution was the first one snatched from the basket and, consequently, some excerpts of McGinnislanguage appeared in a recent issue. Further underneath the pile of literature, we caine across a collection of Dinty's pleas to patrons to come see his exceedingly worth-while shows and it is now our privilege to present a few Moorian gems, which, to our way of thinking, were excellently done.

One point, however, we'd like to bring out, since both name of Moore and McGinnis indicates Irish parentage and we don't want to get in the line of any animated confetti the old country is noted for. Both are good, so far as we be judge; both ads carried thumbnail cuts of the author in the upper right-hand corners; both employed the words "Sez" in head and signature, such as "Dinty Moore of Warner's Ohio Theatre Sez," and ended "Sez Dinty." At any rate, here are a few from Dinty:

"Honest folks, it's not ego to have my picture in this ad I'm paying for—it's jest because I don't know many of you personally, and I ask you if I don't have some semblance of honesty, for I'm telling you we have a reel screen attraction at the Ohio today and thru the fourth day of the week.

"Well, I go for that little bundle of personality, Janet Gaynor and as to Chas. Farrell he's my idea of a real hot shot, they're together in a darned nice filum 'First Year'—(If you're married you know what I mean—If your not married get a load of 'First Year' anyway, its mighty soothin and instructive). It's a pleasure I a'sure you, for me to recommend this pitcher, and Ive told Al the Engineer to have the Cooling plant on full force cause its HOT, very HOT and we dont want the Blood pressure to get away with you.

"This is the Nertz of a way for me to tell you about a pitcher, but Nertz or not, I'm countin on you to be here and see that Farrell boy do his stuff with Mrs. Lydell Peck.

"Tomorrow I'll be seein you again.

SEZ DINTY."

"A feller sez to me: 'How's Business?'—I sez, 'look at your own cash register'—but things are getting better, even movin pitchers are, at least this Gaynor and Farrell 'First Year' is more than satisfying the natives 100%, and today's the last day you can see it.

"You must come over tonite, 'First Year' and 'Brown of Culver.' Be here by 8:45 tonite to see them both.

"Thursday we have an added attraction. Lou Uke from Hollywood in person, and does he spank one of those Hawaiian Pork Chops—just beats it to death—then theres a Crosley Auto Radio surprise as well as another big treat for Thursday, Friday and Saturday evenings. Mike Johnson of the News ad dept. sez I can't tell you about this in the paper, but you can guess what we're doing. I'll b-c-n-u-sweetheart.

SEZ DINTY MOORE."

"How do you like my pitcher?

"People are speaking to me on the street now—just goes to show you, it pays to advertise . . . keep this up, and I'll run for Mayor . . . speaking of running, why don't you run over and see 'Tom Brown of Culver' its one pitcher I'll recommend, and its not a war epic either.

"Talked with Sam Strauch manager of the Boston Store today, he sez: 'Bargains are Bargains and we have plenty of them . . .'

"Tonight is a bargain nite at the Opery House (Sam can't have 'em all) 8:45 p. m. finds 'Tom Brown of Culver' on the screen an 'round ten you'll see 'Winner Take All.' We're just big hearted—and your just a little different . . . for you take advantage of our big-heartedness—you Scotchmen!

SEZ DINTY."

"There's not a Dame in the pitcher 'Tom Brown of Culver'—just goes to show you we boys CAN get by in pitchers.

"My attentive ear and the ears of all employees of the Ohio Theatre are always alert for critcisms from you folks regarding what you think of the show—Last night one thousand people saw 'Brown of Culver' at the Wed. Nite Prevue—everybody was more than satisfied, and I'll say I haven't seen a neater picture in some time.

"Trust the Universal Film Co. every now and then to do something different, away from the usual. Remember 'Spirit of Notre Dame' last year? Well, just as that was a fine expose of the life of young men in a men's University, so this one is equally as good in telling of the boys life in one of Americas best known prep schools. Produced at Culver Indiana (Many local boys gone to school there) it includes the entire personnel of Culver Military academy as well as a fine bunch of Hollywood stars including 'Slim' Summerville, Tom Brown, Richard Cromwell, H. B. Warner and Andy Devine.

"Just a mighty fine picture for every member of your family—I'll be lookin' fer yu.

"On the stage today is Uke Lou direct from Hollywood, tonite a Crosley Auto Radio and 10 Ukes a big surprise.

"Gosh Darn It Folks, some of you haven't seen it vet—I mean Gaynor and Farrell in 'First Year'—Don't it sound hot—? it is—theatre is cool—seats comfortable and if you don't come how do you expect a hard working fellow to eat—

"Tomorrow Nite if you are in the Opery House (Ohio Theatre) by 8:45 p. m. you can see 'First Night' and an advance showing of the greatest little picture of the year 'Brown of Culver' really it was made at the Culver Military Academy over there in Indianny. Pop and Mom you'll get a real Kick out of it, so will the kids, and the prices still remain reasonable.

"SEZ DINTY MOORE—SEE YOU TOMORROW SWEETHEART."

"Ten years in show business has taught me not to lie to my patrons. If I should do that, then they would never believe me; so Dads, Mothers, Sisters and Brothers take this tip—The Current film attraction is 'Tom Brown of Culver' a fine, smart and entertaining picture—and I feel positive that its the best screen fare offered in town today. A good cast Slim Summerville, Tom Brown, Richard Cromwell and others, with the Culver (Indiana) prep school as a back ground. Come see if I'm not telling the truth. Sunday 'Winner Take All' its really breaking records everywhere."

Now that the above is off our chest, we can proceed to inform Moore's fellow Club members that writing original copy is not the only thing taking up Dinty's time these days.

Not long ago he made a tie-up with the local agent of a popular priced automobile for one of those stunts whereby 10 gallons of gasoline becomes consumed by one of the autos, with rear wheels jacked up and parked in front of the theatre. The usual awards and give-away of guest tickets figured in the deal, which was of mutual benefit to theatre and dealer. Over 5,000 people became interested in the stunt.

So, we're signing off for this time on Moore and his Ohio Theatre at Lima. Next time, we'll hope to tell his brother showmen more about his interesting activities.

"ON THE AIR" WITH OSCAR LINN

YOU CAN'T MISS, MEN — C'MON IN!

B. H. SNYDER is manager and partner of the Unique Theatre, Gunnison, Colo., and we're taking this opportunity to acknowledge his application for membership in this great organization of showmen. Snyder advises us that he has been following this department's activities for a long time and that up to now mere procrastination in the matter of signing one of the Club blanks has kept him on the side-lines. Gunnison may not be a large city but Snyder does things in show-business in a large way, as some advertising we have at hand indicates. We'll show it to his fellow showmen in a future issue, and, in the meantime, will be on the lookout for more news from this source.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

GEORGE P. BESSE recently joined B. H. Snyder as a partner in the operation of the Unique Theatre, Gunnison, Colo., and we're also glad to welcome him as a new member of the Round Table Club. He's a live wire, says Snyder, so between the two we surely can look forward to receipt of a lot of interesting tips on show-selling. Just as soon as George gets settled, we'll be looking for word from him. 'Till then good luck to both Besse and Snyder.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

ROBERT K. YANCEY operates the Paradise Theatre out in Cotter, Ark., and we not only have his application for membership at hand but also a very cordial letter, advising of conditions in his town and commenting on a few show-selling stunts he's been trying out. We'll tell you more about the latter in a forthcoming issue. Yancey will have more to write about next time he contributes to this department, and, until then, we wish him the usual good luck.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

S. F. McCRANER is the manager of the Black Mountain Theatre, Kenvir, Ky., and a cordial welcome is also extended this new Round Tabler down in the Blue Grass country. His application is at hand and at this time he's a duly recorded member of this ever-increasing army of showmen. McCraner is operating on a policy of two to three changes per week and that ought to keep him pretty busy thinking up show-selling ideas. We'll expect to shoot some good ones along for the benefit of his fellow members.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

E. T. DAVERN has the job of assisting S. F. McCraner with the management of the Black Mountain Theatre down South in Kenvir, Ky., and we're mighty glad to post his name among the many assistant managers already enrolled in this large organization. With the able coaching he'll receive from association with McCraner, it probably won't be long before we'll be sending Davern a regular certificate of membership. At any rate, between these two the Club should be in a position to know what's going on in showbusiness down on Kenvir.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

WAYNE SWEENEY hails from out in Whitehall, Mich., where he manages the Playhouse Theatre and he's another new Round Tabler in line for introduction to his host of fellow members. Welcome to the Gang, Wayne, and let's hope you'll do your share to keep this department the livest one of its kind in existence. Shoot along an account of that last gag you used to bring in extra trade and we'll see that it's passed down the line. Let's hear from you soon.

H. CAVANAUGH is the advertising manager of the RKO Orpheum Theatre in Des Moines, Iowa, and it's also a pleasure to add his name to the ever-lengthening Club roster. He advises us that he has been on the verge of signing a membership card for a long, long time but just never got around to the act until recently. Cavanaugh is a seasoned showman, having started as an usher with the old Finkelstein and Ruben Circuit of Minneapolis. Since that time he's been in the thick of exploitation work and we certainly look upon his membership as a good break for the Club. Let's hear from you, Cavanaugh, just as often as you can spare the time.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

DICK PRITCHARD is one of the best known publicity men on the west coast, and until taking over management of the Fox-Alcazar Theatre, Bell, Calif., he held down the job of publicity director at the Columbia and Tec-Art studios. While with Columbia he was responsible for organization of the Buck Jones Rangers Clubs in Pacific territory. He likes our Club idea and we're glad to have him with us, knowing that he will be able to contribute some very worthwhile ideas for us to pass along to others. Some newspaper tear-sheets at hand testify to his ability to grab free space, so we say, more power to Dick.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

HOMER B. REED is the assistant manager and treasurer of the RKO Orpheum Theatre, Oakland, Calif., and we're also glad to record his application for membership in the Round Table Club. An assistant's job in the house the size of the Orpheum means that Reed is kept plenty busy, to say nothing of guarding the treasury. He's been following this department's activities for some time and now wants to contribute his share of the good work. That's the spirit, Homer, and we'll expect to hear further from you.

HARRY T. WATERS assists William Hock with management of the Kenyon Theatre, N. S., Pittsburgh, Pa. Harry has served at the Kenyon for the past two years and was promoted to his present post from the job of chief usher. We have his application for Club membership at hand and hope we'll soon be able to announce that he's a full fledged member. By the way, Harry, a glance at the card record of your boss reveals that he joined this outfit in '29 and hasn't communicated since. That's pretty bad! Tell him we would like to know what's wrong, will you, and if he hasn't time to write, why not get permission from him to take on the assignment?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

ETHEL H. SPARKS hails from down south in Winchester, Ky., where she manages the Leeds Theatre, and is another lady-manager to join our outfit. Just to keep her from feeling lonesome in this rather obviously he-organization, we'll take occasion to state that this Club boasts the membership of several dozen ladies, and we're mighty glad to include her name on the list. Miss Sparks has charge of one of the houses on the Sam Lee and John Elliott circuit and we will look forward to hearing what she is doing to boost box office trade. It takes a woman to start things, fellows, so we believe you all can look for some live tips from Miss Ethel.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

GEORGE MEYERS manages the Capitol Theatre down South in Frankfort, Ky., and it's also a pleasure to announce that he, too, has joined this go-getting aggregation of showmen. George's house is one of the Sam Lee & John B. Elliott circuit and he operates on a picture and stage show policy. Now that he's one of the gang we'll be looking for word on what's going on in showbusiness down his way.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JAMES A. BACON is the assistant manager of the Mission Theatre, San Diego, Calif., and we're posting his name up among the potential theatre bosses on the Club roster. There's quite a number of Round Table certificates hanging up in the offices of Pacific National managers out his way—Jack Rosenberg, at the Plaza; R. J. Jerebeck, at the Palace in Long Beach and J. W. Work at the Seville in Chula Vista. Give them all our best regards, Jimmie, and tell them not to forget their Club. We heard from Jack Rosenberg not long ago, but something must have happened to the writing arms of Work and Jerebeck. As to Jimmie himself, we'll publish in a forthcoming issue how the Mission put over "Crooner."

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JIM CHRISTIN manages the Kentucky Theatre down in Corbin, Ky., and at the rate these Kentucky showmen are joining our Club we'll soon have the state chalked up one hundred per cent. Anyway, we have Jim's application for membership at hand and we want him to know that we're also mighty glad to have the opportunity to introduce him to the rest of this outfit. He's another one of the boys who sell shows for the Sam Lee-John Elliott chain of theatres and we hope he'll find time to make some interesting contributions to this department. Shoot along your ideas, Jimmie, and we'll do the rest.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1932, unless otherwise specified.

FOR PICTURE THEATRES

NOVELTY

The Great Huber (5)
New York Boulevard

Here is a master of magic who succeeds in mystifying and entertaining the audience throughout his act. Keeping up a pleasing bit of chatter, he uses a bell trick, the bell answering questions concerning the audience, after which Huber makes a deck of cards jump out of a tumbler. He makes objects disappear from the hands of two tots from the audience, their mystified expressions arousing hearty laughter. His finale, the transformation trunk bit, in which he displaces a "sacked" girl, locked in a trunk, in three seconds, is sure-fire.—H. P.

Ann Howe
Denver Orpheum

This little miss entertains with a teeth-hanging act. Hanging about 25 feet above the stage, she does a "dance." She switches to a wide web hanging from the loft, and with her stooge hanging to the end to hold it steady, she performs in midair, closing with a dizzy whirl.

Gregory and Raymond
Detroit Hollywood

These lads get tunes and comedy out of a saw, in inner tube, a toy balloon, a tire pump and a vacuum cleaner hose, as well as a fiddle and a banjo. This was the best of the bill, and fair entertainment.

Bobby May
Omaha Orpheum

Bobby May first juggles three Indian clubs and clowns with one of the men in the orchestra pit. Then he juggles four clubs, then three tennis balls—introducing some novelties with them —and then five balls and a "topper" hat.

Dave Harris (5)
Baltimore Hippodrome

In this hokum act filled with surprises, dances, snatches of song and music, a little of this and that is presented in a way that appeals. Harris has Frankie, the clown, and three girls, two of them dancers.

Mike Ames
Detroit Hollywood

Mike offers feminine impersonations that depart from the usual only in a stage costume change, behind a screen. He removes his wig and gives vocal proof of his masculinity not once but three times.

Bill Glason
Baltimore Century

Here is a monologue act in which Glason keeps them laughing with his jokes and hokum. He sings "Smile a Little Bit." It's a sort of good cheer act that builds.

Belmont Brothers
Detroit Hollywood

These two juggle hoops, spools and phosphorescent balls. The act is interesting in its departure from the conventional.

Shows in South Stage Comeback

Miniature revues are staging a comeback in the south and southwest this season. In Dallas the Melrose, a neighborhood de luxe house, is using this type of shows; the Lyric theatre is likewise using stage shows in conjunction with its picture fare. The Strand, Knoxville, Tenn., and the Meighan theatre, New Port Richey, Fla., which has been closed several months, has reopened with miniature stage revues. In Oklahoma City the New theatre, management of Tol Teeters, who operates another theatre in Albuquerque, N. M., is presenting stage revues to satisfactory business at popular prices.

Higher prices for farm products and cotton in the south has helped business considerably at the box office. Better times here have drawn many stage shows and vaudeville acts to the south and southwest during the past two months, it is said. From authentic sources it is learned that many new houses are contemplated and many that have been dark for months are being reopened. Several new houses have been opened recently and they are playing stage shows in addition to film attractions.

ACROBATICS

The Harris Boys and Loretta Allen (3)
Dallas Majestic

This is an excellent opening act with plenty of well timed flips and adept balancing in which Miss Allen shows to good advantage in her litheness and her unusual splits. Lying prone, face down, she maneuvred her feet sidewise and brought them around under her face for an outstanding contortionistic accomplishment. Pyramided three deep atop her two partners, she performed a vertical split with perfect balance. The men mixed in some very good tapping with their balancing and tumbling. The act was very well received and rated it.

The Two Kanes
Detroit Hollywood

These two acrobats work with a balanced ladder and a balanced pole. Their work is characterized by daring that hushes the house. Most spectacular is a head stand by one of the performers at the top of a pole balanced on the head of the other. Another good bit is a giant swing on a bar at the top of the ladder while it is held in a belt socket.

Fields and Bell
Buffalo Century

Acrobatic tumblers, these boys have a nice comedy sense and shrewd timing, their wrestling burlesque starting the buildup at once for a surprise finish climax that drew applause.

INSTRUMENTAL

Ted Lewis and Band
Buffalo Buffalo

While in some spots Lewis' constant basking in the limelight undoubtedly builds up the act, the Shea's Buffalo patrons, while paying in large numbers, failed to warm to Lewis, but went strong for his band and supplemental performers. Failure of the high-hatted clarinetist to use the microphone provided for him somewhat cramped his style in this huge theatre. For attractive costuming, never failing fast pace, constant variety, seating arrangement of the band and effective use of drops and scrims this act might well serve as an example to most others of its kind. The Dixie Four, Snowball Whittier, Mildred Gaye, Doris Deane and Estelle Pressman were an integral part of the blended whole.

Russ Columbo & Band
New York Capitol

Opening with his theme song, "You Call It Madness," Russ gets a nice reception from his radio fans and proceeds with a vocal of "As You Desire Me," the band accompanying with a fine arrangement. Russ follows with several other popular songs and then offers a violin solo of "Just a Little Love, a Little Kiss," and displays his ability at the piano when he does a bit with Benny Rubin. This act is entertaining, and should draw anywhere due to the radio popularity of Columbo.—H. P.

Charles "Buddy" Rogers and His California Cavaliers, with Ella Logan and Johnny Green
Baltimore Century

This act goes over very well due to Rogers' appeal with the women, principally. The usual number of musical selections—songs, specialties, and comedy — are presented in racy style, gaining applause. It opens with a Gershwin number, then a xylophone specialty; songs played by Johnny Green, who composed them; Ella Logan offering a jazz rendition of "Dinah"; Rogers' singing and his specialties on various instruments.

Six Saxonettes
New Orleans State

This act seems to be a feminine copy of the famous brothers Brown and it is not as effective by far, either from the musical or comedy angle. The girls are pretty, play competently, break up their saxophone work with dance steps, precision routines, a sousaphone solo, and finish off with "Anchors Aweigh," during which battleships are flashed on the back drop. A good act for a family house.

The Ingenues (20)
Dallas Majestic

This all-girl band of 15 pieces includes many versatile members adept in playing several instruments. Their music is cleverly arranged and played, their musical voices are well above the average, they are a very attractive troupe and nice to look at, and with the additional entertainers they offer a well staged act.

ATTENTION EXHIBITORS BOOKING TALENT! This department aims to serve you in booking acts. We have on file the information on how to get in touch with any act reviewed. Write to Stage Attractions Department, Motion Picture Herald, 1790 Broadway, New York City.

STAGE ATTRACTIONS

REVIEWS OF ACTS FOR PICTURE THEATRES

DANCERS

Starnes-Kover Dancers (5)
New York Astoria Triboro

Dick Sexton as master of ceremonies introduces this modernistic dancing act with a cleverly worded speech. Starnes and Miss Kover in a modernistic setting perform a graceful adagio routine that starts the act spectacularly. Sexton for his own bit pokes fun at well known radio broadcasts in a special song which he sings to the delight of the audience. At the finish he announces the next number by the dancers as their own original dance. This offering is without doubt one of the most spectacular and unusual from any dance troupe in the history of show-business. The weird dance is done on an unlighted stage in which two men and the girl are seemingly brilliantly lighted. The climax and illusion offered by the girl apparently floating through air is most spectacular.—E. D.

Maurine and Norva
San Francisco Warfield

This couple does a ballroom dance turn which wins approval by its sheer grace and the execution of difficult steps with apparent ease. It's not a headline number, but is a good program filler.

Bernice and Emily
Detroit Michigan

Here is a pair of comedy acrobatic dancers, clever at hand balancing and inverted splits. Wings and taps on tinseled steps set them off for resounding applause.

Rio Brothers (3)
New York Paramount

The Rio Brothers offer a collegiate, three-in-one specialty dance, followed by slapstick comedy. Another bit of dancing and then one of the trio offers a very good impersonation of "Schnozzle" Durante, this bit especially effective with the picture star currently appearing in the feature picture.—H. P.

Annette Ames
Philadelphia Fox

The diminutive Roxy favorite is a great little tap dancer. She is an attractive blonde, apparently about five years old, and when she joins Hal Le Roy in a dance number, the audience clamors for more.

COMEDY

Jim Barton
New York Capitol

This musical comedy comedian opens with a song about the kind of gal for him and proceeds to show with fair success the evolution of an Irishman's various stages of inebriation. He finales with a well-applauded soft shoe dance.—H. P.

Nina Olivette
Detroit Fisher

She is a clowning prima donna for a wartime production number. She has a number of weird dance steps that are intentionally devoid of everything that makes good dancing. In a burlesque skit entitled "She Loves to Dance the Adagio," with a line song of the same name, she turns the stage into a slapstick bedlam. She is a former "Scandals" dancer.

Manny King and Company
Buffalo Century

King, dialect comedian, is assisted by a buxom blonde, a titian-hairer girl, and man in an Apache dance, and various others. Most of the material is more than vaguely reminiscent of the burlesque stage, including several "blue" suggestions and a paucity of action. Even the most obvious quips and business drew laughs from the downstairs audience, but failed to start a snicker in the loges.

SONG AND DANCE

Wallace Sisters & Co. (5)
New York Academy of Music

This act is composed of two demure and attractive young ladies who are assisted by three versatile boys. One of them, a handsome lad, sings the introductory number and then goes into a well done eccentric rhythm dance that sets a good pace for the turn. A dressy, full stage setting is used. Two young fellows next offer their impression of the rumba as done by tappers in split rhythm time. The first young man enters singing a number, and as he sings Wilma Wallace does a strenuous acrobatic dance to a very good hand. Then, with the boy, she first does a rhythmic waltz routine and then an extremely fast number.

Both the girls, Wilma and Earlyne, offer an effective toe and acrobatic routine that undoubtedly is most difficult. The two boys follow with tapping, done in unison and as challenge work, with the other following with a combination strut, tap and acrobatic number in which he features a flying split that is noteworthy. The girls are then back on with another well done and rapid acrobatic routine.

The act closes with a speedy dance finale. Here is a class act that has youth, showmanship, ability and entertainment value and one that should do well in every theatre.—E.D.

SINGERS

Irene Bordoni
New York Capitol

This vivacious musical comedy star opens with a vocal of "Mardi-Gras," followed by an imitation of Chevalier singing his famous French comedy song, "Valentine." For the remainder of her appearance she clowns with Benny Rubin.—H. P.

Baby Rose Marie
Detroit Fisher

Although some fans may regard this 10-year-old merely as a spoiled child, she is a real attraction who long since has departed from the cute-child type. With ragging emphasis she offers "Sing a New Song," "A Shanty in Old Shanty Town," "How'm I Doin'" and "A Sentimental Gentleman From Georgia." She should be especially good for the family trade.

Three Keys
New York Capitol

Making their stage debut here, these three colored radio features, using a piano and a guitar, offer a pleasing 10 minutes of rhythm harmony and scat-singing.—H. P.

Flo Brady (1)
Dallas Majestic

This sveldt lady in becoming black is a torch singer de luxe and the effervescence of her prancing, gyrating and jiggling through her three numbers gets her a good hand. Her "Devil and the Deep Blue Sea" song carries her all aflutter and was liked.

Al Kvale Music Director of San Francisco Warfield

A new music director and master of ceremonies has made his bow at the Warfield theatre, San Francisco, in the person of Al Kvale, who earned a popularity as a band leader in Chicago that has been matched by very few other artists.

The new leader comes of a distinguished family, his father being the late Rev. O. J. Kvale, who defeated A. J. Volstead for the nomination for Congress in 1920. A brother, Paul J. Kvale, is congressman from his district in Minnesota. Al was in the navy during the war and later entered the University of Chicago to study law, but gave this up for music and band leadership.

Radio Singer on Stage

Harriet Lee, National Broadcasting Company radio singer, has been engaged for vaudeville appearances at four theatres in the Metropolitan district: Orpheum, New York; Gates, Brooklyn; Loew's, Jersey City, and Paradise, Bronx.

STAGE ATTRACTIONS

OVERTURES

JACK SPRIGG (Cincinnati Albee) presents a novelty overture, "Uncle Tom's Cabin in the Cotton," which is as effective as it is unique. In addition to the old favorites of the Southland, played by the full orchestra, "Suwanee River" is done by the brass alone, with Sprigg playing the cornet. Billie Leonard, vocalist then sings a verse of "Cabin in the Cotton," also "Dinah." Next, Sprigg, gives abbreviated descriptions of the characters in the play, "Uncle Tom's Cabin." At the end of each description the orchestra plays a few bars of such selection as is appropriate. The full strength of the ensemble is utilized in the finale, the chorus of the "Cabin" number, with Miss Leonard singing. The entire overture shifts from one factor to another in rapid succession, the whole blending into a continuous unit. A cleverly worked-out idea, cleverly executed.

ART KAHN (Milwaukee Wisconsin), guest conductor of the Wisconsin theatre orchestra, offers as a piano number, assisted by the orchestra, "Pianomania." Other selections include "Doing the New York," "Sylvia," "Three on a Match," "Round My Heart," "Two Hearts in Three-Quarter Time." This is a solo as well as a combination. For an encore the orchestra plays "My Silent Love," "Let's Try Again" and "Sing a Blue Song." Both Art and the orchestra get a big hand for their efforts.

John Gart (Brooklyn Gates) and His Rhythm Boys offer a short but snappy overture this week. Gart introduced a new number, "Belle of Barcelona," as the first number. This was presented as an orchestral number and was followed by a violin solo of "Night When Love Was Born" by Dave Orenstein, which drew heavy applause.

Comedy, injected in the form of a novelty song by "Tiny" Kaplin, was put over well and gained good applause and hearty laughs.

A most novel finish was the instrumentalization of "French Echoes," which was played in darkened house with only "hands" of musicians visible. Gart and his boys, besides being capable vaudeville musicians, are quite popular for their versatility.

JOE RUSSO (New Orleans Orpheum) and his RKOlians offer a short but well received overture which demonstrates that this band is about the best jazz unit in New Orleans theatres. The opening number is "One Hour With You," Howard Reed doing the vocal chorus through a megaphone and revealing a pleasant voice. The second number is "Wolverine Blues," done in fine style, with the orchestra sections taking the spotlight for solos.

CHARLES MANNING (Buffalo, Buffalo) and the Symphonic Ensemble had as this week's overture "Mignon," introducing Mrs. Manning, wife of the conductor, as soprano soloist, and the Shea's Buffalo ballet. The applause was fairly hearty.

UP AND DOWN THE ALLEY

Things sure are getting pretty bad when even crooners are packing "rods." . . . A few days ago, Will Osborn (who claims to be the daddy of crooning) was arrested for having a .32 caliber pistol openly exposed on the seat of his car. . . . Samuel Leibowitz, attorney, leaped to the defense of the gentle habits of crooners and pleaded not guilty for the songbird. . . .

After considerable competition among the music publishers, the firm of Leo Feist acquired the new Isham Jones waltz hit, "I'll Never Have to Dream Again." . . . This melody is said to be Jones' best since his hit, "I'll See You in My Dreams."

After 25 years as a singer, the popular Gus Van, dialectitian, is pretty certain that the old variety days, when performers worked twice a day and audiences were audiences, are gone forever. . . . Eddie Edwards, popular West Coast organist, accordionist and "mike" specialist, recently arrived in town and is anticipating a—hookup. Lou Breese, formerly of Paul Ash's orchestra and for the past year or so the popular attraction at the Minnesota in Minneapolis, is now enjoying a return engagement at the New Orleans Saenger. . . . Incidentally, Paul Ash, the daddy of them all, is back in town, looking fit as a fiddle and with that radiant smile of his flashing in the same old way. . . . Paul was sort of secretive about his plans, but you'll hear of them in this pillar in the near future. . . . The Three Gibson Girls, who broadcast over WOR on Sundays, Wednesdays and Fridays, are known as the Daly Sisters when they sing over WEAF on Wednesdays. . . . This pleasing harmony trio is composed of Dorothy Dale . . . Florence Shewell . . . and Gertrude McDonald. . . . That crackerjack pianist who accompanies them is Charley Bates of Robbins Music Company.

That spectacular radium illusion dance performed by the Ayres Rene troupe at the Roxy last week was originated by the Starnes, Kovers Quintet, two or three years ago. . . . The Quintet are currently in Montreal and will soon be seen on Broadway. . . .

ORGAN SOLOS

EDDIE MEIKEL (Milwaukee Wisconsin), guest organist, offered a number of selections with entertaining varieties including "You're the One," "Lovable," with the girls asked to sing various sections, "Dew, Dew, Dewy Day," with trick words, "Every Time My Heart Beats," "When It's Springtime in the Rockies," "Just a Shanty in Old Shanty Town," and "Whistle and Sing Your Blues Away." Eddie received wholehearted cooperation.

BOB MACHAT (Brooklyn Madison) opens his solo with "Voice of the RKO," the theme song used in every RKO theatre. He has done away with making his announcements by megaphone and it improves his work in every way. A cleverly worded special lyric slide tells the audience to sing, and it is written to the tune, "Let's Get Friendly." This gets them off to a good start and from then on they sing. The opening group of numbers are: "Here's Hoping," "The Lady I Love" and "Tell Me While We're Dancing." Machat then tells them that by singing "Blue of the Night" they will paint a picture of a beautiful girl. This proves to be a great laugh getter, when the finished portrait turns out to be of an extremely homely girl. Closing the solo with "Sonny Boy," and "April Showers," gives the audience two good numbers to sing and helps to build applause.

GLADYS LYLE (Birmingham Alabama), recently offered a novelty program entitled "A Crazy Quilt of Melody." Opening with a jingle to the tune of "By the Fireside," she wove into the melody quilt bits of different colors. Blue was represented by "The Blue Danube Waltz." "Dixie" provided the brown; "O Sole Mio" from the Italian, gold; a touch of green in "Wild Irish Rose"; "La Paloma" gave the "red" hot touch. Finally she concluded the clever arrangement with a hem for the quilt, a "toneful melody," entitled "We Just Couldn't Say Goodby." Miss Lyle has done much to popularize the organ solo during her six months stay at the Alabama.

ARSENE SIEGEL (Detroit Fisher), in a solo entitled "Singing Along," recommends songs as blues-cures. The audience responded with surprising warmth to the three opening selections, "Night Shall Be Filled With Music," "It Was So Beautiful" and "At the Mardi Gras." A memory test is built on "We Just Couldn't Say Goodby," with a lyric slide shy a number of words and phrases. "She'll Be Comin' Round the Mountain" found a warm reception, and "Everyone Says I Love You" closed the solo.

Vol. 109, No. 4 — October 22, 1932

"ACTS OF CONDESCENSION"

A BEST seller is "a book that is perfect in its own kind" . . . "written by one whose mentality and emotional preoccupations are those of a large number of persons," because there is no such thing as successfully writing down to the popular taste, says Mr. Frank Swinnerton, British author and critic, in his "Authors and the Book Trades," just published by Alfred A. Knopf in New York.

Many of Mr. Swinnerton's observations will be of interest to those involved in the closely related problems of the motion picture. Those familiar with the picture process known as "dumbing it up" will find a thought in his insistence that "you cannot make best sellers out of an act of condescension."

Concerning the public Mr. Swinnerton observes that it is incalculable "because all it demands of the book trade is 'something to read.'" Which reminds us that the motion picture demands nothing but some entertainment and does not know what it wants until after it has had it.

The judgments of public taste which have been famed by Mr. Swinnerton in the world of books and by our own Mr. Samuel L. Rothafel in the world of the screen are closely parallel, and in many points identical—as they should be if either is close to fact. Mr. Rothafel, incidentally, in his career as a showman, when so situated that he might choose his product, has come rather close to Mr. Swinnerton's prescription for a writer, calling for "one whose mentality and emotional preoccupations are those of a large number of persons." Mr. Rothafel has so often said that he had found that in pleasing himself he pleased the public. Mr. Ray Long, for many years a conspicuously successful magazine editor for the masses, had the same formula.

In England there is an output of some fourteen thousand books a year and in the United States about ten thousand. Without conclusive data at hand it seems a reasonable certainty that the motion picture, despite all its shortcomings and dissatisfactions, has nothing like the failure rate of the industry of book publication. But books are produced inexpensively and the biggest speculator is the author who is permitted and empowered to prosper or starve on his own.

All of which brings us again to the notion presented to the Society of Motion Picture Engineers last week by Mr. Terry Ramsaye, who urged that the technicians could best serve the future of their industry by simplification of the mechanisms and processes of production so that vastly more pictures could be made at vastly less cost, achieving for the art something of the facility and liberty of expression of the printed word. Expressed in other terms, a kindred line of thought is conveyed by an article in this issue of Motion Picture Herald from Mr. Campbell MacCulloch of Hollywood, an engineer and economist. He sees now in operation the beginning of processes of production which will evolve into methods which will make tremendously costly and ponderous studios unnecessary.

FAN INTERVIEW

THE only evident reason for interviewing Mrs. Franklin Delano Roosevelt on the subject of the motion picture is that she is the wife of a gentleman by the name of Franklin Delano Roosevelt who is quite a bit in the public eye and ear these days. However, the fan magazines are doing it, and for "Modern Screen Magazine" Mrs. Roosevelt has signed a screed in which she dismisses with a word the wave of criticisms of the screen for its crook and gangster pictures, going on to say of criticisms: ". . . one which is even more valid is that the movie, in picturing everyday life in so-called high society, falsely teaches bad taste, bad manners, not to say bad morals." Not to say, indeed! Mrs. Roosevelt is really and professionally a schoolmarm. Would it not be better if the screen did not teach at all? Suppose we let it just entertain. High society went abroad with Berry Wall and hasn't come back.

MOSES L. MALEVINSKY

A POIGNANT sense of loss comes with the passing of Moses L. Malevinsky, one of the most able and famous of lawyers in the amusement industry. While his recent years had been more largely concerned with plagiarism litigations this represented but a lesser sector of his activity and interest in the world of stage and screen. He was a close student of the drama, about which he at times wrote with great enthusiasm. He represented many of the greater figures of the screen for many years and was in his sage and kindly counsels no small factor in their successes. "Mal," as his friends called him, was much a philosopher and a dramatist in his daily life. His dislikes were lusty, vigorous, and fluently recorded. His friendships and enthusiasms were deep and warm and ardent. He was one of the great sincerities of Broadway.

A MEDITATION. College football is a major, seasonal amusement industry. In some sections of the country football managers have gone to the billboards with stock 24-sheets. The sporting sections do the newspaper advertising, free, and lots of it. It is competition for the amusement dollar. Now it chances there's a big picture circuit in New York so tough about competitive amusement it will not permit its screens to show a scene from Coney Island. But all across this broad land of ours the newsreels deliver a deal of screen space to football, and very frequently have to plead and plot for the privilege of picturing the game. Also every spring the cameras go south to help the build-up for baseball, which is another industry of selling seats to a show. Neither baseball nor football, as now operated, is news. They are merely competition.

POSTERITY WILL BE TOLD THE TRUTH

—THE BOSTON GLOBE

POURING HISTORY

The screen is about to pour history into man, woman and child, through keeping "alive" the nation's leaders in the talking picture, says the GLOBE of BOSTON in MASSACHUSETTS.

> . . . There is a notion that modern contrivances will be able to give future generations an accurate idea of those who now hold the center of the stage. Through the speaking motion-picture posterity will be told the truth. . . .
> Recent news from Hollywood proclaims that Ex-President Woodrow Wilson is to be brought back to the world. A motion picture study of him is available. . . . Other restorations are to show Ex-President Theodore Roosevelt, Alexander Graham Bell and Thomas A. Edison. If the pictures draw, history will be poured into any man, woman or child willing to stop, look and listen. . . .

BAD BUSINESS

Writing of "Hollywood sensations" in the NEWS of DAYTON in OHIO, James Muir warns that "scandal was regarded as very bad business" in the old days of the silent screen. Thus:

> The cinema, once as pure as the driven snow, has become so pitted with scandal from time to time that people have ceased to wonder when some new Hollywood sensation breaks on the first page. . . .
> Just as the film industry has become the dominant amusement industry of the country, so its disciples manage to get into difficulties far more frequently than the players of the lowly stage. It does not seem to make so much difference today since the films have gone talkie. But scandal was regarded as very bad business in the days when pictures were silent. . . .

BLAME

After the Kentucky Federation of Women's Clubs remonstrated over depiction of drinking in motion pictures, an editorial writer of the TIMES of LOUISVILLE quotes "drys" and "wets" alike on widespread drunkenness, and then puts his own question:

> Drunken debutantes are discussed from the differing points of view of rabid wets and drys, as if they were the rule rather than the exception.
> In the circumstances what can the movie producers do? They must depict life as it is popularly depicted, mustn't they?

NONSENSE

That much-used phrase, "What the public wants," is thoughtless and nonsensical, in the view of Robert P. Updegraff, writing in the NATION'S BUSINESS. He explains:

> . . . In his own house the theatrical producer watches the box office for today's sales and listens in the lobby to the comments of his audience on its way out. When he changes productions he gambles on what the public likes—not what it "wants." There is no greater nonsense, in or out of the theatre, than the thoughtless phrase. "What the public wants."
> That shrewd American showman, "Roxy," disillusioned me on that point several years ago.
> We were talking about the public and the theatre and "Roxy" observed: "No manager can give the public what it wants because the public doesn't know what it wants until it sees it. Even then it only knows whether it liked what you gave it. It never wanted it in the first place."
> The simple fact is that the public never spontaneously wants anything but food, clothing, shelter and perhaps leisure. . . .

SENSITIVE

The question whether the public is as sensitive as the producers appear to believe is raised in a syndicated editorial article in the TIMES of CUMBERLAND in MARYLAND. Of such "exaggerated carefulness" he says:

> . . . In the recent picture, "Okay America," the President of the United States appears briefly as a character, but only his hand appears and a shadow of him. Apparently the director regards a President as too awesome a figure to be treated as other characters are.
> All of which leads one to wonder whether the public is as sensitive as the producers in these matters. Stage audiences seem to be able to stand more than movie audiences. One of the charming features of "The Green Pastures" is the dignity and graciousness of the old Negro who plays the part of God. If the movies ever tackle that drama, what will they do with the important part of "de Lawd?"

DISTORTION

A writer in the JOURNAL OF MILWAUKEE in WISCONSIN views with alarm the "unrealness" of Hollywood and wonders whether its product is a "true mirror of life" or "one of those distortion devices seen in an amusement park." He says:

> Hollywood . . . is not changed. We doubt if it can change. As well ask the "pike" and sideshow row of a circus to change. Its very unrealness prevents that sanity and balance which are necessary in the direction and regulation of people's lives. The film people are victims rather than unrepentent sinners.
> . . . Their escapades will probably never reach into our lives. Their art does. It is our chief entertainment diet. And it should be a matter of grave concern to America that in motivation and effect much of it is as unreal as Hollywood itself. If the purpose of drama is to hold a mirror up to life, then it matters a great deal whether this be a true mirror or one of those distortion devices seen in an amusement park.

PRAYERS

Ferdinand H. Pease of New York City writes to THE CHURCHMAN about several pictures "in which a straightforward, honest, open-eyed prayer has been very impressive," and which he thought were "real progress."

SHORT SUBJECTS WIN SPOTLIGHT WITH DECLINE OF DUAL FEATURES

Recognition of Shorts in Academy Awards and Inclusion in "Exclusive Run" Project Also Are Factors in Rejuvenation

Short subjects are taking their place in the industry's spotlight. A number of factors have contributed to this development, principally the recent return in Chicago and Detroit to the single feature policy; the announcement of the recognition of shorts to be made in the annual awards program of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, and the short product "exclusive run" deal now nearing completion between Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and Harry C. Arthur, New England circuit operator.

The defeat of the double bill regime in Chicago and Detroit, coupled with the fact that Kansas City and other exhibitors are considering a return to singles, gives every indication that the country, with the possible exception of New England, is heading toward the single feature policy. With the change in Chicago and Detroit, though effective only a few weeks, there has been an immediate increase noted in short product sales by almost every one of the larger companies. Short subjects sales managers were unanimously optimistic, both because of present business pick-up and prospective increases.

A symposium of opinions on this subject indicates definite improvement in short feature sales which ranged to as high as 150 per cent. The following companies were covered:

Educational—Jack H. Skirball, sales manager, reported that from the second week of September through October 1, sales increased 110 per cent.

Warner Bros.—Sales in the Chicago territory increased 150 per cent over the previous year at the same time, said Norman H. Moray, Vitaphone sales manager. "Our billings to theatres for actual performances of shorts have gone up 100 per cent over the previous two weeks—or any previous two weeks period under double features."

Paramount—It was the consensus of George Shaefer, general sales manager, and the division managers, that about 25 to 30 per cent increase in short product sales has been obtained in Chicago. However, this increase probably will be still greater as the results thus far have been shown for only a relatively short time since Chicago went off double billings. With the exception of New England, Mr. Shaefer believes that the majority of exhibitors will return to singles.

Universal—"There has been an excellent increase in short product sale in the Chicago territory," Harry Milstein, short subject sales manager, reported. "Our newsreel sale is increasing greatly. In them we are featuring the evidences of business upturn and have found that this has a good psychological reaction on audiences. I believe that singles will return generally. That policy is the natural foundation of the business. The customer is better satisfied with this type of program which gives him real variety and entertainment. As a matter of fact, many people stay away from doubles because they have seen one of the pictures. And with double billings at least one of the two pictures is apt to be a weak sister. While we have cut down the number of our short releases, we are spending more money in an attempt to further increase their quality."

RKO Radio—"Theatres that had contracts dormant on account of double billings are now opening up and taking both our old comedies and our new ones as fast as we can deliver them," said Al Mertz, short subjects sales manager. "In the last thirty days our short product sales in Chicago have increased 35 per cent. The theatres today are shopping for good 2-reel subjects. They are using as much care in this as they are in selecting features."

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer—"There has been no appreciable difference in sales," reported Fred Quimby, short subjects sales manager. "Our short product has been booked regularly in Chicago. Exhibitors have sometimes used Laurel and Hardy comedies and billed them with the features as 'doubles.' I think that the step taken at Chicago should result to the benefit of the short product market generally."

Columbia—This company reported an increase of 30 per cent in the last sixty days irrespective of changes back to single billings. It was said that while Chicago has started buying shorts it has not yet done much exhibiting on the new basis of single features.

Fox—George Roberts, short subjects sales manager, said: "There have been no indications of increases."

Concurrently with the reports of better short product business throughout the country comes the announcement by the Academy of the appointment of a special committee to outline rules for nomination and selection of short subject awards.

There will be three classifications in the short subject group eligible for certificates of honorable mention.

1. Subjects of 3,000 feet or less first publicly exhibited in the Los Angeles district during the year ending July 31, 1932, are eligible.
2. All subjects submitted for recognition must be submitted to the Academy before October 18.
3. Only one subject from a series a producer makes may be submitted in each classification.
4. Classifications are: (a) mechanical or animations, (b) comedies, (c) novelties.

An Academy committee of 15 members will view all subjects entered. A group of five members each will be assigned to each classification. Winners will receive their certificate of honorable mention at the annual awards banquet.

Still another departure is the negotiation now under way between Metro and Harry C. Arthur for the exclusive showing of MGM's shorts in six New England towns. William F. Scully, eastern district manager for MGM, said on Monday that the deal was not completed but that he expected to be able to make a definite statement later this week.

According to the reported terms the Metro shorts, 89 in all, will be shown only in the former Fox Poli theatres in New Haven, Meriden, Worcester, Bridgeport, Springfield and Waterbury. It is understood that the exclusive arrangements are to include the entire output of features as well. Approximately $1,000,000 will be involved in the contract.

Other than Loew's State in Providence, Mr. Arthur will be the only exhibitor to show MGM pictures exclusively in New England.

After the news of the shorts exclusive deal comes a report, this time from Warner to the effect that that company is launching a campaign on short subjects to offset doubles. Speaking of the development, Mr. Moray said: "We believe that name value in shorts will successfully offset competition of double bills and sometimes even compete favorably with single features."

In an attempt to prove that big names in short subjects can effectively compete with stafe shows—or can enable theatres to substitute this type of entertainment for stage—a special program of "name" shorts is used by Warner Bros. for the Broadway premiere of "They Call It Sin," opening at the Winter Garden this week. The Vitaphone program will consist of Charlie Chaplin, Jack Dempsey and Douglas Fairbanks, who appear in "Out of the Past," a "Pepper Pot" number. Hal LeRoy and Mitzi Mayfair, dancers, are in "Tip, Tap, Toe," a "Broadway Brevities" musical comedy. "Rambling Around Radio Row" features a number of radio headliners, among them J. C. Flippen, the Four Lombardo Brothers, Aunt Jemima, Baby Rose Marie and Howard Lanin and his orchestra.

Lasky, Fox Deal Near Completion

The negotiations whereby Jesse L. Lasky will become an independent producer associated with Fox Film Corporation were nearing completion on Wednesday. It is expected that the contract between Mr. Lasky and Sidney R. Kent will be signed this week.

To Study New Cleveland Situation on Protection

A joint meeting of Cleveland motion picture theatre owners, theatre managers, branch managers and bookers to explain details of protection as set forth in the settlement agreement which ended the monopoly suit of independent exhibitors against all of the producers and distributors, was voted at a meeting of the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors Association last week.

A clear understanding of the protection rules as incorporated in the agreement will, it was stated, eliminate all possibility of unintentional breaches, and save a lot of trouble for everyone concerned.

To Vote on Sunday Films

The Alabama legislature has favorably reported a bill providing for a referendum on Sunday motion pictures for Birmingham, to be voted at the November election.

REDUCTION OF COST AT THE STUDIO UP TO TECHNICIAN, SAYS ECONOMIST

Campbell MacCulloch Points to Savings Already Made by Synchro-Projection Process of Composite Photography

Calls Mechanics of Production Clumsy and Expensive; Cites 7% Reduction in Proportion of Sound Cost to Negative

by CAMPBELL MAC CULLOCH

Mr. Campbell MacCulloch, engineer and economist, is a man of long experience with matters cinematic. In 1925 Mr. MacCulloch was sent from New York to Hollywood to make an industrial survey for a large studio. Since then he has done the same job for several other companies. His connection with motion pictures dates from Triangle days, when he was scenario editor. A graduate engineer of the University of Toronto, he is also an inveterate motion picture "fan," and Hollywood says he knows more about costs, real and imaginary, than any one else in the picture capital.

Important potential changes in one of the major Hollywood studios are reported as following a heated quarrel between home office executives and production chiefs. The argument centered around the excessive costs of the studio's product. The home office people insisted that a picture that cost four or five hundred thousand dollars, and grossed but five or six hundred thousand was merely a short-cut to bankruptcy. The production executive remarked that his job was to make the best possible pictures, and if the home office couldn't sell them that merely indicated the need of an entirely new and more competent sales force.

This situation is mentioned merely because it points very clearly to the next vital and important step in prospect, the necessity for technical improvements that will permit production at something less than the present day costs. Put another way, salvation for the motion picture industry lies in the hands of the technician. At present the whole procedure is far too complicated and expensive, and further short-cuts, eliminations and cut-offs are necessary.

Composite Photography

A fair indication of what is needed is shown by the synchro-projection process of composite photography which came into being a year or so ago. That it already has proved an economic boon to the major studios is unquestioned. One frankly admits that from 15 to 20 per cent represents the curtailment in cost of production; another believes that 10 per cent reduction in costs may be attributed to the use of the new system.

Briefly, its development means that much of the scenic background for a picture may be extracted from a filing case; that the necessity for sending company, technical equipment and executive staff, with all the consequent problems of transportation, maintenance and ineffectiveness, may be largely eliminated, production time economized and an equal if not superior result achieved. In essence the process—which is nonpatentable, by the way—is a method of projecting a suitable filmed background upon a large translucent screen from the rear, of posing in front of this screen the necessary foreground action, and, by means of a camera synchronized with the projector, of photographing both live foreground action and projected background together to form a composite.

This means that a library of backgrounds may be built up, backgrounds from all the world.

MGM's bill for its African expedition to film "Trader Horn" in situ was tremendous. Today a couple of cameramen and a technician with a portable sound equipment could get all necessary locale and atmospheric sound at a fraction of the cost. Several years ago the studios learned how to combine two or more sound tracks to get the desired composite effect, so the Indian tiger's snarl can be imposed upon the traffic of Broadway or the Strand and gain a verisimilitude that defies dissatisfaction.

For six months Paramount Publix has had a cameraman roaming Europe, shooting whatever scenes his judgment or instructions indicate will prove useful. With each scene he supplies data as to the type of lens, height of lens above the ground, and inclination angle of the camera. The backgrounds are developed in Hollywood and the accompanying data filed with them. In use the camera is set at the same angle and height, and the foreground action composed upon the projected scene.

Interest Charges

And there's a secondary factor that ultimately may have a tremendously interesting effect upon the whole problem of production. Present day studios represent an investment of capital that affects production cost because of the necessity for spreading the overhead it represents. Reasonable interest charges on a studio investment of ten millions will be at least $600,000 a year, or about $2,000 per working day. If the studio turns out 40 features in the year this means that each picture must absorb $15,000 for this one item.

It is a fair assumption that eventually such extensive area and building investment will be unnecessary as the use of projected backgrounds increases, so presumably some of the acreage may be disposed of or converted to other uses. With fewer or less extensive facilities a reduction in both maintenance and investment will be advantageous. But capital will be needed to keep a group of cameramen abroad upon the earth.

Unquestionably the motion picture is hampered by its attendant costs. Literature, art and the stage have nothing like so great a production load to carry. Harold Bell Wright, James Montgomery Flagg, Gutzon Borglum, George Gershwin, or Noel Coward requires but a few simple tools or equipment to get results that are salable to the public. But to take any one of their ideas and get it in merchandising shape in motion picture form requires investment of a sum that represents a sizeable fortune.

That's where the technician comes in—or should come in. That's where the great producing units should be spending part of their money—in research into methods that will reduce production costs to the point where if but 700,000 persons patronize a picture their contribution will have amortized its cost. Today the mechanics of production are too clumsy; too involved; too costly. Progress has been made in the last decade, of course, as witness the increasing use of miniatures, and recently the combination of these with the projected background and a live foreground action, but these are operative in but one direction. Actors cost money—and when they are of the star caliber, probably unreasonably too much money.

Sound Cost Reduction

As an indication of what may be accomplished under pressure, in the first year or two sound ran to nearly 10 per cent of total negative cost. Today it averages under 3 per cent. The difference in a production costing $200,000 is $14,000. Photography today will probably average 15 per cent of negative cost. If that could be cut to 5 per cent it would mean another $20,000 out of the hypothetical production just mentioned. And it could be, though perhaps the job is not all the technicians'. The director who finds it necessary to protect himself by shooting seven camera angles on every scene some day will be classed as the incompetent he is. One of these gentlemen, who must perforce be nameless, recently shot and turned into the laboratory over 400,000 feet of negative to get a 6,500-foot picture. That meant $50,000 alone for photography, to say nothing of the criminal waste of time.

The public has a vital interest in these things because they pay the bills. The exhibitor stands out in the middle and so has a personal interest in what pictures cost, for he is compelled to pass his increased film rentals on to the public. When that public resents either increased cost or lower quality by staying away from the theatre, the exhibitor may reasonably lay responsibility for those vanished revenues on the doorstep of the producers.

Pictures can be made more cheaply and better, and the producing studios might encourage the technicians to devise shorter cuts and insist that the writers and directors know rather more definitely what they are about before they set about it. The synchro-projection system is a long step in the right direction, and proves what a little intensive thought will produce. As it is, the studios seem somewhat in the situation of the gentleman who complained that he couldn't see London because of all the houses. They need someone who will spend his time thinking how pictures may be made more reasonably, and thinking of nothing else.

BRITAIN MUST DEVELOP STARS TO STAY IN RACE, SAYS CHARMAN

Cites View of Herbert Wilcox That England Lacks Leading Men "of Virility Demanded by Cinema Audiences of Today"

Problem Declared Not One of Material but Rather of Knowing How to Groom Players; Calls Comedians First Rate

by BERNARD CHARMAN
London Correspondent

Herbert Wilcox, productions director of British and Dominions, Ltd., has set the cat among the pigeons by giving public expression to a topic which lately has been going round the trade. In the Daily Mail he says: "Britain has no leading man with the standard of virility which cinema audiences of today demand of their film heroes. . . . At the present time I cannot name one straight actor in Britain with a fraction of the popular appeal commanded by such men as Clark Gable, Robert Montgomery, Gary Cooper, Richard Arlen, Chester Morris, Fredric March or Warren William."

Nor can anybody else.

I have discussed this question with a variety of people, most of them fellows who act as onlookers to the trade, and in every case we have ended with the same doleful conclusion. Ask any average English filmgoer to name half a dozen British screen stars without stopping to think, and he will give you—Tom Walls, Ralph Lynn, Jack Hulbert, Leslie Fuller, Jack Buchanan, Gordon Harker (perhaps) and no more.

There certainly is not a Gable in that crowd. In considered argument one constantly is hearing such names as John Stuart, Colin Clive, Garry Marsh, Harold Huth, Henry Kendall, and so on, but, painful as it may be to confess, there is not one of them to be compared with, to use Mr. Wilcox's examples, Robert Montgomery, or, say, Gary Cooper. Their respective merits as actors do not enter into the question, for several of the British players mentioned have been known to put over first rate performances of a type (while the careers of the Hollywood players have not all been without blemish). But none of them has, as far as memory serves, given us a virile performance to compare, for example, with that of Warren William in "The Mouthpiece." Unless, perhaps, the Capatin Stanhope of Colin Clive in "Journey's End" can be excepted.

That again, switches the argument to another track—is it the material we lack or the knowledge of how to develop it? But I can return to that later. Mr. Wilcox's point is that when he required a straight leading man for a current B. & D. production he had no alternative but to go to New York. "I have no hope at the moment," he says, "of finding such talent in Britain."

We feel over here that as far as comedy players are concerned you have to hand it to the British studios, and we get what consolation we can from that. But no abundance of people like Walls, Lynn, Buchanan, Sydney Howard, or Hulbert, Ivor Novello (whose performance in "The Lodger" suggests that he might be No. 1 in the School for British Film Heroes) can compensate for the dearth of youthful players of straight parts. It cannot be wondered at that home studios consistently avoid the straight drama and expend their substance on comedy and other product of a frothy nature. They may feel happy that pictures of this genus bring business to the box office, but the public will need a change some day, and then where will Elstree be? Back where it was around 1927?

Studios that expect to serve the world cannot hope to do so on one type of picture. Versatility is as essential to the film producer as to a good cook; you can feed a hungry man with crackers, but it takes a well planned menu with plenty of diversity to tempt him when he isn't so hungry.

Now, about this other question. Is it that we haven't the material, or that we don't recognize it when we have got it? Colin Clive made a great hit with "Journey's End," which was produced in an American studio, but he scarcely can be said to have repeated his triumph in any of the subsequent pictures he has made here. Leslie Howard had to go to Hollywood before the film fan became conscious of his existence. When he came home recently he made one of the most brilliant pictures that ever came out of a British studio. One film he made in Hollywood carried Jack Buchanan higher than all the British films he ever had made, put together.

And there are many others. Were the names of Victor McLaglen and Clive Brook box office magnets before they crossed the Atlantic? Surely, according to the law of averages, a country that can produce players of their calibre ought equally well to be able to push forward the prototype of a Phillips Holmes or a Spencer Tracy when the need arises. Paramount had an easy choice in Gary Cooper for "Morocco," but because he couldn't find an Englishman for the job, Rex Ingram had to play lead himself in "Baroud" (an almost identical subject), which is now up for judgment by the trade over here.

My opinion is that we have the material, but do not know how to set about the process of grooming players for stardom. Unless, horrible thought, our studio chiefs are afraid to indulge in the process for fear the wage capacity of their players should rise as the grooming proceeded. Men like Harold Huth and Hugh Williams have potentialities. Williams, for instance, would be improved beyond all knowledge if he were to be taught the elementary fact that film heroes should not talk as if they had a hot potato in their mouths all the time. Hollywood has made successes from much less promising material than John Stuart, and it will be interesting to see what results Fox gets from Frank Lawton when he plays in "Cavalcade."

Replying to Herbert Wilcox's article, BIP says they have discovered a young man who fulflls all the requirements. I hope they have; and if he comes up to expectations, may they preserve him and encourage him up the long ladder that leads to the bright lights.

Britain has got to find he-men if she is to continue to struggle for a place in the world markets. Herbert Wilcox, Weston Drury of BIP, and Michael Balcon of Gaumont must concentrate their attention on the masculine element of the younger generation.

One challenger I shall have in respect of that last statement will be none other than Louella Parsons, whom Wardour Street feted before her return to America this week. Miss Parsons considers our only weakness to be in the creation of feminine stars. I prefer to side with Mr. Wilcox, who avers that we have girls who can hold their own on the world's screens. Certainly even they could be helped more energetically along the way that leads to fame, though that's beside the point.

It's men we want, and it's men we've got to have.

"Grand Hotel" has opened big in London, and it is expected its New York triumph will be repeated here. The press has cheered itself hoarse, and the ticket agencies booked large blocks of seats before the opening. So great was the demand for trade show seats that three separate viewings had to be given for exhibitors and the press.

Fox and Western Electric took a copy of "Congorilla" and a portable set to the Zoological Gardens and tried the film out on the simians. It was a great success; the apes did not even throw one peanut at it.

Their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of York called "Horse Feathers" one of the funniest comedies they ever have seen.

Allan Dwan has signed with Sterling Films to direct "Her First Affair" and will not, therefore, return to Hollywood as first intended.

Renters are peeved by a film critic who listed certain features in his review as "Films to Avoid." KRS suggests legal action.

Exhibitors are complaining against evening trade shows, but renters retort that they don't come to morning or afternoon screenings.

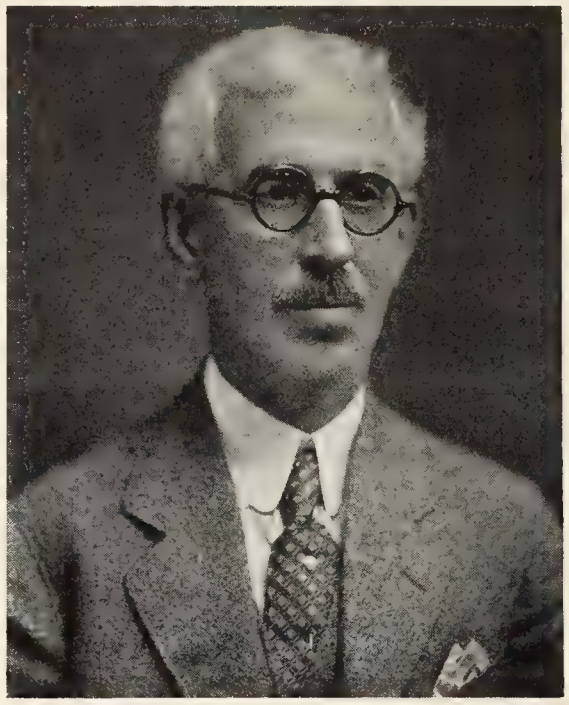
"BOSTON CASEY," NOT A CENSOR

Licensing Executive, Who Once Defeated Move for National Board, Comments on Films

by CHARLES S. AARONSON

John Michael Casey, known these two decades and more as "Boston Casey, the Censor," will take his hat off the peg in the office in Boston's City Hall, on the door of which is printed "Mayor's Office, License Division," for the last time on October 31. John Casey's hat comes off that peg for the last time not because indignant citizens clamor for his dismissal, not because a new mayor has come to guide the destinies of the city, but because Mr. Casey has reached the supposedly venerable age of 70. The law requires that the age of 70 means retirement on a pension, whether the pensionee likes it or not. Mr. Casey does not like it.

The Chief of the Licensing Division, City of Boston, to give Mr. Casey his proper title, has objected always to being characterized as a censor. He calls the attitude of the censor "often childish," and in his 28 years and nine months as licensing executive for all amusements, Mr. Casey has had ample opportunity to judge the actions of the censor.



Some few years back, executives of a large producing company conceived the notion of inviting representative censors from all parts of this country and Canada to the studio in Hollywood, for the express purpose of showing them a certain film, about which there was perhaps a slight doubt from the censorial angle, and showing them a good time as well.

John Casey held himself somewhat aloof, and when the censors met in Chicago and started westward, he ensconced himself with his inevitable cigar in the club car. The assembled censors were not particularly delighted with the degree of his enthusiasm. He "realized there was something brewing." The "something," it may be known now, was the plan of the group for a national organization of state censors.

John Casey did some thinking, and at a dinner several nights later in San Francisco, he thought out loud. Called upon to speak, he unexpectedly denounced censorship in no uncertain terms, and then proceeded to expose the entire national organization plan. It may also be recorded that the plan collapsed, then and there.

John Michael was one of only 10 children, seven boys and three girls, in the family of Casey. The elder Mr. Casey was an upholsterer. In Boston John attended public schools and Boston College, with every intention of following either the stage or music, or perhaps both. But Fate has a peculiar way of guiding the fortunes of man. John spent some seven years on the road in dramatic production, soaking up the lore of the stage of yesterday. He studied the trap and kettle drums, which he always has recognized as musical instruments, and later took up seriously the study of the violin.

He must have been a good student, though his modesty—and it is a real modesty, prevents him from admitting it, because he became first violinist for the Boston Festival orchestras and the Boston Symphony. On one of their first tours, the train stopped at a way station for a switch of engines. Mr. Casey was standing behind the observation car. The new engine backed too sharply; his right arm was severed below the elbow. His musical career was a thing of the past, and he was 40 years of age.

JOHN M. CASEY

In administering the office which he has held for so many years, and always with the fullest, most appreciative cooperation of the theatrical and motion picture folk of Boston, Mr. Casey has always attempted, he says, "to apply basic common horse sense. Training in a college or a university is not necessary to decide what is objectionable. I have tried to adapt myself to conditions. What might have been objectionable 10 years ago may be all right today. What was rough some years ago, today would be only a sermon on the stage."

The tall, slightly stooped chief, who completely belies his 70 years, despite white hair and mustache, expressed the belief that the public is satiated with much of the sophistication it sees dramatized today. "The public will always react strongly to clean entertainment," he insists.

And yet, to the best of his recollection, only one picture was taken off in Boston in all the years of his incumbency, and "The Birth of a Nation" was also stopped on a return engagement. Mention of "The Birth of a Nation" called to mind an amusing story concerning its first appearance in Boston and the reform societies who long plagued the footsteps of John Casey but were held in check by him, not only in Boston but throughout the state.

When the picture was due in Boston, various societies went overboard with protests to the appeal board—the mayor, the chief magistrate of the city court and the chief of police—and going over Mr. Casey's head. The mayor called together all the protesting individuals for a preview showing of the film. Before the picture started, however, he asked specifically the nature of the objections concerning it. No one answered. The mayor put his next question: how many had seen the picture. Only one of those present, an elderly colored man, stood up. He said quietly, "Your Honor, I saw the film and I think it is a very fine picture."

Mr. Casey arose in turn and said, "That's all we want to know. The picture will go in." And the picture did.

John Casey has always been willing to go to bat for a liberal interpretation of regulations for which he stands almost in the position of sponsor. In one instance the censor of Pennsylvania had sadly mutilated a film, ridiculously, in Mr. Casey's opinion. There was a certain sentiment in Boston for a duplication there. Mr. Casey organized a protest meeting, showed the picture uncut, and read the Pennsylvania eliminations. The audience howled. Mr. Casey won his point for liberalism, and the picture was shown throughout the state in uncut form.

It is to Mr. Casey's credit that his judgments are followed not only in Massachusetts, but in other New England states as well. It is generally recognized in Boston that John Casey was chiefly responsible for the referendum vote which resulted in a refusal on the part of the voters of the state to countenance censorship.

John Casey knew old John L. Sullivan very well. The grand old heavyweight champion and John played ball together as kids on the Boston lots. One night John was handling his kettle and trap drums with an orchestra when John L. came into the hall with a group of friends. John L., it must be recorded in the cause of accuracy, was slightly inebriated. He spied John and his drums, and started for him. Audience, musicians, music stands were scattered in an uproar. Reaching John Casey, the other John lifted him bodily and carried him out of the orchestra.

In the small home in Roslindale, a Boston suburb, where Mr. Casey and his wife live, he has a highly prized card index system, devised by himself. Therein is contained a complete record of all pictures, a history of each film, with all objections, if any, recorded against the film anywhere.

Drawing on his cigar, Mr. Casey spoke emphatically of his attitude toward the things he sees. "I have always tried to reflect public opinion. I have never tried to inject personal feeling in any shape, manner or form. I have always gone into the theatre openly, attempting to put myself in the position of the man I am doing business with. The theatre men have always been very, very cooperative."

"I feel that I am leaving something that has been just as a child to me. I created it, brought it up." And speaking of idleness, he said, "It is strange, but the only time I can endure idleness is when I am on the water, in a boat. Probably it is because there is no way for me to get off."

SOLVING A CHILD AGE LIMIT PROBLEM

Cards for All Pupils, Signed by Teachers, Proposed to Erase Vexatious 12-Year Dividing Line

Necessity has mothered many a problem. The latest is that of the age limit of children's admissions. A case in point is the situation of the past summer at Louisville, Ky.

For many years exhibitors of Louisville have classified children as those under 12 years of age, and all over that age as adults. In the downtown theatres the rule never has been strictly followed. In the suburban or neighborhood houses the restrictions have been materially eased, although in some the age limit is as low as 11 years.

Managers of several leading suburban theatres agree that the problem always has been troublous, causing arguments at box offices, holding up ticket sales, and producing ill feeling. Today there are some suburban managers who are so anxious to get the children, and hold up attendance, that they will admit anyone even resembling a child at a child's price, and no questions asked.

"Youngsters" at 20

"I'm so glad to get them today," said Henry Reis, manager of the Ideal theatre, "that even if they are 20 years old, and represent youngsters of my neighborhood, especially those who I know can't afford a 25 cent ticket, I let 'em in for 15 cents."

O. C. Lee, of the Park theatre, remarked: "We try to be just as lenient as possible, and in recent months we haven't been at all arbitrary regarding the matter. There is a world of youngsters that are over 12 years of age, still in school, having trouble in getting nickels, and it wouldn't be fair to bar them."

Under discussion is a program for admitting all small children, as well as all of those still attending grade or grammar school, at a child's price. The program would be to have cards printed, such cards to be distributed by the box office and signed by school teacher or principal, showing that a child is a pupil of a grade school.

A Ruse That Sometimes Works

There has also been consideration of a junior ticket, for use of junior or high school students and others up to say 20 years of age, but this would necessitate a third reel of tickets.

"I believe that this suggestion for classifying all children attending grade school as children is sound, and it may be taken up in the fall," said Louis F. Stererle, manager of the Broadway. "We know almost all the children who come to our theatre, and have watched a lot of them grow up. Right now we know that many of them haven't the money and we let them in for a dime, some for 15 cents, and at times for nothing. It would hardly be fair to penalize the youngster who isn't going to school and couldn't get a card. You would be surprised to know how many children of school age are not attending school because their parents can't afford to buy them clothing and books."

Harry Mouth, of the Oak theatre, said such a classification might go a long way toward solving the problem. As it is, older boys will get smaller ones to buy them children's tickets and then try to pass them at the door.

It is agreed that it scarcely seems fair to charge a 13 year old boy or girl an adult admission. A year's difference in age doesn't change the child's status, when he is still dependent upon the parents for nickels and dimes. True, a few may carry papers or caddy at the golf clubs, but many help at home, buy their school lunches, perhaps some of their clothing.

Suburban prices range from 10 to 15 cents for children and 25 cents for adults. From 10 to 25 cents is too big a jump, several exhibitors held.

Differences in neighborhoods were pointed out by Charlie Krebs, of the Fourth Avenue Amusement Company. "When I operated the old Cherokee theatre, in a wealthy suburban district," Mr. Krebs said, "we had very little difficulty. The kids had no more trouble in getting a quarter than a dime, when they turned the age limit."

Dolle Favors Plan

Fred Dolle, of the Fourth Avenue Amusement Company, felt favorable toward the plan. Mr. Dolle said: "There is virtually no difference in the status of a child in fifth or eighth grade, whether 12 or 15 years of age. It probably would be of advantage to cooperate with the schools and aid the youngsters who are trying to get an education."

It was pointed out that frequently when a picture of educational or historical value is being shown school teachers suggest attendance by as many children as can do so but would hesitate over requests calling for a 25 cent admission.

In the downtown theatres the managements never enforce the 12 year ruling.

Col. Clint Stubblefield of the Strand said: "Unless an applicant for a child's ticket is very clearly an adult, there is no question. The ticket sellers have instructions to be easy, as we want the good will of the kids, and figure them as future customers for adult tickets. They can't always come in as children."

"Just as Much a Kid at 16"

Johnson Mussellman of the Rialto put it this way: "Of course when they get hair on their chins, and long trousers, it is time to call a halt. Your children are a big boost for you. Sometimes we pack the house with a Saturday show for children at ten cents, so that they'll go home and encourage their parents to come. We give the children toys, too. We don't make any money on the one show, but we get a lot of publicity."

There has always been some trouble over small boys buying tickets for larger ones. There was one case of a lawsuit developing over ejection of a lad who got in that way. He contended that he bought the ticket for a dime from the box office himself, was permitted to enter and then run out.

Walter McDowell of Loew's said: "Our age limit is supposed to be 12 years, but we never have any wrangles at the box office regarding the matter. In many instances a 15 or 16-year-old is just as much a kid as one 12 or 13 years of age."

In many downtown theatres there is no question unless the patron is clearly 17 or 18 years of age, and especially at daytime shows. It is also wellknown to the youngsters that they have far less trouble in "getting by" in downtown houses than in the suburban houses, where they are better known.

Lee Goldberg, manager of the Warner Brothers theatres in Kentucky, said that his policy has been to admit grade school children at all theatres at children's prices. He held that the idea of using cards signed by the schools was praiseworthy.

Mr. Goldberg remarked that he always had favored low prices to children in that they help interest the adults of the family.

Gaumont Plans Production Increase for Current Year

Gaumont British plans to increase production to 40 features this year and anticipates breaking into the American market, according to Maurice Ostrer, member of Ostrer Brothers, banking house backing the British company. Arthur Lee, long representative of Gaumont British, will handle the product here.

Mr. Ostrer, with William J. Gell, another company official, had returned to New York from Hollywood before leaving for London last week. During his visit Mr. Ostrer purchased for his company, which controls about 300 theatres in England, 23 World Wide features, five from Invincible, of which two have already been completed; eight from Allied and six which George Weeks will produce under the Golden Arrow label. They will be distributed in the United Kingdom through Ideal, Wardour and W. and F. Film service, Gaumont distributing units.

MGM to Continue French, Italian Versions on Coast

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer will continue production of French and Italian versions at Culver City. Special negatives for foreigns will be made while American versions are in production and then sent abroad for addition of dialogue and sound effects as soon as headquarters can be set up in Paris and Rome. German versions will not be used because of quota restrictions.

Fred Pelton, of the MGM foreign department, arrived in New York last week and sailed later to survey European conditions. The special purpose of his trip is to investigate studios and synchronizing processes for use by the company. This announcement reverses the previous MGM plan of dropping out of the foreign field entirely if the quota laws of France, Germany and Italy were not revised.

Gable-Harlow Team Inspiration For the Marquee

by LEO MEEHAN

Hollywood Staff Correspondent

What with everybody interested in practising up on his shots the past week for the Sixth Annual Motion Picture Golf Tournament, sponsored by the Quigley Publications, the boys had trouble keeping their minds on previews.

Which doesn't prevent us from saying that Mrs. Preview and your correspondent enjoyed a great Sunday evening over in Glendale looking at a new MGM production called "Red Dust." It includes the best screen performances ever done by Mr. Clark Gable and Miss Jean Harlow. If that combination means nothing in your marquee, well, it is no business of ours to tell you about your business!

Metro has made something more than a savage brute of Brother Gable in this one. Oh yes, the hairy chest, the hard-boiled mannerisms, the yesterday's shave, are all there. But in addition, Clark has a chance to smile, to show that he's a good fellow, a real he-man. And with Jean to kid, and Jean to kid him, we promise you'll get plenty of chuckles when you see this.

As for la Harlow, if you ever saw a reincarnation of Sadie Thompson, this is it. She is an adventuress, to be sure. Probably Jean always will have those parts handed to her. But this time she's no cold-blooded one. Like Gable, she's full of humor and tolerance and patience. It is a most vivid character that Jean plays, and it is a toss-up whether she highlights Gable's performance or he highlights hers. In either event, it was a first run idea, and it certainly jelled in the making. The locale is a rubber plantation somewhere in the tropics. All is done with the customary MGM thoroughness.

I told you Mrs. Preview enjoyed it, as well as I, so you wouldn't think it was too torrid. And wait until you see Gable giving Harlow a (well censored) bath! Jean, by the way, has ditched the red wig this time for the permanent platinum locks.

Something Different

"Six Hours to Live," may very well prove to be the genesis of a new trend in production. Fox here has created a spiritual atmosphere which is at once dignified and impressive. At the same time it has fine suspense and production value. It is the story of a murdered man (Warner Baxter) who is brought back to life by a new miracle of science—but only for six hours. He has seen the other side, and it has changed his entire viewpoint. What he does with romance and statesmanship and human relations, because of his immortal vision, makes a most intriguing story, splendidly handled.

We have had so much of the material, the mundane, the dregs of life in production of the past year that it certainly is elevating to have someone with sufficient courage to offer a theme based upon hope and eternity and selflessness. "Six Hours to Live" is a picture the industry can brag about. And mind you, it is no preachment, but real entertainment. Exhibitors probably will be happy to recommend it to the very best elements in their communities.

Paul Muni seems desined to be the "omega" of cycles in screen characterization. He was the last word in gangsters by his unforgettable portrayal of the underworld boss in "Scarface." Now he comes along as the cinematic victim of the prison chain gang system in a Warner picture called "I Am a Fugitive from a Chain Gang." He is surrounded by a big cast of well-known players, but primarily it is Muni's job. He does it so realistically that the women may claw the plush off the arms of their seats. It is a terrific indictment of the chain gang system of prison welfare, and leaves no room for any new material on the subject.

The Florida sweatbox is not used, but you can believe that it exposes other inhumanities which will make your hair stand on end.

We have a hunch that "Scarlet Dawn," from Warner's, will get a working-over at the studios before it goes out. It is the latest starring vehicle for Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., and is all about the red revolution in Russia and its subsequent leveling of classes with the masses. Nancy Carroll, playing a former servant of the aristocratic Doug, finds herself a fugitive with him, and a romance develops. It is pretty deep and not very definite sociology for a lot of us. It's a strange thing that the greatest modern sociological experiment has been Red Russia, full of drama, yet to date motion pictures haven't really done anything especially impressive with a subject which has great possibilities.

If you are shopping for something out of the ordinary, but the way, look up a production that Harry Lachman did in England for Paramount called "Down Our Street." It is very unusual in conception and execution. It is all laid among the cockneys of London, whose dialect and manners are foreign to ours as those of Mongolia. Yet it is a slum story of compelling interest, with some grand acting by people we never heard of, and direction which has imagination and refreshing vigor. Mr. Lachman, incidentally, has arrived in Hollywood to direct for Fox. He looks like some of that new "man power" Sidney Kent spoke about. Later on we may have to say "I told you so" about Harry Lachman.

50 PRIZES AWARDED AT QUIGLEY TOURNEY

Coast Golf Tournament Brings Out 200 Players at Rancho Club; Liebowitz, Rogell Take Main Prizes; Fox Team Wins

The golfing addicts of the Hollywood film community had their opportunity to settle those bets and find out who was telling the truth about that score card last Saturday and Sunday, when the Sixth Annual Motion Picture Golf Tournament, sponsored by the Quigley Publications, was run off at the Rancho Golf Club.

Better than 200 of filmdom's ablest club-wielders came out to play—and divide among them 50 prizes of various sorts. Fox, represented by Lloyd Noble, Jack Boland, Al Liebowitz and Mike Garvey, annexed the studio division awards, an innovation in the tournament play which brought forth unusual interest and keen competition.

Al Liebowitz demonstrated that it was possible to take an individual prize as well as aiding in the team victory, by capturing one of the two principal prizes with a low gross of 74. Sid Rogell was directly on his heels for major tournament honors with a low net of 64.

The actors found it impossible to settle their battle at the same time as every one else, or perhaps they merely wanted to stretch the fun. At a later date to be determined Eddie Quillan, Major Covell and Jack Kennedy, who were careless enough to tie in the actors' division, will tee off again without the aid of the conciliation committee, to see who is best man.

Warren Keefe took low gross and John Meehan the low net prize in the writers' division. The directors succumbed to the shots of Jack Liebowitz, who won low gross, while George Marshall was second. Low net in that group went to Jack Conway with Sam Wood close behind him. In the producers' and executives' classification, Carl Strauss put the low gross in his pocket, and the efforts of A. J. Van Enger carried home the prize for low net among the bosses.

Exhibitors and exchange managers bowed to the prowess with the clubs of Dave Bershon and J. J. Milstein, who captured low net and low gross respectively. Jim Townsend and Frank Joyce, with low gross and low net respectively, took the measure of the agents on the course. The publicity and press representatives present were taken into camp by Barnard Wickham, who will put the low gross prize on his mantelpiece, and Joseph Sherman, who came through to take the low net award.

All-Star Benefit November 6

Warner will hold an all-star revue on Sunday evening, November 6, at the Hollywood theatre, Los Angeles, for the benefit of the Milk and Egg League of the Los Angeles Sanatorium and the Actors Relief Fund. Harry L. Charnas, general manager of Warner metropolitan theatres in New York, is directing the revue.

EXHIBITOR MASS MEETINGS TO ACT ON JOINT ALLIED-MPTOA PROGRAM

Theatre Men Will Convene November 28 in Chicago, and Second Gathering Will Follow December 1 in New York City

The full scope of the joint program of Allied States Association and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America is expected to be revealed to the rank and file of exhibitors for the first time at a mass meeting of all theatre owners which has been called for November 28 in Chicago. Another meeting will follow in New York on December 1. When approval of individual exhibitor units has been obtained for the joint proposals of Allied-MPTOA leaders for federal regulation and immediate adoption of a standard exhibition contract, the "big push" of the united campaign for correcting so-called exhibitor "ills" will be launched along all fronts.

Following a second conference of national Allied and MPTOA executives late last week in Chicago, conjecture was rife about headquarters in the Congress hotel as to the eventual setup of the two bodies at the conclusion of the forthcoming mass meetings. Whether both organizations, retaining their identity and personnel as at present, can carry on the program agreed upon as effectively under the present dual setup, or whether one large organization would be more desirable, is a question which may find solution at the two mass conferences. Speaking before Allied of Michigan, assembled in annual convention at Detroit a few days before last week's Chicago session, Abram F. Myers, general counsel, while not referring specifically to establishing one exhibitor association, advocated the formation of a single trade organization "through which the several branches of the industry can cooperate for the protection of their common interests and work for the reconciliation of their differences."

The next move in the national exhibitor drive for a betterment of conditions revolves around the reaction of the exhibitor masses at the meetings on November 28 and December 1. Up to now the national leaders have alone been responsible for the planks adopted in joint conference and final approval must be given by the memberships at large to the program which involves a contract, federal legislation, arbitration, exclusive runs, protection and zoning.

Aside from the naming of dates for the two mass meetings, and reaffirmation of the joint bodies to carry out the legislative program agreed upon September 20, the accomplishment of the joint committee in Chicago last week remains something of a mystery. That one or more mass meetings were being considered was known immediately following the first conference in September which marked the get-together of the two organizations.

The two-day session at the Congress was marked by enforced silence. Press representatives were told that no informal talking would be indulged in by either Mr. Steffes or Mr. Lightman, chairmen. Members of the committee were also informed that any remarks from them would be regarded as a breach.

The latest conference, according to advance information, was expected to dig deeply into plans for pushing the new federal bill and announcements of importance with respect to a new contract were looked for. The joint statement issued at the conclusion of the meeting indicated that these matters undoubtedly had been discussed, but no information was offered as to the extent of the progress which may have been made. "Doesn't look like much for two days' work, does it?" Mr. Steffes commented as he handed out the following official statement which contained his signature and the name of Mr. Lightman:

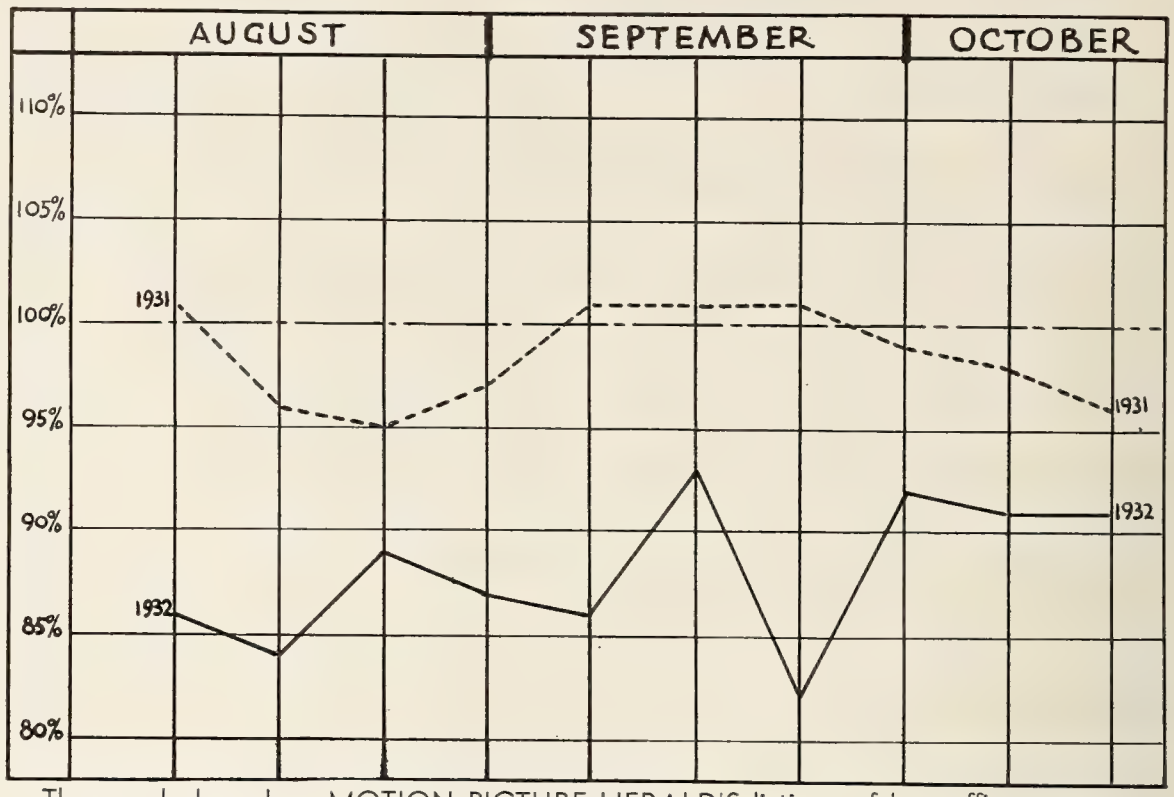
The joint committee of MPTOA and Allied have been in session for two days at the Congress Hotel in Chicago.

Sessions were marked by the utmost unity and there was a complete reaffirmation of the program announced by the committee on September 20.

It is the expressed hope of members of the committee that this statement will put at rest rumors of dissension propagated by the trade press.

In earnest of this, the committee has agreed to call two mass meetings of exhibitors to cement support and crystallize public sentiment for the program.

The first meeting will be held in Chicago on November 28; the second in New York on December 1. Messrs. Steffes and Lightman will act as joint chairmen of both meetings.



The details of the meetings have been committed to subcommittees composed of MPTOA and Allied men in equal numbers.

Committee also were named to arrange details of the joint campaign for the four-point program which includes Federal and State legislation, an equitable exhibition contract, elimination of exclusive and unfair protection and machinery for future industry cooperation.

A draft of uniform contract submitted by a member of the committee was referred to a sub-committee which will make changes therein suggested by the others and to put it in final shape for consideration by the whole committee.

Asked to amplify some features of the statement, Mr. Steffes said "That's all there is." He did express disapproval of stories which he declared had been published and which he intimated sought to throw a "monkey wrench" into the functions of the bodies by intimations of a complete lack of unity on the program of the two organizations.

The subcommittee which has in hand the drafting of a standard contract to replace the 5-5-5 form is headed by Mr. Lightman and Mr. Myers and also includes George Aarons of Philadelphia and Herman Blum of Baltimore. Attending the two-day session besides Lightman, Myers and Steffes, were H. M. Richey, Ed. Levy, Fred Wehrenberg, Lester Martin, Charles Picquet, Aaron Saperstein and Fred Meyer. Nathan Yamins, Col. H. A. Cole and Sidney Samuelson, who were on the original joint committee, were not present.

The graph, based on MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S listings of box office grosses, presents a comparison of the business done in twelve cities since the beginning of August, 1932, with the business done in the same cities during the same period in 1931. The 100 per cent line represents the average weekly gross in the twelve cities during the entire year 1931. These cities are Boston, Chicago, Cleveland, Hollywood, Kansas City, Los Angeles, Minneapolis, New York, Oklahoma City, Omaha, Portland, and San Francisco.

BRITONS DEPENDING LESS AND LESS ON U. S. PICTURES, SAYS FREDMAN

Editor of "Film Renter" Declares British Films Costing $100,000 Play to as Much Money as Americans' at $250,000

Declaring that "our good pictures are drawing better than your best pictures, with the possible exception of 'Grand Hotel,'" Ernest W. Fredman, editor and publisher of the Daily Film Renter of London, who arrived in New York this week, emphasized that British exhibitors are most optimistic and are depending less and less on American product. Mr. Fredman at the same time said that he did not intend to make any appeal on behalf of British pictures while here on his fifth trip of inspection of America's film industry.

"Our pictures which cost $100,000 to produce play to as much money as yours which cost $250,000," said Mr. Fredman. "For example, there was 'Sunshine Susie,' which grossed $400,000, and 'Jack's the Boy,' which played to an equal amount. Despite adverse weather conditions, this last picture had a run of 17 weeks in a West End theatre in London this summer."

Mr. Fredman pointed out that the English people have discounted the depression, which is perhaps one good reason why, as a general observation, business conditions in England are comparatively good today.

"There has been a marked change in our talkers," Mr. Fredman said.

"Stories that more nearly meet the requirements of the British temperament have had a heartening effect on the trade. Furthermore, language is enunciated as it is best understood. Added to these things is a nationalist spirit which automatically gives preference to home product. As a result of these factors, our average negative costs in Britain today run between $150,000 and $175,000 and some pictures will exceed that. The producer can be assured a profit through Empire-wide distribution without participation in the American market. This can be maintained provided quality holds up."

Urging a closer study of the British market by American distributors for purely practical reasons, Mr. Fredman reasoned that since America gets the bulk of its overseas revenue from Great Britain it would be wise to eliminate expensive sales machinery maintained on the Continent which, he said, is admittedly unprofitable.

Mr. Fredman said that exclusives had not been tried in England. Most exhibitors there are doing well and probably any attempt to show exclusives in England will be forthcoming only if the experiment proves successful here.

At the formal opening of the new series of Motion Picture Club Forum sessions on Tuesday, Mr. Fredman and Surrogate John P. O'Brien, Democratic nominee for Mayor, were the principal speakers. Mr. Fredman, who was introduced by toastmaster Louis Nizer, made a witty address in which he announced that he was not here to talk about business troubles or any "plan we have in Great Britain." He assured his audience that if he did have any point of view with respect to the situation here it had been well formulated for him by members of the trade press on his arrival in New York.

Judge O'Brien, introduced as a "friend of the theatre," spoke briefly. He went into some detail regarding his qualifications for the Mayor's office, stressing the fact that, as judge of the surrogate's court, he had been instrumental in assisting a number of Broadway theatres to open at their scheduled time.

Senator Royal S. Copeland maintained that the present tax system was inefficient and said "it is time we had organized groups with saner views of national problems approaching Congress." He urged the motion picture industry to encourage congressmen by giving them its support. "The theatre tax, for instance, was supposed to bring in $3,500,000 a month. Actually it is bringing in $1,000,000 a month," he said.

Following his address, Senator Copeland said that a modification of the "nuisance taxes," including the admission tax, was "highly probable" during the coming short session of Congress in December. Senator Copeland admitted that this eventually would largely depend on the passage of a general sales tax to replace the present emergency revenue measures.

After spending about a week in New York, Mr. Fredman will leave for the Coast for a twelve day visit, then returning to New York for an additional week. He said that his present visit is merely one of inspection, with no definite objective.

Carl Laemmle Will Attend Universal's Radio Ball

Carl Laemmle, Universal president, will remain in New York for the Universal Club Radio Ball, which is to take place on November 7th, election eve, in the grand ballroom of the Waldorf-Astoria.

Because of Universal's program of 22 "shorts" featuring radio names, this year's affair will be planned on radio lines. Music, entertainment, decorations, will all suggest and represent radio in its various phases. Big names in radio will be offered as guest entertainers. Two radio orchestras will furnish music for dancing and novel radio features will be introduced.

Jaeger Leaves Film Kurier; Plans New Berlin Paper

Ernst Jaeger, for many years managing editor of the Film Kurier, German trade publication, has resigned. He plans, with the cooperation of several film groups, to publish a new trade paper.

Following the resignation of Mr. Jaeger, Mr. Herzberg, former editor, was appointed editor-in-chief; J. K. Rutenberg was named manager of the technical department, and Hans Tintner, former editor of the Licht-Bild-Buhne, and Berlin correspondent of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, was appointed foreign editor.

Children's Films Discussed by Two Women's Groups

M. A. Lightman, president of the MPTOA and an exhibitor of Tennessee and Arkansas, told the New York City Federation of Women's Clubs at the Astor hotel Monday that "there is a place and time for special children's programs in every theatre," but that "the special children's theatre, and for that matter the whole 'little theatre' idea will be impractical for a long time," arriving only when "production is planned for minorities."

Mr. Lightman commented on the fact that "in the whole literature of delinquency and child study there can be found only a handful of cases where there is even presumptive evidence of the motion picture's responsibility."

"Meet, talk and plan with your local exhibitor," he said,, "and you will find this community problem can be worked out to the satisfaction of all concerned."

On the other hand, influence of pictures on children, and suggestions for remedying some of the so-called existing "evils" were expounded at the 27th annual Ohio conference of the Parent-Teachers Association at the Deshler-Wallich hotel, Columbus, Ohio, last week.

A recent study of 10,000 children was said to have shown that delinquent juveniles have a wider film experience than do children of other groups; that films offer these delinquents an immediate escape from the drab realities and cruel certainties of their surroundings for a while; that delinquent girls spoke more freely about how restless the movies made them, with the boys regarding pictures as entertainment, and the girls taking them more seriously in the light of personal application. These findings were reported by Olive Campfield, state chairman of the public welfare department of the Ohio congress.

"No movies on school nights, none for children under 12 unless accompanied by an adult, and no pictures for a child under any circumstances unless the picture is thoroughly analyzed in advance and carefully studied by the parents," said Mrs. H. P. Strater, state chairman of motion pictures, who further declared that the aim of parents and teachers should be to make pictures an ally of truth and a force in character development.

"Movies constitute the most serious obstacle to the teaching of morality and good citizenship among children," was the opinion voiced by Miss Frances Hays, secretary of research of the national congress.

The United Lutheran Church in America, at its eighth biennial convention in Philadelphia this week, voted down a proposal for federal regulation of motion pictures, but condemned films that are "salacious and inciting to crime."

NATIONAL BOOK WEEK WILL START NOV. 13

List of 160 Features of All Types Readily Lending Themselves to Special Exploitation Is Announced

National Book Week, an annual event, will be observed this year from November 13 to 19, during which many exhibitors are expected to use the occasion for publicizing current motion pictures having book-film exploitation value.

The book week observance is sponsored by the National Association of Book Publishers.

The list of selected book films which are adaptable to special exploitation during National Book Week was compiled from reports of review committees of the National Board of Review and are either adaptations from published sources or else have a definite book-film tieup. The compilation, which follows, embraces age group classifications and lists title, source, author, star, length and name of distributor. The symbols preceding titles indicate: f—suitable for family audience, 12 years and up; m—suitable for mature audience, 18 years up; j—suitable for showings to children under 12; (*) especially interesting or well done.

MALEVINSKY, FAMOUS SCREEN ATTORNEY, DIES

Won Cases for Douglas Fairbanks and Anita Stewart; Was Authority on Drama and Plagiarism Litigation

Moses L. Malevinsky, legal representative of many stars of screen and stage, an authority on the drama and an expert on plagiarism litigation, died on Monday night in the Mount Sinai hospital, New York. Mr. Malevinsky, a member of the law firm of O'Brien, Malevinsky and Driscoll, was 59.

Cremation took place Wednesday after private services in the Riverside Memorial Chapel.

Mr. Malevinsky's experience as counsel representing leading motion picture persons went back many years. About 20 years ago Douglas Fairbanks was one of his clients at the time he left Triangle Pictures Corporation to go into business for himself. Triangle sued for an injunction but lost the suit.

Another suit was that in which Vitagraph sought an injunction against Anita Stewart in connection with a contract. Again Mr. Malevinsky won a judgment in favor of his client.

J. Stuart Blackton, George Loane Tucker, Marilyn Miller, Jack Pickford, George M. Cohan, Arthur Hopkins, Sam H. Harris and Channing Pollock have been clients of this famous theatrical lawyer. He preferred the legitimate stage to motion pictures.

"Mr. Malevinsky had been very much interested in the drama for the past 15 years," said Arthur F. Driscoll, a member of the firm. "He saw almost every play when it opened on Broadway. His book, 'The Science of Playwriting,' written about seven years ago, practically provided a formula for the purpose of detecting copyright infringements."

About 20 years ago Mr. Malevinsky became counsel for the White Rats, the famous organization which was the first union of vaudeville players. During subsequent years he guided that group in its litigations with the vaudeville trust, over salaries, standard contracts and other points of controversy. He also wrote many articles for "The Player," the monthly publication of the organization which took its name by reversing the spelling of "star."

Represented Anne Nichols

Of all the infringement suits in which Mr. Malevinsky acted as counsel, "Abie's Irish Rose" was the most notable in recent years. He represented Anne Nichols, author of the play, in her $3,000,000 suit brought against Carl Laemmle, Harry Pollard and Universal Pictures Corporation for alleged plagiarism of her play in the motion picture, "The Cohens and Kellys."

After a very long run in the courts, Federal Judge Henry W. Goddard dismissed the suit and was sustained by the circuit court of appeals and the United States supreme court which refused to review it. During this trial Mr. Malevinsky, speaking with his slight Southern accent, almost succeeded in turning Judge Goddard's courtroom into a lecture hall for graduate students of the drama. In an erudite bill of particulars he took 657 pages to argue, among other things, that Solomon Levy, the hero of Miss Nichols' play, and Nathan Cohen, his alleged counterpart in the picture, were each the "personification of love." Counsel for the defense, the former Governor Nathan I. Miller, was sufficiently aroused by this contention to reply that Cohen was actually nothing but a "great big bully." During the week that Governor Miller cross-examined him on the witness stand, Mr. Malevinsky provided those present with a liberal education in the drama. Certain memorable expressions of his opinion at that time excluded George Bernard Shaw from the number of the "two or three greatest living playwrights" and pointed out several lamentable failings in the dramatic work of Ibsen and Brieux.

"Romeo and Juliet," "Hamlet," "Macbeth," "Emotional Extractions," "Orientation of the Crucible" and "Dramaturgical Prisms" were among the works blithely brought into the proceedings by Mr. Malevinsky, who explained to Governor Miller: "Sublime love may end in death. I might say I loved you, but I should have to prove it by some sacrifice."

The "White Cargo" Suit

Another famous plagiarism suit in which Mr. Malevinsky figured was that of Ida Vera Simonton, who charged that Leon Gordon had taken the plot of his play, "White Cargo," from her novel, "Hell's Playground." He won the case for the plaintiff before Federal Judge John C. Knox.

At the time he became ill, Mr. Malevinsky was preparing a plagiarism suit for Margaret Ayer Barnes and Edward Sheldon, coauthors of "Dishonored Lady," in which Katherine Cornell starred, against Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, producer of the picture, "Letty Lynton."

Mr. Malevinsky was born in Galveston. Following his graduation from the University of Texas he practiced law in Galveston and Houston for about 10 years.

In New York he practiced for a short while in the office of Martin W. Littleton and as a member of Acker, Davis and Malevinsky. He joined Dennis F. O'Brien in 1910. When Arthur F. Driscoll joined the firm three years later it assumed its present name.

Mr. Malevinsky is survived by his wife, a daughter, Mrs. Marvin C. Myerson of Brooklyn; two brothers, Richard and Morris; and five sisters, the Misses Helene, Anne and Rachel Malevinsky of Houston, Texas; Mrs. Orville Harrold, wife of the singer, and Mrs. Nona Ford.

ING AT YOU!

A TOAST to the craziest comedy since "Cock Eyed World" cracked the world's all-time record. Football and college farce . . . packed with ga-ga gags . . . pepped with ha-cha gals . . . peopled with the dumbest bunch of muggs that ever thought Yale was easy picking because it was just another lock.

We're telling you it's the BELLY LAUGH of the SEASON and we mean positively!

YOUR PUBLIC

by RITA C. McGOLDRICK

MIDWAY through October is the time to plan the November programs. There are many available films appropriate to the coming holidays and special dates and weeks. A tieup through School and Screen with Parents-Teachers Associations and local school people will bring very definite results.

Father and Son Week, November 7th to 12th, offers exceptional opportunities for special performances to which public citizens, Boy Scouts, parents and children may be invited. This is a week in which church leaders, club women and editors of the local papers will be definitely interested. A dignified high-grade performance will win respect for the theatre manager as well as the kind of publicity that could not be paid for. Schools might be invited to submit essays from the children on "Father and Son," the three winning essays to be read at the theatre for a prize to be awarded by the management. A distinguished public citizen should be invited to make a five-minute speech on the companionship of fathers and sons and the value of this companionship to the community.

The following pictures have been suggested by companies who have made outstanding features with this occasion in mind:

Fox Film Corporation
"Young as You Feel"
"Skyline"
"Over the Hill"
"Silent Witness"
"Cheaters at Play"
"Young America"
"Down to Earth"

Universal Pictures Corporation
"Tom Brown of Culver"

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer
"Divorce in the Family," with Jackie Cooper.

Armistice Day—November 11

This national holiday has a particular appeal. It presents an opportunity for a theatre to display flags, war trophies, a stirring picture and martial music. It is a day on which Boy Scouts should be invited to serve as honorary ushers. The flag should be displayed on the platform and a Scout leader be invited to make the formal salute to the flag. The following pictures would be fine program material for this occasion.

Fox Film Corporation
"Cry of the World"

Universal Pictures Corporation
"All Quiet on the Western Front"

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer
"Pack Up Your Troubles"
"Doughboy"

Peace Films Foundation
"Must War Be?"

First National
"The Dawn Patrol"

FitzPatrick
"Armistice Day"—short subject

United Artists
"The Americans Come"—short subject

RKO
"Aces Up"—short subject

Films Deserving Revival

To all who love the finer things of the screen, it is a matter of deep regret that so many artistic masterpieces have their brief run and are then shunted into a limbo from which there is no emergence. Pictures like "With Byrd at the South Pole," "Abraham Lincoln," "Trader Horn," "Cimarron," deserve circulation as regularly as the great books they represent. There is a growing demand among club groups for revival of great pictures. This department is particularly interested in such a movement. The following are a few suggestions of older pictures which deserve a rehearing:

Paramount Pictures Corporation
"Tabu"
"Skippy"—Story based on the comic strip cartoons.
"The Conquering Horde"—From the novel "North of '36," by Emerson Hough.
"With Byrd at the South Pole"
"Huckleberry Finn"—From the novel by Mark Twain.
"Rango"

Fox Film Corporation
"Daddy Long Legs"—Novel by Jean Webster

First National
"Penrod and Sam"—Booth Tarkington's novel.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer
"Trader Horn"—Novel by Ethelreda Lewis.
"The Great Meadow"—Novel by Elizabeth Maddox Roberts.

RKO
"Cimarron"—Edna Ferber's novel.

Columbia
"Africa Speaks"

Unique Foto Films
"Alice in Wonderland"

Thanksgiving Day—November 24

This is surely an all-American holiday, in which a note of gladness is struck. It is the one day that will shrug its shoulders at the specter of depression. It comes in a week that brings many young people home from college.

Pictures of particular importance to the occasion are:

FEATURES
Universal
"All American"
"Spirit of Notre Dame."

SHORT SUBJECTS
Columbia
"Autumn"

RKO-Pathe
"The Pilgrims"

FitzPatrick
"Thanksgiving Day"

Need for More Family Pictures

The need for more "family pictures" was emphasized by the Indiana Indorsers of Photoplays in their program for the coming year, according to a resolution adopted at the luncheon meeting at the Columbia Club in Indianapolis, last week.

That pictures have improved and are now on a higher level than ever before was the opinion expressed by all the speakers on the program. They included Miss Miriam Bell, of the Indianapolis News; Corbin Patrick, Indianapolis Star; the Rev. A. H. Kenna, pastor of the Roberts Park M. E. church, and Mrs. David Ross founder of the Indorser.

Good Morning!

Well, Kids, old and young, there's a picture over at the Castle that's just—about—our—size!

A lot of us missed the circuses this year. WE SHOULD CARE! Tom Reed's Traveling Wild West Show is as good as most of them and has some of 'em licked a mile. SEE the cowboys perform wonders at roping, lassoing, riding, shooting! SEE those three trained horses execute their act with grace and precision that would do honor to Ziegfeld chorus girls! SEE the runaway stage coach—that has one REAL runaway! SEE Tom Mix and Tony in what I do believe is the best picture they've ever made!

CHIC. DAILY TRIBUNE

In "My Pal, the King," Mr. Mix, better known as the Children's Delight, has an unusually appealing and plotful story. The action, which transports an American king cowboy and his troupe of performers overseas to the mythical kingdom of An—— something or other, ostensibly ruled by a wee King Charles, aged about eight—has just the right amount of imagination and whimsy. It shows Tom Mix at his best, which he always is when among children and horses, packs considerable excitement, a soupçon of romance, and a lot of grand and gorgeous uniforms which make a nice foil for the cowboy costumes of the Wild West Show. AND the show itself!

I don't want to tell you the story, but you can just bet your bottom dollar that when Tom's pal, the king, is in danger from those wearing the uniforms he is not deserted by the spurred and sombreroed sons of the western plains.

The king is delightfully acted by little Mickey Rooney—a quaint child with big, serious eyes, grown-up ways, and a keen sense of the dramatic. Supporting rôles are handled with zest—you'll especially like Paul Hurst as Tom's side kick and Wallis Clark as the little king's tutor—and I thought the direction was just immense.

There's a rousing good time for the whole family in "My Pal, the King," at a quarter a throw for the grown-ups and fifteen dark brown pennies for children.

See you tomorrow!

Tom Mix is back and exhibitors don't have to worry about his pictures. Mix should be a bigger and better star back in the Universal regime, and the kids and adults will go for his action pictures.

Estimate: Old-time Mix western and box office.

Tom Mix, "Tony," Lois Wilson, Fred Kohler, Forrest Stanley.

An improvement over the first Mix, with the Death Valley aspect a strong exploitation angle. The thirst scenes in the desert are exceptionally well done. Here is a Western which might be accepted by those who don't care so much for horse operas.

TEXAS BAD MAN

Universal production and release, starring Tom Mix. Directed by Edw. Laemmle. Story and continuity by Jack Cunningham. Camera, Dan Clark. Cast: Tom Mix, Fred Kohler, Willard Robertson, Lucille Powers, Joe Girard, Bob Milash, Franklyn Farnum, Slim Cole, C. E. Anderson, Ted Larch, Geo. Magrill, Rich. Alexander, Jas. Burtis, Edward Le Saint, Lynton Brent, Frances Sayles, Booth Howard, Tony, Rich. Summer Buck Moulton, one day, At Loew's New York theatre, one day, as half of double bill. Running time, 60 mins.

Tom Mix gets the breaks in this one and scores strongly. Too good to be wasted at the New York on a double bill, but that's the house tradition, so they used this feature to top the show. Can solo in any house that likes western stories and in many places where they do not care for the usual western product. Just goes to show what can be done with a little more money and a lot more effort. This is the basic plot of the law officer who gets himself a bad name to gain admission to a gang. A favorite theme and one generally developed along pretty standard lines. Here the idea has been built up cleverly into a real story, with more plot and characterization until it no longer suggests the type.

The role fits Mix nicely and is the best he has had since his return to the screen. He plays adroitly for effect and handles a bit of love making very nicely, though it is his riding which counts for 'most. Gets excellent support from Fred Kohler, Willard Robertson, Lucille Powers and Joe Girard. Minor assignments are all in competent hands, but those mentioned above carry the story.

Photographically, the picture is exceptionally well done, with many really beautiful exteriors, and the direction brings out the good points of the script. Sound not so good, but this seems to be the fault of the reproduction. A good job all around.

Destry Rides Again

Universal—55 Minutes

Cast: Tom Mix, Claudia Dell, Zasu Pitts, Andy Devine, Earle Fox, Stanley Fields. Directed by Ben Stoloff.

Tom Mix, idol of America's youth, makes triumphant return to the screen in a typical rip-roarin' western. The story, being taken from the popular novel by Max Brand, offers Mix and his horse, Tony, plenty of opportunity to do some fast riding. Mix is framed into a prison sentence by his double-crossing partner (Earle Fox), and vows vengeance on the villain in the Tom Mix manner. Claudia Dell is a convincing heroine. Zasu Pitts is seen in only a few scenes as comedy relief. The picture is first-rate entertainment for the entire family.

SELLING SEATS: Play up Tom Mix's return to the screen. Get the kids talking about it by distributing Tom Mix novelties in the neighborhoods. Universal has innumerable accessories to offer, such as Tom Mix hats, neckerchiefs, and magic books. Organize a Tom Mix club.

HARRISON'S REPORTS

"My Pal The King" with Tom Mix

(Universal, Aug. 4; running time, 61 min.)

Excellent. This is not a western, although a wild west show has been cleverly worked into the story. It has everything—fast action, human interest, comedy, and some fine melodramatic situations. The closing scenes are the most exciting; it is where the boy king is held a prisoner by the villain, and is saved by the hero just in time. These scenes will so excite children that they will stand on their seats and cheer. As a matter of fact they will hold in tense suspense even adults. It has been lavishly produced with settings good enough for any feature picture:—

The plot was adopted from a story by Richard Schayer. It was directed by Kurt Neumann. In the cast are Mickey Rooney, Paul Hurst, Noel Francis, James Kirkwood, and others.

Excellent for children and for Sunday showing

Much more than the usual attention accorded westerns has been given 'Rider of Death Valley.' That it's not merely a plains opera following a conventional routine pattern may explain the interest U, Tom Mix and others concerned in its making apparently had in seeing that it got that attention.

Westerns of recent years have become tiresome even to their large followings mostly because they're all alike. Not this one, much of the appeal of which is drawn from the stark drama of starvation in the desert.

In all, it's one of the best Tom Mix pictures to date and in it Mix turns in a swell job. He goes dramatic in the desert sequences when he and companions are dying of thirst. These scenes were photographed in Death Valley in that portion of the bleak sandswept desert which is free of any vegetation and long has been used for stories locale of which it is the Sahara, such as Foreign Legion pictures etc. Thus, this western at least differs greatly in background from the rest.

Mix's horse, Tony, which probably has nearly as many fan worshippers as Mix does, is very much in evidence. He has the biggest part in his career, being called upon to save his master and the others from the desert and the buzzards. He fulfills the task admirably. And that nearly makes the picture something more than a routine western, Tony taking much of the spotlight toward the last.

The direction, by Al Rogell, is clean-cut and intelligent. Among the virtues 'Rider of Death Valley' possesses is its adherence to detail. The story, even to the regulation heroine, who comes from the east after her brother has been shot by a man plotting to steal his gold mine, carries conviction. Mix himself doubtless had a hand in the making so far as sticking to exactness of detail was concerned.

Picture has been exceptionally well cast, with Fred Kohler as a great heavy, Forrest Stanley as his partner in crime and Lois Wilson as the girl. In the first few reels many other characters appear, but for the second half it's just these characters, Mix and Tony, that tell the tale.

In the casting for the first few reels U has chosen excellent types, including some for the purpose of comedy. A little girl (Edith Fellowes) is also involved in the earlier portions.

Probably for the first time a team of runaway horses looks on the level, and the gravity of being lost in the desert without water becomes strikingly convincing.

Story is largely concerned with Mix's efforts to protect the secret of a gold mine away off in the desert from two men who have killed its owner and are scheming to take it away from the dead man's sister. There's plenty of suspense and plenty of action, but with latter intelligently restrained.

Running time is 76 minutes, long for any western. Nevertheless, the interest holds to the end, and picture in many spots should solo it rather than play as half of a double bill as here. New York is no town for westerns, however, regardless of how well made.

The exhibitor can give 'Rider of Death Valley' everything he has and it will stand by him, at the same time increasing fan interest for Mix and his hoss.

"MY PAL THE KING" EARNS HOLDOVER WEEK AT GLOBE THEATRE, NEW YORK

SURE MONEY MAKER

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

The game of hare and hounds being played in New York by the Empire State independent projectionists union and Local 306 of the IATSE developed a new angle the other day. Arthur Farkash, president of the Empire local, would not tell our reporter where his boys are working, on the theory that the other side might play pickets, which wouldn't be so nice for the theatre owners. Wonder if Sam Kaplan, chief of 306, knows that where his men aren't working it is extremely probable that Empire's are?

Morton Downey—the "Carolina Moon" man of the Columbia Broadcasting ether waves—was sent down to Philadelphia last week to aid the Fox theatre combat the heavy reopening show of the Mastbaum. He was very sorry, but he had to miss the Friday night shows to work up a lather on his regular broadcast for the Woodbury soap people.

Reporters asked Mr. Downey to name the ten best box-office pullers in all fields of amusement. He obliged and started off with Constance Bennett, his sister-in-law. Paul Whiteman and Eddie Cantor are good, too, according to Mr. Downey, and so are Harry Richman, Jack Dempsey, Roland Hayes, Negro baritone; Ed Wynn, John McCormack, Fritz Kreisler and Leopold Stokowski, conductor of the Philadelphia orchestra. Mr. Stokowski also broadcasts over Columbia's network.

"That RKO Radio is making strides in economic efficiency" was revealed this week with the announcement to the press from B. B. Kahane, president, that a new type of set wall plaster adopted for studio use costs 20 cents a square foot less than other plaster. The material, a product of the studio's own paint shop, saves about $400 a feature, or about $15,000 yearly.

The name of Mr. Fred Berrens, orchestra conductor of note, used to be Fritz Bernstein.

Henry Lee Moon and Theodore L. Poston, two highly articulate members of Harlem's Negro colony, returned to town the other day from Europe, thwarted in their attempt to make a motion picture reflecting Negro life in America in Russia. Contrary to other reports, the gentlemen brought back for the edification of the ship news reporters a glowing tale of starving Russia which, they said, is in a critical state at this very moment. The economic condition of the Soviet might have been reported in a more optimistic tone if Stalin had permitted the production.

In a message to the sales staff, Paramount urges a drive for more newsreel contracts. Once sold, the service becomes almost automatic and cancellations are rare, it is said. In addition, the company's newsreel shows a handsome profit, salesmen are told.

Suggested as an example of how NOT to advertise a picture was this marquee display in a Buffalo theatre:

"Tom Brown of Culver. Dedicated to the American Legion. A tragic story."

Sometimes newsreel executives have important political contacts and with this thought in mind a chap asked Dan Doherty, of Fox Movietone, if any one in that organization had enough "pull" in traffic court to straighten out a little matter of a parking summons. "Sure, we have lots of pull," replied Mr. Doherty. "We have so much pull over here that I had to pay five bucks myself for parking last week." And that settled that.

UNION rules for manning rental studios in the East are the cause of almost as much grief as the regulations governing projectionists in theatres. The compulsory salary scale, coupled with rental charges and royalty fees for the use of recorders of the large electrics, brings the total cost of independent production in New York to a surprisingly high figure.

When a producer starts work the union says he must have on hand one first cameraman at $62.50 a day; a second cameraman, $50 a day; two assistants, $25 each; assistant sound engineer, $15; first electrician, $14; assistant electrician, $11; three electricians, $10 each; first and second property men, $14 and $13, respectively; first grip, $12, and second grip, $11 daily. Total for union labor, $272.50 daily. Add to this the rental charges, which range from $350 a day at Atlas, to $800 daily for Erpi's Eastern Sound Studio, or for Fox's plant. Next is the royalty fee of $500 per reel which must be paid when recording is done over Western Electric or RCA Photophone. Atlas uses its own independently made equipment and charges no royalty.

Salary for all production members, such as stars, directors, players and other company technicians, is in addition, and when shooting goes beyond the 8:30 A. M. to 5:30 P. M. period, double time is charged by the union help, except cameramen, who receive straight pay. Studio rental charges include sound, lighting and other equipment, but does not include the erecting of sets.

Evidently James Cagney, player, did not win over Warner Brothers in his recent contract dispute for an upward revision of salary. When Mr. Cagney walked off the Burbank lot, staying away five months, he was receiving $1,400 weekly and when he returned Warners tilted the check to $1,750, which they intended doing anyway because the original contract said so, having an option dated September 15. Mr. Cagney said he thought his services were worth $4,000 per week.

The subject of the reported get-together of certain circuits on establishing a $6,000 vaudeville top for name acts and personal appearances is persona non grata with several of the booking executives right now. One such, occupying an important position at RKO, when asked about it last week, opened his eyes very widely and countered audibly and querulously, "Young man, do you know what you are asking me?" The reporter replied in the affirmative. "Well, then," the executive continued, "you are asking me to tell you something which, if true, might send us all to jail, and besides I wouldn't tell you if I did know, and anyway I don't know."

Leo Meehan's "Hollywood Herald" quotes Tallulah Bankhead as admitting she's "the only actress living that has the spark of Sarah Bernhardt." "Of course, it's awfully burnt out," reported the young lady, "but it's still a spark."

And now Lupe Velez reports the purchase of an ermine coat for her little "Nina"—a Mexican whelp.

Ralph Graves was asked to pose for a picture with a modest looking young lady at Hollywood's Cocoanut Grove. The picture taken, Ralph turned to the girl and remarked, "Well, I suppose you get a kick out of posing with a movie star," and with that he walked away. He later learned that the young miss was Lily Pons.

Already exclusive runs have created some curious results. For instance, in Kansas City, one of the largest towns placed on the new policy, a non-exclusive picture at Loew's Midland ran up a gross of $19,000. The picture was "Smilin' Through," and was responsible for one of the best takes of the year. In contrast, "Pack Up Your Troubles," an exclusive showing the previous week, grossed not quite $10,000 at the same theatre. Maybe, after all, the picture's the thing, exclusives or no exclusives.

A young lady from A. H. Schwartz's Century circuit of Long Island and Brooklyn theatres called the other day and asked if there is more than one Will Hays in the business and to which organization THE Mr. Hays belongs.

Gary Cooper confided the other day that his recent African trip put a deep dent in his pocketbook since he had to pay expenses of shipping all his animal specimens to New York and later to Hollywood, after taxidermal treatment. Now they require a larger house for exhibition.

"I shot at a rhinoceros," Gary said. "Thank Allah, I missed." By the way, what's happened to the picture that was going to be made with the footage Gary took in Africa?

Mike Simmons, advertising and publicity manager of Monogram Pictures, was informed the other day that the next release, probably around election time, would be "Black Beauty," Mrs. Anna Sewell's famous account of a mythical nag. Ever on the alert for possible exploitation tieups, Mr. Simmons inquired if the cast had any dark horses for the presidential campaign.

Some one at RKO's home office said the other day that unworthy advertising simply means that a larger number of people more quickly discover defects.

Irving Thalberg, Metro executive now in New York, nearly extended his vacation to Europe, after much persuasion by John Gilbert. The Thalbergs and Gilberts traveled eastward together from Culver City. Mr. Gilbert had already arranged for an ocean voyage and Mr. Thalberg intended to stay in New York. "Why don't you forget all this movie business for six weeks and come on to Europe with us?" Gilbert pleaded. "You can stay away from the studio. You have three assistants."

"Yes," replied Mr. Thalberg sadly. "That's why I have to get back." He will return to Hollywood next week.

One exhibitor asked another what he thought of exclusives. "Don't know," was the reply. "I pay no attention to society."

Instructions have been issued to the Paramount Publix organization that at no time, in any fashion, should mention be made of the fact that George Raft bears any resemblance to Rudolph Valentino.

When the New York division of RKO's theatres makes a profit, so does the entire circuit. These 50 theatres carry the entire load. Half of the circuit's total income comes from the box offices of Greater New York and upstate, says Herschel Stuart.

Motoring through New Jersey the other day, Ralph Kirbery, the songster, reports spotting this sign along a highway: "School Street. Drive Slowly. Little Boys Should Be Seen—Not Hurt."

SHOWMEN'S REVIEWS

This department deals with new product from the point of view of the exhibitor who is to purvey it to his own public

Smilin' Through

(MGM)

Drama

Coming very close to being a "great" motion picture, MGM's "Smilin' Through" is in the nature of a showman's dream come true. Names, story, performance, development, all are of box office calibre without question. From the play by Jane Cowl and Jane Murfin, and once a silent picture, this production though tending in the direction of the sentimental is yet so well developed, so well performed that there is nothing of saccharinity about it.

Cast names are the picture's greatest asset from the exhibitor's point of view. Norma Shearer, Fredric March, Leslie Howard are three of the most competent performers on the screen today all do work of surpassing excellence. In support are such able standbys as O. P. Heggie, Ralph Forbes, Beryl Mercer, in a small but effective bit; Forrester Harvey, lending a note of humor with his decided Cockney accent, each adding to the effectiveness of the film as a whole.

Here is a group of marquee names which should be splashed before the populace with unstinting hand.

We second the reaction of Leo Meehan, from Hollywood, who called this a "beautiful picture." The film is beautifully mounted, employing with telling effect the technical advantage of superimposition. Miss Shearer, March, Howard, Heggie play dual roles.

A word as to the story. Howard, an old man at his English manor house, dwells on the memory of the girl who was assassinated by the jealous lover at the moment of their wedding. A niece, Miss Shearer, and Heggie, old friend, are his only comfort. Miss Shearer meets March, son of the assassin, falls in love with him, as he is about to leave for the war. Howard refuses to consider their marriage, deeply bitter. Seated in the garden, he tells Miss Shearer the story of his courtship and the death of his fiancee. The scene shifts, and the story is enacted. Then a return to the present, as the crinoline and sideburns of the past, with March as the murderer and Miss Shearer as the fiancee, disappear.

March returns from the front, paralyzed, and would leave unknown, but Miss Shearer finds him, Howard relents, and dies with the vision of his fiancee before him as Miss Shearer and March walk through the gate.

This has drama, pathos, beauty in a measure seldom equaled. Indicate in the strongest terms at command to your patrons that you are offering a brilliant screen drama. The cast in itself should act as a great magnet. Your indication of the power and depths of the story in which they appear should make this film an outstanding attraction from the financial standpoint.—AARONSON, New York.

Produced and distributed by MGM. Directed by Sidney Franklin. Play by Jane Cowl and Jane Murfin. Screen play by Ernest Vajda and Claudine West. Dialogue by Donald Ogden Stewart and James Bernard Fagan. Film editor, Margaret Booth. Photographed by Lee Garmes. Release date, September 24, 1932. Running time, 100 minutes.

THE concept of this department is that the exhibitor is concerned not with any critic's idea of "how good?" or "how poor?" but rather with the question of precisely what the product is and what is to be done with it when and as it is played. The exhibitor, in general, is concerned with the special aspects of strength and of weakness in the product, its appeals and shortcomings, that he may adequately deal with it when he becomes its sponsor to his public. These "review" pages aim to aid the exhibitor as the retailer of the merchandise concerned.—THE EDITOR.

I Am a Fugitive From a Chain Gang

(Warner)

Drama

Stark, unrelenting drama, this will be raw, red meat for any audience but it has been produced with such vitality and attention to detail that in its gripping appeal the audience should overlook the bitterness of the story told. It is a tense drama of a dream shattered, a man ruined, and the horror and brutality of the chain gangs of the southern prison camps.

Standing head and shoulders above everything else is the powerful performance of Paul Muni, who here again demonstrates his ability as one of the most capable actors on the screen. He draws every last particle of feeling and intensity out of the role he portrays here.

The exhibitor should sell this film as a stunningly powerful dramatic picture. Indicate in hammering terms that here is a starkly realistic expose of conditions in those chain gangs where brutality rules with gun and lash, where men wear chains and toil all day in the broiling sun on rock piles and roads. This is not a "horror" picture in the generally accepted sense of that term as applied to pictures. It is rather a brutally accurate picture of a condition which may well make animals of men, but which is technically and in performance brilliantly done.

There is no comedy; there is little sentiment. There might have been romance, you may tell the prospective patrons, but the chain gang reached out and crushed it and the man. The tragic ending is stirringly dramatic.

Do not overlook the origin of the story, written by a man who is himself still a fugitive from just such a chain gang as is here delineated. It is a tremendous selling point. That man wrote of his experiences and a motion picture has been woven from it. The local newspapers can be drawn into the campaign even to the editorial page, and the exhibitor should not overlook that angle.

It is true that there are comparatively few outstanding names in the cast, but that need not matter. Paul Muni carries the weight of the performance with such brilliance that the lack of others is not noticed. There are, however, numerous well known and highly capable players in the large cast.

A man committed to a living death for a crime he did not commit; forced into continuous fear for his life; never permitted to enjoy more than a moment's happiness. They are strong lines, but the picture is strong medicine, and therefore they are justified. To fall back into a prosaic treatment of this film from the selling standpoint would be to damage its chances of success. Despite its stark grimness, the picture should be a box office sensation. Think of it as something extraordinary—and treat it as such. Needless to say, this is adult fare exclusively.—AARONSON, New York.

Red Dust

(MGM)

Dramatic Romance

This dramatic romance of the rubber plantation country is as torrid as the tropics, yet it has a brand of ribald humor, provided principally by Jean Harlow, that endows it with scores of laughs. More comedy is contributed by Tully Marshall, Harvey and Willie Fung, lending a sparkle not commonly associated with the age-old eternal triangle idea that is the basis of the plot. Consequently, "Red Dust" is vivid entertainment for adults and by the same token it is a little too zippy for the juveniles.

With Clark Gable and Jean Harlow heading the cast, no one should find any difficulty in whetting up patron interest, and the punchy lines can be adapted to selling copy to intrigue those who might fail to respond to the appeal of personalities.

"Red Dust" is both a man's and woman's

THE BOX OFFICE CHAMPIONS for September

During the month of September, the nation's key theatre box offices were able to function with some decision, and the reign of ties characteristic of the several preceding months was interrupted. In September only two pictures were tied for a high place — Universal's "Back Street" and RKO Radio's "Bird of Paradise" — and as a result this monthly tribute can revert, for the time being at least, to its custom of citing six productions.

The leader for September, it will be noted, is that of a previous month. This time, however, "Grand Hotel" is appointed by the popular-price box offices, confirming, as it were, earlier roadshow opinion.

Of the six productions which won the largest grosses at key theatres during September, five are to be classified as drama of more or less sustained seriousness, while the other — Paramount's "Love Me Tonight" — approaches comedy only as far as the musically sentimental — if, indeed, its emotional flavor may be called such an approach.

picture. For the men, there are action, drama, amorous adventure, high-handed goings on in far-off places, and Jean Harlow. All that also applies to the women, plus an element of human interest. Willis brings his sophisticated wife into the wild jungle and leaves her there while he is first fever-stricken and then sent away on a month long tour of the jungle plantation. This gives Gable a great opportunity to fall in love with Mary Astor and she with him, only to have the whole thing broken up by the ultra Sadie Thompsonish Jean Harlow. The climax has Gable flattened by a gunshot wound, with Miss Harlow reading him Peter Rabbit bedtime stories.

Teaming these two was a happy idea. Both have the kind of roles in which their fans best like to see them, Gable, tough, ruthless, hard-boiled, yet retaining a sense of decency that makes him sympathize with the innocent husband. Miss Harlow, voluptuous, smart, wise and wise-cracking, making liberal use of her charms to take Gable's mind off Mary Astor.

While "Red Dust" might be considered by some as typically blase "big city" entertainment, keen showmanship should take full advantage of the names Gable and Harlow to make it highly popular in the neighborhoods and smaller communities.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by MGM. Directed by Victor Fleming. From the play by Wilson Collison. Screen play by John Mahin. Photographed by Harold Rosson. Release date, October 9, 1932. Running time, 73 minutes.

The Phantom of Crestwood

(RKO Radio)

Mystery

Pre-sold by extensive national newspaper advertising and through the National Broadcasting Company's chapterized broadcast of the unfinished mystery story, "The Phantom of Crestwood," with attendant prizes for best solutions, this picture turns out to be a well developed, strongly suspensive mystery yarn, well handled, well performed.

This should be a box office picture, turning in a ledger account which should do the heart of the exhibitor a deal of good. Use has been made of not a few standbys in mystery film mechanics, including the old ranch house, the underground passage, the storm and the like, but they are in no way obtrusive, and the dramatic and suspense elements are effective.

"Who Killed Jenny Wren" immediately becomes the most acceptable catch line, particularly for a pre-showing teaser campaign. Make ready and insistent use of the question mark. It might be well also somehow to extend the contest element to the individual theatre. Anything which the exhibitor can devise with the design of awakening and keeping alive the natural curiosity of the patrons with respect to the murderer will be worthwhile. It is not our intention to divulge here who killed Jenny Wren. Suffice it to say that that murderer, who accidentally commits a second in the course of the film, and both by means of a small, sharply pointed dart embedded in the back of the neck, is ably obscured from public gaze almost to the end of the picture.

The performances are well handled with names which unquestionably will add marquee strength to the selling of the picture. Karen Morley, a newcomer yet already well known, has the lead, with Ricardo Cortez giving an able, forthright performance as the amateur detective under necessity. Capably supporting the two are H. B. Warner, always good; Pauline Frederick, Robert McWade, Aileen Pringle, and Skeets Gallagher, who quietly and in restrained manner supplies a touch of comedy here and there. The remainder of the lengthy cast is acceptable.

Rely heavily on, and make full use of the pre-selling campaign which RKO, through the radio, has presented. Indicate a strong cast, a strong mystery element, and defy the patrons to put a finger on the real murderer. Do not, however, make the mistake of permitting RKO's radio campaign to do all the selling for you. The exhibitor has here all the elements of success at the box office, based on the perennial interest in the mystery story.

The picture may be a bit too tense and graphically done in respect to the murders for the attention of young juveniles, but beyond that it is a film for anyone.—Aaronson, New York.

Produced and distributed by RKO Radio. Directed by J. Walter Ruben. Story by Bartlett Cormack and J. Walter Ruben. Screen play by Bartlett Cormack. Cameraman, Henry Gerrard. Sound, Danny Cutler. Release date, October 14, 1932. Running time, 77 minutes.

The Face on the Barroom Floor

(Invincible)

Drama

A mixture of crime, gangsterism, the evils of drink and general duplicity, this picture is melodrama, but weak in story and performance. At the showing attended, the sound was faulty. This may have been caused by the way the reproduction equipment was handled at that performance; the lines were often completely unintelligible, so noisy was the sound.

The exhibitor has comparatively little to offer his patrons in the way of cast names, Bramwell Fletcher and Philip Smalley being perhaps the only members of the cast who will strike anything like a familiar note with the audience.

The title, because of the widespread recognition of the poem of that name, may have some weight.

The story concerns the young man, Fletcher, who is goaded into drinking by his wife and a friend, in love with her. His long abstinence, we are given to understand, had been due to the effect liquor had had on his father and grandfather. The friend, Walter Miller, turns out to be a bootlegger and gangster, posing as a respectable attorney.

Fletcher, working in the brokerage offices of his father-in-law, Smalley, losses a packet of bonds following a considerably inebriated party in his home. Miller, who had stolen the bonds himself, on the pretense of aiding him contrives to keep him shut away in a hotel room in a perpetual state of drunkenness. Eddie Featherstone, young bootlegger, whose performance is commendable, discovers the situation, and to quiet him, Miller puts Maurice Black, gang leader, on his trail, and Featherstone is murdered.

The wife, Dulcie Cooper, learns the truth and finds her husband in a speakeasy simultaneously with the hurling of a bomb into that same speakeasy. They escape, of course, while Miller is in turn murdered by Black to conclude the story.—Aaronson, New York.

Hot Saturday

(Paramount)

Romantic Drama

Small-town scandal is the theme of this story of 1932's flaming youth. While it tends to become dramatic, it never quite reaches its mark and though the suspense is continuous, climaxes do not appear as anticipated, so that its appeal is broken.

Probably the best way to whip up interest is to make an intensive drive among the class of people whom it portrays—the boys and girls who work in banks, offices, shops and stores; those to whom Saturday is the big day, when they can go out and make whoopee, have their dates and their little romances. There's a good angle around that line in that you can get out direct mail or clever newspaper advertising directed at that class and making a "date" with them to meet Ruth Block.

Though we have termed this opus a portrayal of "flaming youth," there is no vivid exposition of that idea. Quarreling with her sweetie, Nancy Carroll does spend most of an afternoon and evening with Cary Grant, and on another night, when the tongues of gossip have caused her to lose her job and prepare to marry her childhood sweetheart, she rushes to Grant's house. Yet there is no evidence of sex that would startle patrons. This is effectively brought out in the climax, when Grant, whom, everyone is led to believe is a "heel," turns out to be a hero.

In making the drive for the young folk, don't overlook the parents. The picture teaches a strong lesson in the maliciousness of gossip. Parents wonder what their children do on their week-end parties. This picture shows the modern youth who prefers a gin highball to a chocolate sundae; the dances at the lakeside resorts; the jealousies and envies; the dreams and disappointments. There should be an element of interest in this for the adults, particularly that, though the new generation's activities are modern, they are also probably just as innocent and carefree as when mother and dad were youngsters.

As much as you plug the feature picture, you should not neglect to surround it with an appealing program of short subjects. In final cutting the picture may run less than the time noted, which ordinarily will permit the inclusion of more than one outstanding additional attraction.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Directed by William Seiter. Screen play by Seton I. Miller. Adapted by Josephine Lovett and Joseph Moncure March. From Harvey Ferguson's novel. Photographed by Arthur L. Todd. Release date, October 28, 1932. Running time, 73 minutes.

Now We'll Tell One

(MGM)

Fair

The novel story idea behind this Hal Roach comedy starring Charley Chase is its best bet. Chase, only a fairly capable comedian on his own, accidentally dons a belt which transmits the character of another person into his own. The subjects are in a laboratory. Chase, roaming freely in pursuit of his girl, is at intervals transformed into one or another of the subjects, in character. Successively, and somewhat amusingly, he becomes a stunt motorcycle driver, a shiek, a prize fighter, an inebriate, a classical dancer and, when the girl's family examine the belt they all become high divers to end the comedy in the pool. Where Chase has supporters, this comedy may draw.—Running time, 19 minutes.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

Box office receipts from 113 theatres in 20 major cities of the country reached a total of $1,573,876 for the calendar week ended October 15, 1932. Compared with a total of $1,587,973 from 115 theatres in 20 cities for the preceding calendar week ended October 8, a decrease of $14,097 is indicated. No new high individual theatre records were established during the more recent seven-day period, while six new low individual theatre totals are noted. This compares with no new "highs" and two new "lows" for the previous week.

SORRY, MR. SCHMUFF!

BUT GLAD MOTION PICTURE HERALD IS AS NECESSARY TO YOU AS IT IS TO THOUSANDS OF OTHER SHOWMEN

JENKINS' COLYUM

Grand Island, Neb.

DEAR HERALD:

Our intention was to have gone and covered northwest Nebraska, but when we got halfway there we learned that there was ten inches of snow at Chadron and Alliance, so we turned south and here we are. Whenever April Shower gets in snow she shivers and shakes like a Tin Lizzy with one lung and two fenders gone and we never did like to wear our teeth in our coat pocket, so we are heading south to where the Long Horns are strong for Ma Ferguson and John N. Garner, and where we will feel as lonesome as a star in Reno.

But speaking of snow. It won't be long now until the cold wintry blasts will come sweeping down from Nashwauk, Minnesota, and Valley City, North Dakota, and sending cold shivers up and down our spine and make us wonder what we did with our last seven dollars and thirty-five cents. But who would want to live where they don't have winter? Answer. We would. So now we are headed south with the ducks, and if you were within hearing distance you would hear us sing—

When the leaves begin to turn,
And the summer days are past,
When the golden sunbeams bend to kiss the dew.
When the old mill-wheel turns around
I'll love you, Mary,
When the bees are in the hive I'll come to you.

Burwell is located right on the banks of the North Loup river, and the North Loup river is the prettiest river in Nebraska, and we will betcha that there are more than five thousand catfish that go up and down past that town every day, and all hungry. C. W. Becker, who operates the Electric theatre, says that between fighting the wolves and reading the HERALD he can't find time to fish. Wat a boy, wat a boy. If we lived in Burwell we couldn't see a wolf if he had his nose in the beans right on top of the kitchen table.

Did you know that if you were to lay Custer county, Nebraska, down on top of Rhode Island it would cover the entire state and enough would lap over on the sides to make a parade ground for all the disappointed politicians in the country. Broken Bow is the county seat, and when people from the farthermost corners go to the county seat they find when they get back home that the calves have been weaned and the pups have started out foraging on their own hook.

H. F. Kennedy is the genial manager of the Lyric theatre and the purveyor of the best entertainment coming out of Hollywood, and not only that, he's a candidate for state senator and if he isn't elected we are going to be awfully sore about it, because our father back in 1841 told us we should always be strong for that ticket.

We also met Mr. Kennedy's son and his esteemed wife who, by the way, presides in the box office of the Lyric, which no doubt accounts for the absence of wolf tracks around the theatre door.

The Lyric was playing "Horsefeathers" the night we called and there was a comfortably well filled house on its third night showing, which is accounted for in part by reason of two conventions in the town at the time and a pleasant, congenial ticket vendor in the box office. Of course "Horsefeathers" might have had something to do with it, probably did.

When you have covered Holt, Cherry and Custer counties in Nebraska you will know that you have covered a territory as large as Rhode Island, Connecticut and Delaware combined. Out here you can fill your lungs with pure air and stretch yourself without having someone jab you in the ribs. With the exception of here and there a sprinkling of saltpeter, out here in these wide open spaces is where the salt of the earth lives, that's why we like these wide open spaces.

Did you ever see a theatre treated for sound with Indian blankets? Sam Nedley in Ainsley has his theatre walls and part of the ceiling covered with Indian blankets and you couldn't shoot a cannon in his theatre and hear an echo. My gosh, he's got blankets enough to equip an army, and if Sam ever goes out of the theatre business and starts a blanket market he'll bust up every Indian tribe in the country. Sam is an oldtime "Greenbacker" and we won't argue politics with a Greenbacker; it's no use.

Down in Ravenna there are two very delightful folks operating the Pastime theatre—Mr. and Mrs. Gus Holub. The Pastime has a capacity of about seven hundred, and in former days there were times when some of 'em had to stand out for the second show.

Gus and his wife were just starting out to bill the surrounding country for "Horsefeathers" when we called. Mrs. Gus said she had been sore at us for three or four years because she was not at home when we called before, but, doggone it, why hold that against us, it wasn't our fault because she'd gone to a bridge party. That's the way with these women, they always try to hang it onto someone else, but when she got into the car to go and help Gus do the billing she said, "We're going to fight it out on this line if it takes all summer," and listen, Abner, you can't beat that kind of a spirit. That old slogan, "Don't give up the ship," has brought many a craft into the harbor of prosperity, and these two delightful people managing the Pastime centainly will anchor that craft safely.

Here in Grand Island there are six theatres, two closed, two belonging to Publix and two independent. Harry E. Schiller owns the independent houses, the Island and the former Lida, which he has remodeled and put in first-class shape. Mr. Schiller has been connected with the picture industry for a number of years in one branch or another and is therefore well qualified to handle the exhibition end. He is the only man who has been able to put the Island theatre over, although several have tried it.

Last night he was playing "Congress Dances" in the Island and also seven acts of RKO vaudeville featuring "Baby Boots." This program was given especially for his Mickey Mouse club, which he recently organized with a membership of four hundred; some of them occupied a place on the stage last night.

If the price of corn could be boosted up to thirty-five or forty cents, this depression would look like the ragged edge of nothing inside of thirty days. You can see great stacks of yellow corn piled up like hay stacks all over the country, and husking has only commenced. This "Sovereign People" and "People Rule" stuff has got to a point where it don't mean a damthing to us.

J. C. JENKINS,
The HERALD Man.

CHARLES E. ("CHICK") LEWIS, chairman and editor

SOME MORE QUOTATIONS!

A FEW WEEKS AGO we went browsing through our scrap book, and elsewhere, and as a result we offered some timely quotations plus our own interpretations as applied to showbusiness. Imagine our surprise when we found a swell reaction. So, here we are back again in the scrap book and with a fresh crop of "quotes" to play around with.

LET'S START OFF WITH one from Abe Lincoln, who, among other wise words, is remembered for the following:

"I never had a policy. I have simply tried to do what seemed best every day as each day came."

Grand logic, that. Maybe it ought to be a guide for those who try a bit too hard to stick to set or established rules in their everyday contact with their jobs. Why not tackle each day's problems as they come along and avoid crossing bridges before you reach them?

HERE IS ONE THAT caught our eye last time we went browsing, but somehow or other we passed it by. It's from "Life," and it may click in real life, too:

"Before a man can wake up and find himself famous, he must wake up and find himself."

We doubt whether there will be any arguments on that "quote" from the real, level-headed boys. It's altogether too true. But if you have any doubts on the matter, analyze yourself and see if there is a fourth dimension hidden away.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT IS a much-quoted man; the reason being that what he had to say generally meant something. And so far as we are concerned he certainly meant plenty when he uttered these:

"The only value of words uttered or listened to comes when they are transmuted into deeds."

To which we add a solemn "Amen." Beware of the man who talks a lot and accomplishes little. He is rarely worth listening to, and loves to hear himself talk.

THE NEXT ONE'S AUTHOR is unknown. At least, so far as I could find out. Yet, anonymous or otherwise, they fit us all to perfection. Especially in these trying days of fighting our hardest for patronage:

"Your customers are your competitor's prospects always. Do you make the same effort to hold them as you did to get them?"

That's well worth reading over again. All around us we can recall examples of unusual effort to get business to the box office and then a lack of effort to keep it coming. It wouldn't take much to make that one anonymous quotation the subject of a lot of discussion pro and con.

WE WISH WE COULD get some inside slants on the connections of some of these wise people whom we are quoting. It would, or should, be interesting sidelights to what they have had to say. As for example, the following from one S. A. Ericson:

"There are two kinds of business men in these times; those who are selling out and the other kind who are out selling."

We don't know the "times" S. A. Ericson was talking about, but they can't be any worse than the times we have been going through. Yet, his remarks are of a most timely nature. Showmen, especially, can be divided into two separate and distinct classes, and those two classes are plainly outlined in the quotation above.

THE NEXT ONE GAVE us an inward chuckle when we connected many an executive, mentally, of course, with the words of the San Francisco Chronicle. Here 'tis:

"The proof of a man's importance is the fact that he doesn't care a whoop whether anybody thinks him important."

I liked that one so well that I had it set in 48 point type and framed above the desk of my den. It has a most quieting effect on one's feelings at times. Do you ever find it so? 'Fess up, and tell the sober truth.

WELL, I'VE REACHED the end of my allotted space, but I'll close with one from Forbes; who reminds us to—"Let neither fortune nor failure 'get' you." Until next week, adieu.

DICK KIRSCHBAUM'S LOBBY LAFFS!

This makes the seventy-third gag about any one picture. Just proving that there IS something in a name after all. And as usual, Dick's illustrating of the idea makes it even funnier than ever. If you have some funny incident that you want to see here, send the suggestion along.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

Before becoming associated with Publix Theatres, Marsh Gollner, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Charlottesville, Va., went through the several and sundry steps that lead to an executive's post.

Marsh Gollner

He received his initiation in show business in the Allen Theatre, Cleveland, where he filled an usher's job. Working up from the ranks he then joined the J. B. Rogers Producing Company, producers of home talent shows, and after trying out that end for a while he went with the Harry Miller Company of New York City, a firm in the business of producing amateur musical comedies and revues. He subsequently joined the Publix organization and for that firm managed the Paramount, Toledo; the Century, Rochester, N. Y., and his present assignment.

Gollner received his education at the U. S. Naval Academy, Annapolis, and at Carnegie Tech. He is a Mason, a Rotarian, is married and the father of a son. "Only for a million dollars," he says, would he leave showbusiness for another field.

ALBERT USED WORD-BUILDING STUNT TO EXCELLENT RESULTS

Vogue of the building game netted a lot of worthwhile publicity stories to Charles Albert, manager of the Lake Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, when he exploited "Successful Calamity." He tied-up with a leading local newspaper and hundreds of fans vied for honors and awards of guest tickets. The stunt increased patronage at the theatre and acted as a corking circulation booster for the newspaper.

Additional exploitation on the picture included a tie-up with the public library system for distribution of 10,000 bookmarks; distribution of 5,000 more bookmarks in restaurants, candy and grocery stores; a tie-up with a dairy that netted the theatre 15,000 hangers on milk bottles; a classified page tie-up with another local newspaper; another tie-up with a chain store to carry theatre advertising matter on sheet music wrappers, and 300 cards on street cars.

Excellent trade resulted from Albert's campaign.

STANFORD, BLAUFOX, PERRY AND SAYER—4 HORSEMEN OF L. I.

This is not a story of any one man's work in connection with putting over the picture version of Fannie Hurst's "Back Street"; rather, it is a combined account of what took place down along a section of the south shore of Long Island, comprising the communities of Long Beach, Far Rockaway and Rockaway Park, where Managers Charles Perry, Paul Blaufox, Bill Stanford, and Harry Sayer respectively preside over the Laurel, Castle, Strand and Park Theatres. It was an occasion for smash, night openings and Universal Joe Weil advises us that the boys in charge, including emissaries from the home office, gave the events a big push.

While the movie cameras ground out permanent records of the prior-to-Broadway openings, the sunlight arcs flooded the theatre fronts with daylight and drew large crowds of curious and excited people that milled about in front of the houses and formed long lines at the box-offices. Opening without the big advance newspaper advertising that important picture engagements around New York usually get, "Back Street" broke records and enjoyed capacity audiences throughout its engagements at all theatres.

A sailboat ballyhoo (see photo) was used at Far Rockaway and Long Beach to attract the thousands of bathers on the beaches Saturday and Sunday. The huge sail carried the picture billing in giant letters. An Austin car equipped with broadcasting facilities and bannered with the titles and catch lines, was used to attract other crowds at the Rockaways. Four boys paraded the boardwalk at Rockaway Park carrying two of the giant accessory streamers.

Jumbo moviegrams were placed on display in the theatre lobbies, in store windows and in all hotel and club lobbies. Several book stores made up special window displays tying up the book and the picture, and the set of Universal's special tie-up stills secured many other window displays. At Far Rockaway the city permitted the Strand theatre to use a street banner for the first time for commercial purposes. Several thousand heralds and several hundred posters and snipes were used in the campaigns.

The flood lights and the movie cameras attracted great crowds to all theatres and were, in a large measure, responsible for the record-breaking openings. The movies taken on the opening nights were shown at the theatres later in the week, bringing back hundreds of people who were anxious to see themselves on the screen.

24-Sheets on Parade!

One of the latest exploitation fads in use by Fox-Midwesco for the Palace Theatre, Milwaukee, Wis., is the mounting of 24-sheets on either side of a truck for a parade up and down the main streets of the city.

ABE COHEN BUILT ATTRACTIVE FRONT ON ANIMAL PICTURE

It took a special permit from local authorities to build the front shown here for "Bring 'Em Back Alive" when it played the Massena Theatre, Massena, N. Y., but Abe Cohen, long a resident of this up-state town, knows his politics there and the display was built and used to good advantage.

The snap shot wasn't very clear, but we believe it will serve to get across the idea. While a description is lacking, compoboard covered with regular exchange paper was apparently used to decorate the four sides, with openings at either end and in front to allow for pedestrian traffic. A valance with cutout letters of the picture's title hung across the front entrance.

We're glad to hear from Abe again after a long silence and now that he's again on the active list, hope he'll become as regular a contributor as in the past.

HERE'S SOME WEEKLY ADVERTISING USED BY RIALTO, CANTON, OHIO

A communication from the Rialto Theatre, Canton, Pa. (no name of manager or owner attached) discloses that the management has been going in for something a bit different in weekly advertising.

In a good sized box in the weekly newspaper about fifty per cent of the space is devoted to editorial copy and the balance to a listing of the attractions. As to the copy in a couple of the ads we have at hand, one touches on the strangeness of some titles and explains that pictures must be released throughout the world under one title. Then "Observer," as the writer signs himself, goes on to cite the case of "Merrily We Go to Hell," which was originally titled "Jerry and Joan," and states that while many sermons might be preached on the theme, none would serve so effectively as the graphic illustration given by the film. The other ad combines institutional selling, a plug for some interesting personalities appearing in a coming newsreel and a few short, interesting notes on feature pictures.

The above should be interesting to the several Club members who have requested that this department present examples of theatre advertising in weekly newspapers from time to time. We regret not being able to give the name of manager or owners at this time; however, perhaps his next communication will not be anonymous.

BOB MURRAY MADE GOOD TIE-UP WITH SEATTLE FLORIST

Boy Murray, manager of the Music Box Theatre, Seattle, arranged for a novel window display on "Jewel Robbery," that drew a whale of a lot of attention to the picture and theatre.

The display, which was handled with the co-operation of the leading florist in Seattle, consisted of oil paintings of Kay Francis and William Powell ornamented with beautiful flowers. Across the bottom was a strip reading, "Say It With Flowers." Other copy carried the names of the stars, picture, theatre and the opening date. Two ribbons, leading from the center of the display, led down to a wire sent by Kay Francis and William Powell reading:

"Warner Bros. wish us to congratulate you on your marvelous floral display in conjunction with our latest picture Jewel Robbery."—Signature Kay Francis, William Powell."

The window is approximately 20x20 and made a marvelous display that created no end of talk. The florist shop also donated three hundred corsages which were given to the first 150 women who attended the theatre the first two days of the picture's playdate. In addition to the above, Bob Murray placed still of the two stars, displaying jewelry, in windows of the leading jewelry stores in Seattle.

MUMFORD GRABBING SOME NICE NOTICES IN HIS LOCAL PAPER

It's easy to see that Leon Mumford, popular manager of the Roth-Strand Theatre, Summit, N. J., still retains his knack of obtaining free space in the papers.

To all appearances he dropped around to pay a call on his local editor a short time ago and, strange to say, the subject of movies came up for discussion. As the result of this the editorial page of the paper carried a lengthy editorial on pictures a few days later, mentioning a talk Mumford gave recently at the Kiwanis Club and his views on new season product, etc.

We note also that a petition for Sunday movies has been circulated among Summit residents with little opposition, in spite of the fact that many a manager in Jersey communities has had a stiff fight on his hands when introducing the subject. However, Leon Mumford has been a resident of the town for the past eight years and he knows his way 'round—and when to start a movement for Sunday movies. Two types of post cards were mailed out for the petition, one for patrons and one for residents.

KEEPING UP WITH THE TIMES!

By GUY JONES

Qualifications absolutely unquestionable.

PAUL BINSTOCK WAS ALMOST ELECTED THE MAYOR OF BAY RIDGE

We were beginning to think that something tragic had happened to Round Tabler Paul Binstock, former manager of the Fortway Theatre, and now at the Republic Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., the last time we heard from him, when lo and behold comes a report stating that he's still at the same old stand—hard at work but happy in the thought that he's a member of Sam Frisch's and Louis Rinzler's Randforce Circuit.

Nothing startling has happened to Paul since reports of his activities last appeared in this department except that he recently missed out being elected Mayor of Bay Ridge by a narrow margin. That he ran neck and neck with the leaders in the race, who are life-long residents of the neighborhood, really means a whole lot and is proof that he made many friends during the comparatively brief span of a year's stay in the community. His Mickey Mouse Club went to bat for him in great style and some tear sheets from a neighborhood newspaper testify to the cordial feeling for him among the paper's staff.

Keep up the good work, Paul, and let your Club hear from you more often concening what you're doing to send the Fortway over the top. Glad to hear that you feel so optimistic about new season trade and, as far as we can see, most all your fellow members are looking for far better times for the balance of '32 and '33. It's the proper spirit, anyway.

Fish and Films!

The boys who run the fishing news columns in the New York dailies did their share to exploit "Tiger Shark" when that picture played the Winter Garden. Harry Charnas and Jim Furman saw to it that these expert anglers were invited to see the film and were rewarded by mention of the film in practically every column.

PHIL BLOOMBERG IS QUITE A PROMOTER; GETS A LOT GRATIS

Without a doubt, P. D. Bloomberg, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Salem, Mass., put over a low-cost but effective campaign on "Congorilla." Either Phil is one of those thrifty New Englanders by birth or else association with the Yanks has made him one. The initial "P" of his name should stand for "Promoter" instead of Phil. Here's all the dirt:

After carefully figuring out his campaign, he decided the picture should be circussed to the greatest possible extent and consequently increased his newspaper advertising for the occasion. Large ads, featuring cuts of a gorilla with outstretched arms, were extensively used.

Both the Paramount Theatres in the neighboring town of Lynn and the opposition house helped Bloomberg uphold the Salem tradition of obtaining something for nothing, and, believe us, fellows, when you can sell your competitor the idea of contributing stuffed animals, false front, etc., the act calls for a bit of applause from the Round Table gallery. That's just what he did, however, by getting a loan of a crocodile for an advance display at the theatre and for current display in the window of a local furniture store. The animal was attractively set off with jungle grass, palm tree sketches and a card with appropriate copy.

In addition to the four lobby easels secured gratis from the Paramount in Lynn, he also got from that house ballyhoo sides for a truck promoted from a local auto dealer. After having the signs touched up by a sign painter, he promoted a "lion's roar," which was concealed in the rear of the truck. At the time of the eclipse he had the truck driven to the outskirts of the town to distribute eclipse glasses which carried copy on the picture. Streets and roof tops were crowded at the time and the bally naturally received a lot of attention.

As stated above, his second conference with his opposition house netted a full-size false front for the outer lobby. The sign painter who was engaged for re-lettering the sides for the bally was also given the job of assembling and re-lettering the front. Sides and top were decorated with jungle grass, with grass also draped on wires that ran from each corner of the lobby to top of box office. This was made to represent an African Pigmy hut and had small cuts of natives and gorilla heads displayed at the top. Here, again, Phil's New England training asserted itself, with the result that $50 worth of work was obtained from the sign painter for the sum of $10. To top this off the electric company played Santa to the extent of furnishing two large reflectors to illuminate the display.

Additional effort included promotion of six three-sheets and 10 one-sheets for use in store windows and on boards; use of attractive applique displays; special overhead display, featuring cut-outs of natives and "Congorilla" in large, cut-out letters, and use of 12 cut-outs with stills in store windows, with the windows, of course, promoted by the intrepid Phil.

A close analysis of the campaign herein described revealed some unusually fine work. And backing it up with the photo of his lobby to further bear out the effectiveness of his campaign, makes it all the more interesting. "Costless" exploitation has certainly made wonderful progress if we are to take these different examples as proof. It sort of makes one feel foolish when they sit back and recall the previous years when they spent so much money on campaigns.

Repeated use of the word "promoted" throughout the above will alibi, we believe, our contention in the opening paragraph that Round Tabler Bloomberg is getting along pretty well over in his town of Salem. Okay, Phil, and more power to you, say we and all your fellow Club members. Keep up the excellent work and let's have some more news on what you're doing. Have you tried promoting contents of the cash register from your opposition yet?

"THE FOURTH NECESSITY"

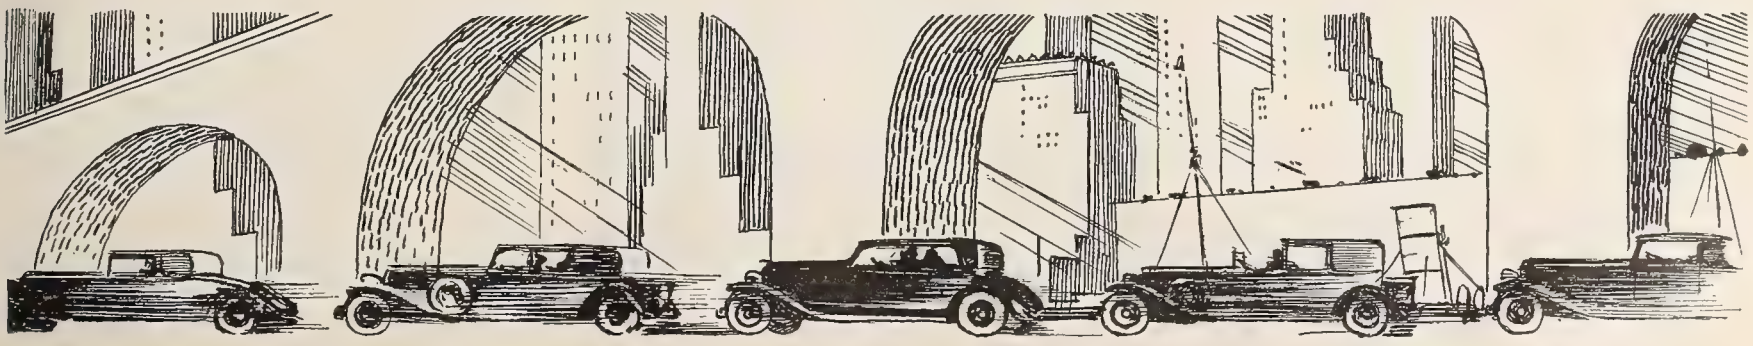
that short you can't buy!

CHARLES E. LEWIS, exhibitor and editor, writing in The Managers' Round Table says:

" Curiosity getting the best of me, I slipped in on a screening of that General Motors short subject, "The Fourth Necessity." They have certainly made an interesting nine minutes out of the progress of American motor cars, and, best of all, there is not the slightest taint of advertising about the entire action of the picture.

" Here is, in my opinion, an excellent short subject that could grace the program of any theatre in the land. It is entertaining, interesting and, to a certain extent, educational as well. It takes you back to the days of the horseless carriage, with its incidental problems—and there were plenty of them, too—right through the years until the present day with its ultra-smart cars.

" It is as fine a piece of screen fare as one could hope to book and you can get it entirely without cost, even so far as shipping expense is concerned. I do not hesitate to recommend it to every theatre for an early showing. From advance reports on bookings we are suggesting that you get your dates in right away."



HOW TO GET IT

Write a letter or send a telegram. Say when you want it and for how many days. Give three optional dates if possible. Your booking will be confirmed. Your print will arrive postage prepaid, to be returned collect.

GENERAL MOTORS CORPORATION

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC RELATIONS

1775 BROADWAY, NEW YORK CITY

SID DANNENBERG PUT OVER BIG CAMPAIGN ON "BLESSED EVENT"

Playing up the sensational and romance angles of "Blessed Event" for the Lake Theatre engagement, Sid Dannenberg, publicity manager of the Warner Theatres in Cleveland, arranged a great advance exploitation campaign before the picture played his house.

A "Smash" Advance!

His advance lobby display fairly screamed "Blessed Event." It was a large mechanical display board with a central figure of Lee Tracy (taken from a still) smiling and pointing his thumb to the right, where an open keyhole, large enough for a still to be seen through, was placed. Behind this was a large wheel propelled by a small motor. On the wheel, in cut-out spaces, were stills. An electric light was set up directly behind the keyhole. As the wheel revolved, bringing the stills in front of the opening, a light shone behind them, accentuating each still. This proved a very attractive stunt, drawing the attention of thousands to the coming attraction. Copy on this board read:

"Here it is! The scandalous comedy of a scandal columnist who rose from a keyhole to a national institution!—Don't miss peeking through the keyhole of the World's Champ Keyhole Peeker!"

The Winchell Slant!

In addition to the above, Dannenberg made extensive use of the Walter Winchell one sheet, which openly recommends the picture in the columnist's own words. Thirty thousand doorknob hangers, as illustrated in the press book on the picture, were distributed where they would do the most good. Teaser ads were placed in the newspapers five days in advance of the picture's opening. He took a small box in the papers with excerpt of Winchell's rave on the picture, done in this way:

"Just by way of telling you . . . that 'Blessed Event' flicker is something to rave about . . . it's magnificent movie magic!" . . . So says Walter Winchell . . . and, by the way, you can see 'Blessed Event' in Cleveland starting (date) at the Lake Theatre."

The above is particularly applicable for papers which run the regular syndicated Winchell column. Dannenberg also went after the female patronage by planting a baby scale, all prepared for the little tot, in the ladies' room. An easel card was placed next to it, with this copy:

"He tells the world this is going to be filled even before the 'Blessed Event' happens! He predicts babies like the weather bureau predicts the weather . . . if you're expecting a 'Blessed Event'—Beware! . . . Because you can't keep anything a secret from this scandal columnist!—See 'Blessed Event' Coming to the Lake Theatre, etc., etc."

Milk Company Tie-up!

A tie-up with a milk company netted half the space on milk tags, on which was printed, in addition to theatre name and playdate, this copy: "If you anticipate a 'Blessed Event' prepare to nurse your little one with Islay's milk."

A lot of free publicity was obtained by a newspaper contest in which the readers were invited to approximate the number of "blessed events" which would take place in the entire country during the week of the picture's run. After the completion of the contest the correct data was secured through local newspapers, maternity hospitals and physicians' bureaus.

An excellent tie-up was also arranged with a local 5-10-25c. store whereby each sale of sheet music was wrapped in paper which carried the titles of the songs in the picture and other advertising matter on "Blessed Event."

Nice work, "Danny"; no wonder that whole Warner Brothers theatre gang are so pepped up all the time.

SELLING THE WHOLE SHOW!

No one will deny that Jensen & Von Herberg's Liberty Theatre in Seattle, Wash., certainly sold the entire show in this swell ad. Even the proportions were well handled, as witness the graduating in size and importance of the various units.

Topping the ad is the feature; second in place and importance is the special comedy; Mickey Mouse and "Curiosities" complete the line-up, and every one of the subjects gets proper mention.

Advocates of the single feature idea should welcome this form of advertising with open arms. It certainly contains much seat-selling appeal and gives promise of being a well-rounded-out show. Try it yourself for a change and see if the customers won't like it better than a long-drawn-out double bill.

WALLY CALDWELL'S CAMPAIGN WAGED FOR REVIVAL WEEK

Revival Week as staged by Wally Caldwell, manager of the Valentine Theatre, Toledo, Ohio, offers a number of suggestions which should be interesting to his many fellow Club members.

One of the main-stays of his campaign was a tie-up made with a leading newspaper, whereby voting cans were secured from the city and 50,000 ballots and heralds were distributed gratis by the circulation department. The paper also plugged a four day campaign asking readers to vote for pictures they wished to see again, using a printed reproduction of the ballot and various stories. Another stunt asked newspaper readers to name players in reproduced old cuts. Over 2,000 answers were received.

Additional exploitation and advertising consisted of placing 36x48 inch stencils on vacant store windows; the posting of hundreds of heralds in centre of sidewalks, on corners and through residential districts on opening day; use of full one-sheet cards with 11x14 mounts in 16 special downtown windows; a special swim suit window in leading department store; the placing of desk chairs and voting box in lobby for patrons to vote for revival pictures; decoration of theatre front with American flags and pennants; extra size newspaper ads in all papers; special advance stories, and special ads and stories in several foreign languages and 18 rural papers.

Many of our members have found Revival Week an excellent means of boosting trade over a dull period and as a general tonic for stirring up interest in the theatre.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

It's about time we disclosed to fellow Round Tablers a little information on the earlier activities of J. E. Lykes, manager of Loew's Park Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, and one of this department's regular contributors.

Jack Lykes

He was born in Cleveland, Jan. 4, 1902, and educated in Cleveland grade and Canton High School. Later on he spent a year at Penn State. At the age of 18, while still attending school, he ushered in spare time, and also acted as doorman and office assistant to gain further experience.

After leaving college he joined a small tab show as assistant road manager and spent a year with the outfit. Then he went with Publix down in Florida, leaving there in '28 when that circuit shut down several houses for the summer months. He joined Loew's two weeks later in St. Louis and has been with the organization for four years. All in all, he worked for independent companies 3 years; for Publix, 4 years, and the time already stated with Loew Incorporated.

Without a doubt Lykes will always be a showman, for he tells us there isn't a thought in his mind of ever leaving this field for another. He is a world war veteran, a member of the J. O. U. A. M., and is married.

ED FORESTER SURE DID GOOD JOB ON A 4-PAGE SUPPLEMENT

We've just run across a four page newspaper supplement instigated in the interests of Greater Show Season by Eddie Forester, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Grand Island, Neb. It's a corker—chock full of gags, advertising from a large number of local merchants and represents a lot of work on the part of Eddie and his associates.

The front page blared in extra large type, "Good Times Return—with Capitol Theatre New Movie Season." The balance of this page was devoted to a large reader on "Horsefeathers," display ads on both merchant's wares and current attractions at the theatre and several readers describing gags in force during the week's drive.

"Reporter" Gag Was Good!

One of the gags, "The Movie Reporter," is tied up with every one of the many merchant ads in the section. Basing action on the premise that there are a whole lot of people always ready to discuss their favorite movie stars with some one presumably in the know, or even otherwise, Forrester arranged to have an attractive girl reporter do considerable canvassing of chosen districts and to be on hand at certain hours in every one of the stores advertised. Each of the ads stated in italics the time of the day the girl would make her appearance. She took along with her most of the announcement books sent out by the film companies and let the interviewed person look through them while the two gossiped about stars and movies. At the close of the interview the reporter presented a guest ticket good for a favorite, coming attraction.

In one corner of each of the several ads appeared an uncaptioned photo of some screen star. Readers were asked to properly identify all of them and participate in the awards of guest tickets. First award called for one month's guest ticket for two; second, for a two weeks ticket; third, for 6 guest tickets, and two guest tickets were given to the next ten entries.

Another gag was based on Harpo Marx's characterization of a person with a penchant for collecting badges and buttons of all description. This gag was aimed at the kiddies and they were asked to collect all they had, bring them to the box office and be judged for award of a prize and guest tickets.

Full Width Streamer!

The spread of the section was featured by a full width streamer head on the four Marx Brothers and title of picture, but we note the conscientious newspaper editor did not let it get by without smearing it every couple of inches or so with "advertising" in italics. Seems as though he could have been just a bit less conscientious and still have accomplished results. More ads and readers were also featured on the spread, with the last page practically a duplicate arrangement.

To sum it all up, we sincerely believe Forester's deserves a lot of praise for promoting such a worthwhile Greater Show Season supplement. The stunts he used in connection with it are also interesting and we think other Club members will find occasion to use them.

This is the first news we've had of Forester's activities in a long, long time and here's hoping it is an indication that he intends to resume his place on the active list. He succeeded Vogel Gettier, whom we met while on our western trip some time ago. Please give Gettier our best regards when you two meet, Eddie, and ask him to let us know what he's doing these days. In the meantime, help the good work along by shooting in some more show-dope.

Taylor's Thursday Nights

Harry Taylor of the Metropolitan Theatre, Boston, Mass., is building up Thursday night grosses with a pre-showing of the feature picture for the following, when the opportunity permits. It's not a regular Thursday stunt, just an occasional, with the usher suggesting to the patrons, when seated, that the management would be glad to have them remain as its guest. Word-of-mouth publicity has been very effective.

ANOTHER EGAN STUNT

Up in Calgary, Canada, where Pete Egan manages the Palace Theatre, Paramount has a ladies' "soft-ball" club that won the Provincial City and Palace Theatre trophies at Calgary and Alberta.

TOM KANE HOLDING OWN IN W-C DRIVE; IS FISHERMAN, TOO

We note that Tom Kane, manager of the Sequoia Theatre, Redwood City, Calif., is holding his own among the many Fox-West Coast men competing for honors in the big drive that has been on for some time.

At this writing Tom stands second among the six theatres in his district and just plain, hard work is the answer. He's been busy promoting a lot of give-aways, which have included electric refrigerators, radios, etc., and has been ballyhooing shows and theatre in general.

To his amateur nights, which have been running for 18 consecutive weeks, he's adding stunts such as "Ladies Wood Sawing Contests," and only lately put on a "Ladies Goat Milking Contest." Says they go for it, too.

Something of a fisherman in his spare moments, if any, Tom went out in S. F. Bay a short time ago and caught a couple of 4 foot sharks for a lobby display when playing Zane Grey's "South Sea Adventures," The big fish lived only two days, reports Tom, on being taken away from native elements, but while there the public stood around and shuddered at the thought of their man-eating possibilities.

When he played "Bring 'Em Back," in addition to wide distribution of heralds, false front, street bally and whatnot, he held a special preview for local teachers and politicians which turned out to be a corking means of publicity for the picture.

Anent Tom's yen for fishing and observation made on ye ed's hope some day to shoot a par, we'd like to state that while we have not tackled any four-foot sharks since getting out of swaddling clothes, there's some pretty fair fishing around our neck of the woods and we sure get a kick out of it whenever it's possible to get out on the briny. The "blues" have been thick offshore all summer, and small tuna, albacore and bonita have also been around. Some of the finest weak-fishing in the country can be had in the large bays that dent the south shore of Long Island, anytime from spring 'till they school up in the fall to hunt more southerly waters. We top-fish for 'em, Tom, over this way, with the lightest possible tackle, and only last Sunday had the pleasure of landing a fine catch that included beauties up to ten and eleven pounds. Some day we'll have a get together for a real fishing trip and, until then, maybe it would be a good idea to run a few fishing notes in this department. What say, Kane?

He's Knockin' 'Em Dead!

Who? Julius (Uptown) Lamm.—He didn't feel much like working this week, so all he did was——

1. Promoted 12 excellent prizes for his Screeno night. 2. Promoted a Majestic refrigerator for a give-away. 3. Tied up a local dancing school to give fall dancing lessons to his Looney Tune Members. 4. Arranged special nights for large sports organizations to attend during the showing of "Tiger Shark." 5. Started a merchants' drive to build his mid-week business, etc., etc., etc., etc., etc.

Holy smoke, Julius! The old typewriter is all petered out!!! You'd better lay off till next week. (W. B. Ohio Mouthpiece)

SWANK WOULD LIKE TO SEE MORE WEEKLY ADS FROM MANAGERS

"Give us fellows who have to put our entire week's program into one ad in a weekly newspaper more information and illustrations of this type of ad," is the plea to this department from M. M. Swank, manager of the Nova Theatre, Stockton, Kas., and a recently elected member of the Round Table Club.

A short time ago we broadcast the same

S. O. S. from Round Tabler Whyte, down in Riverhead, L. I., N. Y., who is also up against the same conditions in his community, and as a result of the publicity given his request, one of our members came through with some suggestions. On behalf of Swank, we're again making the same request and hope some of his fellow members will help out. Here's an ad that he recently used. What do you think of it? A newcomer to this game, it looks as though he's catching on fast.

Swank and his partner only took over the Nova a few months ago and he writes to let us know that he feels greatly indebted to the helpful hints sent this department by the members of our organization. His theatre is located in a new building, of which Stockton is very proud, and every effort is being made to give patrons in his town and vicinity the very best in the way of shows. He promises to do his share to keep up the good work being done by our large membership. Help him along, fellows, by shooting in some suggestions on weekly ads, and we'll do our part at this end of the Table.

McCUAN SAYS "ALL QUIET IN OZARKS"; SENDS COUPLE GAGS

"All quiet in the Ozarks," reports our good friend L. W. McCuan, operator of the Cameo Theatre, Mountain Grove, Mo.; "we've got old man depression on the run, after a hard summer, and despite the fact that it looked as though we'd have to eat the much advertised wolf."

In addition to pursuing his old "racket" of having a baker wrap without cost to theatre 3,000 weekly bills, monthly calendar and weekly program with loaves of bread, McCuan has hit on a good idea that we are taking the liberty of passing on to his fellow Club members.

It may be an old gag to some showman, observes Mack, but each week, when his screen trailers come in, they are run through for highlights the screen service uses to sell the picture and portions of this copy are transferred to newspaper advertising. This has proven very effective.

There was a time in Mountain Grove when Sunday shows were not permitted and one minister in particular was very much averse to having them. Now we note, according to one of McCuan's programs, that mention is given this same preacher's Sunday services. As a return favor, when a picture theme carries some religious flavor or preachment in keeping with church policies, the film receives a plug via sermon.

We also have in front of us a door knob hanger which carries at its top an illustration of an alarm clock in full clamor and of a man with his head on a bed pillow. The head in large type reads "Good Morning! Rather early, but we wanted to give you plenty of time to include a good laugh in your arrangements for the day." Copy and mats advertising a current picture followed. No details, but it looks as though Mack had these hung on knobs at an early hour in the morning.

All of which is interesting and, particularly so, the trailer gag. Just as McCuan figured out, the fellows who make up trailers have to think up some powerful sales talk and there's no reason why the same lines shouldn't be adaptable for newspaper ad copy. Keep up the good work, Mack, and continue to sock old man hard times. Let's hear from you some more.

"Reaction Cards" Popular

The practice of using "reaction cards" in Warner theatres is becoming increasingly popular, according to a recent report from Ogden, Utah, where audience reaction noted on cards was used to shape advertising and publicity on "Life Begins." No actual quotations were used.

A SHOW-WOMAN DISCUSSES THE VARIOUS FORMS OF ADVERTISING!

Try Them All and Then Decide Before Going Into Spending Big Sums Foolishly, Advises This Experienced Show-woman

by ANNA BELL WARD
Phoenix Amusement Corporation
Lexington, Ky.

This particular article should be unusually interesting, chiefly because it expresses the views and experiences of a show-woman who knows showbusiness and, better still, knows what she is talking about. The houses with which she is affiliated in Lexington, Ky., are models of efficient management. Her show-selling is known throughout the Middle West and when she has something to say, you can always depend upon one thing—it will be worth listening to.

We would like to publish some articles showing YOUR reactions to what Miss Ward has to say here. Suppose we make this the basis for a helpful series on the do's and don'ts of advertising? Here is the start. Who will follow it up?

IN our opinion, all forms of advertising are good when used in moderation. It is easier, however, to overdo advertising than not to do enough of it.

We have often heard persons of authority remark that it is quite impossible to write intelligently about a subject unless the writer has had some experience in what he or she is attempting to describe; consequently, it would seem logical to explain to the reader that this article is to be based upon the knowledge of our past experiences in showmanship, which, we must confess, dates back to the infancy of the industry.

Try Them All—Then Decide

After having concluded, we shall reasonably acknowledge, that, after all, we do not know which of the many forms of advertising is of most value to the exhibitor. We do know, however, that a lot depends upon the locality of the theatre, the size town in which the theatre is situated, and the class of trade to which a theatre caters. Many things can enter into a local situation, thus making it unlike any other town of its size; therefore, we shall probably conclude our remarks by admitting that the only way to really determine which of the many forms of advertising is best, is to try them all, then decide for yourself which method would seem most profitable in your own individual situation.

First of all, we believe it is a waste of money, together with a waste of time, to try to put over any big picture or any big star having a natural box-office value. We must have a good reason, you say, for making such an assertion. Well, we believe we have, and right now we shall endeavor to disclose it to you.

Most everyone who goes to the movies will interest themselves now and then in some sort of fan news. One variety of your patrons will read Judge, New Yorker, Liberty, Post or Literary Digest. While others will read the columns which the various newspapers all over the country devote to the making of the motion picture. There is still another variety—the largest of the lot—those who read fan magazines.

Women buy them at the book shops, ten cent stores, drug stores, cigar counters—they take them home and read them religiously; their children read them. Even dad and grandpa will risk their astronomic eye on an occasional glimpse at the scantily arrayed body lines of the stars, such as is printed regularly in our movie periodicals.

Who Knows Best?

Obviously, the whole family is better versed on who's who in the movies—what's going on in the movies—and what's being shown in the movies, than the average or well-posted exhibitor. The movie mind of the public today knows—or thinks it knows—what it wants to see or does not want to see, quite some time before a star or any certain movie production is announced for presentation at your theatre.

When people see advertised at your theatre such pictures as GRAND HOTEL, STRANGE INTERLUDE, (or any other outstanding attraction for that matter), they know right then and there that it is a big picture—I probably should have said—they believe they know it is a big picture.

Why? . . . Because they have seen and read so much advance publicity in the movie magazines and in other classes of periodicals, such as has been mentioned in a preceding paragraph, they are more or less anxious to see such publicized pictures when they are ready for presentation.

Pictures of the calibre mentioned herein, having had such tremendous advance ballyhoos in the movie periodicals, do not need a lot of added exploiture when they come to your screen. Why waste a lot of time and money through the source of extra billboard advertisement, newspaper space and a probable front, on a picture already sold to your public? Under such circumstances, the customary advance announcement in the newspaper together with the advance showing of a good trailer and an attractive ad in the newspaper, on the opening of the picture seem to us all that is necessary.

On the other hand, we believe that you can take a picture, one not nationally heralded as an outstanding attraction, but one which you know to be good entertainment, step out on an advance campaign through the use of some well-written advance copy in your local newspapers, billboards, window cards, heralds, and last but not least, an attractive lobby; and you will more than likely receive good returns on the opening. After that, favorable mouth-to-mouth publicity should keep your house filled during the rest of the engagement.

It is our theory that it makes no difference how much or how little you spend in an effort to put over any certain picture, or any picture star, if the picture or the star isn't there in entertainment value, you have wasted a lot of costly efforts, and most certainly you have lessened any confidence your public may have had in your judgment of good entertainment. When you get hold of a picture on one of your programs that has been panned by the reviewers, one which really is zero in entertainment value, regardless of how much money that picture cost you, it would be well for you to let it come to your theatre cold and go out the same way.

. . . And speaking of confidence . . . somehow, theatre patrons have never placed much confidence in what their theatre manager writes in his ads. Why? . . . Because the usual theatre manager doesn't know what he is writing about and when he writes it, it's usually a misrepresentation. There has never been any confidence established between the movie patron and the exhibitor, except in rare instances where the exhibitor has always made it a point to base his advertising copy on truth. The exhibitor has P. T. Barnumed Mr. and Mrs. Public so long that they don't believe anything they read in the motion picture announcements of their local papers. This is a very good reason why Mr. and Mrs. Public seek information desired from any other source rather than the local one. They use the movie periodicals for reference like some people use their Bibles; but, mind you, they wouldn't believe most exhibitors on a stack of bibles—we ask you honestly—can you blame them?

About Outdoor Advertising

We read that the chains are advocating the use of billboards again. May we take up enough of your time to relate an experience with outside advertising? Several years ago we concluded to use twenty-eight twenty-four sheet billboard stands each week for a period of six months. We decided on six months because it was necessary to take a contract for that period of time, in order to get the billboards away from the national advertisers. These twenty-four sheet billboards covered every pike coming into and going out of Lexington; every good street running into and off our main thoroughfare. When we contracted for the billboards, it was the first time in the history of theatre business in Lexington that a theatre had used so much paper to bill a show.

The Sunday previous to the use of the billboards, for the first time, we exhibited FOX MOVIETONE FOLLIES. The picture, during the week, played to over seventeen thousand paid admissions—the best business we had grossed on any attraction that season up to that time—and mind you, it came in with only our usual amount of advance publicity.

The same seventeen thousand people who saw the FOX MOVIETONE FOLLIES that week saw a trailer on REVENGE, a United Artists picture starring, if you remember, the beautiful and exotic Dolores Del Rio—REVENGE was the attraction set to open the following Sunday—it was the subject on which we were to begin the use of our rather expensive billboard campaign.

Naturally, with the big break we got on the presentation of the REVENGE trailer to those seventeen thousand people, together with the big advance showing on the twenty-eight twenty-four sheet billboards, and a very fine animated lobby display, we anticipated record crowds; but much to our astonishment the publicized picture fell flat.

You are probably saying: "Oh, well, everybody did a big business on the FOX MOVIETONE FOLLIES." You might unmindfully contend that REVENGE fell flat because of the tremendous week we had on FOX MOVIETONE FOLLIES. "A small week always follows a big one," you might affirm; but no such supposition applied to the case.

Public Won't "Fall"

Regardless of the money expended in an effort to put REVENGE over, the public simply did not want to see the picture! They had read somewhere in those movie periodicals that REVENGE was not a talkie—that REVENGE was only synchronized with music—and that REVENGE was the poorest picture the star had ever made. The only purpose our expensive campaign served was to enlighten the public on which dates the picture was booked so that while the picture was being shown in town, they could stay away from the theatre.

We own two Class A houses in the town; our other theatre was playing STREET GIRL. Because we had devoted all our efforts to the campaign on REVENGE, STREET GIRL came in practically cold; but it was a talkie and since it had received splendid comments in all the movie periodicals, the latter production not only grossed several hundred dollars more on the first day's showing, but grossed three times as much business on the week.

In the course of a few months, we began to realize that since the picture going public of today forms its own opinion on pictures from the advance propaganda pro and con, published in the movie magazines, it was like casting pearls before swine to try to publicize a picture or a star that they had already made up their minds they did not want to see. We learned that whenever we had on an outstanding attraction or star, to advertise on those twenty-eight twenty-four sheet billboards, we enjoyed a good business; but whenever our attraction was mediocre and our star likewise, our business was just so-so.

As time went on, we decided that our billboard advertising was not so hot. To prove that our discussion was feasible—the Sunday after our contract was out on the billboards, we opened with SUNNY SIDE UP. We did little or no advance publicity on the attraction; but in spite of the fact, it broke our house record, and a record for all times in all the houses in our town.

Before you think twice, you will perhaps contend "SUNNY SIDE UP was a big box office attraction everywhere." . . . That is just the point at which we are trying so conscientiously to drive. SUNNY SIDE UP was a big box-office attraction, made so by the big national broadcasts, favorable magazine and newspper comments and good mouth-to-mouth publicity.

As a conclusion, since we have backed up this theory of ours with what we believe to be good sound logic, we want to add: any exhibitor who attempts to play doctor to the well-informed public of this day and age, by trying to choke down their movie throats a bad or mediocre production, in the guise of a sugar-coated pill, made up of noisy looking fronts, untruthful newspaper copy, billboards and hundreds of other publicity ingredients, is going to find a very unsympathetic, obstinate—and, I dare say,—mulish patient.

Expensive Fronts

Now then, suppose we say a thing or two about theatre fronts. I note in a recent publication that the new mayor of New York passed an ordinance that prohibits theatres from using "fronts." We understand the only ballyhoo he did not prohibit was the use of the electric signs which can not extend out from the front of the building more than four feet.

The action of the new mayor is probably a blessing in disguise to the New York theatre owners, who have, for the past two years, made side shows out of their exquisite lobbies. Lobbies of architectural beauty, costing thousands of dollars, have been covered up each week by the regular use of a few dollars worth of cheap wallboard daubed with water colors.

Every theatre front in New York until last week looked alive—they truly reminded one of the old-fashioned midway. No doubt, that is where the "front" mania came from.

One day very soon the New York theatre managers will be sending the new mayor a vote of thanks. They will have learned that all the money they have been throwing away on that form of exploitation can now go to help pay off the mortgage.

We, too, used to build expensive fronts—and they were peaches, too. But we have since learned such expenditure does not pay. When fronts first came into vogue, they did attract some attention and some of them perhaps paid for themselves; but their too frequent use—the general idea of a front on every picture—has rendered this form of advertising valueless except in instances where an exhibitor can build a front and give it animation.

A stunt front—one that will attract the eye of the public and cause them to talk or wonder—will doubtlessly take away the commonness of the old type of ballyhoo. The BRING 'EM BACK ALIVE front on the marquee in a New York theatre, with its animated animals, or the stunt front which we used recently on WHITE ZOMBIE is what we term a good stunt front, because it makes people stand by and take notice. It is not easy for most exhibitors to create a stunt front; but when they do, they have an ace in the hole.

After all that has been written in the preceding paragraphs, we humbly admit that of the many forms of theatre advertising, we like the newspaper best. After long years of careful study and experience in the field of exploitation, we earnestly believe local newspapers are not only the most reliable, but are the surest and most profitable medium of putting your message across to the public, excluding, of course, those blessed movie magazines.

ANTIQUE BALLY WAS USED BY LOEWENBERG TO EXCELLENT RESULT

Antique vehicles of transportation have apparently captured the imagination of Charles Loewenberg, advertising and publicity director of Fox-Midwesco theatres in Milwaukee, as an effective means of attracting public attention.

For instance, get an eyeful of the old Brush auto, a 1901 model that Charlie picked up in Beloit and which intrigued

Milwaukians a-plenty. According to appearances of this old one or two-lunger, the original owner must have kept it in the parlor. You can see for yourselves that on this occasion the bally heralded the stage appearance of Gilda Gray.

The other photo shows the bally he fixed up for "Horsefeathers," which consisted of a team of heavy draft horses, front portion of a wagon and what looks like a metal drum to serve as a body for this chariot-like affair. The charioteer was dressed with a Harpo Marx red wig.

It's been a long time since this department has had an opportunity to report on the activities of Charlie Loewenberg and we hope this won't be the last. This time we were forced to depend upon a mutual friend to shoot along word of his activities; next time, maybe, we'll hear direct from Charlie.

Garman's New Post

L. M. Garman, former manager of the Pantages Theatre, Kansas City, and for several years a well known theatre executive with the Orpheum and RKO Circuits, has been appointed manager of the Fox-Plaza Theatre, Kansas City's new first run.

We Were Wrong!

In a recent item in our "Personalities" page we managed to get J. J. Franklin's present position in showbusiness all balled up. He's not the manager of the Golden Gate Theatre, San Francisco, nor did he succeed Henry Goldenberg at that house. Franklin is the division manager and George Bole is manager.

THEATRE AND MICKEY MOUSE UNDIE VENDOR HOLD A LARGE PARTY

Several months ago and prior to a fire which caused the Smalley Theatre in Norwich, N. Y., to temporarily cease fuctioning, we reported that Manager Gilladette and the Norwich Knitting Company had tied in for the exploitation of theatre and various underthings bearing the Mickey Mouse brand.

At this writing we have before us a note from the United Artists Corp. home office commenting on a three-cornered tie-up and cooperative ad promoted by the manager of the Colonia Theatre, Norwich, in connection with the same manufacturer and a local food stores concern on the occasion of a Mickey Mouse Theatre Party.

The ad offered free admission to every youngster who came to the theatre wearing a Mickey Mouse sweat shirt and a story in the paper further stated that those without the shirts would be admitted for the small sum of ten cents, one dime! In addition, the knitting firm arranged for distribution of candy gifts to all and the give-away of a number of certificates entitling holder to a free suit of Mickey Mouse underwear.

Our card records show that Charlie Rose is the manager of the Colonia, in Norwich, so until we hear differently we'll credit him with throwing this very worthy party. We believe he or the U. A. home office will gladly furnish particulars to any Club member who is interested in effecting a tie-up.

With Mickey creating so much interest for the average theatre we must certainly put ourselves on record as being highly in favor of this or any other form of kiddie club that will build up the matinee business. Get the kids; the kids will get the parents.

MORE MICKEY MICE

NOVEMBER, A MONTH OF POSSIBILITIES!

Besides being, as a general rule, a good show month, November can also be counted upon for added business stimulus through the many holidays falling in this one month.

You have, among other dates, Election Day, Armistice Day, Thanksgiving Day, American Education Week, American Red Cross Week, National Book Week, Finale of the Washington Bicentennial Celebration, and dozens of other events—all possessing great box office possibilities for progressive showmen.

If you do not make it a rule to follow the Showman's Calendar in the Round Table section each week, we suggest that you start now and pay particular attention to November.

It should be kept in mind that most benefit shows or other aids for needy and unemployed can best be put across on or about Thanksgiving Day. The very nature of that particular holiday makes it all the more desirable; therefore, it is our suggestion that you sit down with your local editor, heads of welfare organizations and all others interested in such relief work, and dope out a series of special performances or whatever else fits your idea of what your theatre should do for this purpose; then go ahead and do it right.

It can always be so arranged that the bare expenses of these shows be repaid by the organizations getting the funds so raised. This is entirely up to you. Most showmen, with the consent of their home offices, are glad to take advantage of the good will resulting from this work.

Timely material pertaining to holidays for this month will be carried in our section between now and the early part of the month. If you need some special material, drop us a line and we will dig it up from tried and successful activities of previous years.

DE HAVEN CONTINUES TO DO GOOD WORK IN BRONX NEIGHBORHOOD

That enterprising manager of the Burke Theatre, Milo De Haven, who also acts as exploitation director for the J. C. Bolte theatres in the Bronx section of New York City, continues to offer evidence that showselling is not a lost art in the Metropolitan district. He is ever on the job of selling cooperative ideas to neighborhood merchants and, consequently, further cementing friendly relations between store, patron and theatre. Only a short time ago he tied in with a Bronx newspaper and helped promote a "Get Acquainted With Your Neighborhood Store" page, on which appeared a variety of advertisements and a sort of "Shopping With Susie" service gag, the latter a rambling account by a reporter of what she observed on sale at various shops. In return for his share of the work De Haven obtained a prominent spot for his ad for the Burke's weekly program.

We note also that he recently effected a profitable tie-up with a laundry for distribution to homes of a weekly program calendar which carried at the bottom a stub good for one free admission if accompanied by one paid ticket. This deal was made for a four week period and the cards went into homes with each bundle of laundry. The laundry trucks also carried free theatre publicity on both sides, plus a large card at laundry headquarters. Since the laundry is located ten blocks away from the regular theatre neighborhood, the two-for-one does not act as a cut-in on regular trade.

October moving season was also the occasion for the sending out of a message via the Burke News Weekly to new residents of the neighborhood. He used the entire front page to "extend a hearty welcome" to the new arrivals and tell them about their own neighborhood theatre, giving location of same and including names of the staff, etc., in the introduction. Since the city always undergoes a vast change of addresses every year, it will be readily seen that this was an excellent gesture in behalf of the theatre.

De Haven's work is always interesting and we take pleasure in passing accounts of it along to his fellow Club members. Next time we get a line on his activities we'll tell you more, and we are confident that, as always, they will be interesting.

HERE'S AN EXAMPLE OF WEEKLY AD FROM MANAGER B. SNYDER

In line with suggestions made by a number of Club members to present examples of weekly newspaper advertising, we are reproducing a full page ad run a short time back by B. H. Snyder, operator of the Unique Theatre, Gunnison, Colo.

This splurge is, of course, not a week in and week out proposition, but it's in line with the general idea and may serve as an inspiration to others similarly situated, when the urge is felt to run a large display on a number of coming attractions. More than a dozen pictures are represented on the pages.

Snyder and his recently acquired partner, George P. Besse, joined the Club but a short time back and the above is their first contribution. For a 400 seat house situated in a small community, we call this ad going after public attention in a large way. We'll be on the lookout for further evidence of these aggressive tactics.

A RADIO BROADCAST!

Sig. Solomon's "Chatter-box" Broadcast Goes Over Big and Is Good for Any Other Spot!

EDITOR'S NOTE: At frequent intervals we have received requests for suitable material for local radio broadcasting. Although we knew that such broadcasting was a regular feature in many theatres throughout the country, we did not have the actual broadcast to send to those interested. It is, therefore a real pleasure to publish this complete broadcast from Sig. Solomon.

"CHICK"

The many members of our Club who have promoted or otherwise arranged tie-ups for time over the air will probably be interested in the first broadcast of the "Paramount Chatterbox," a radio novelty recently inaugurated over Station W. K. B. N. by S. S. Solomon, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Youngstown, Ohio.

To our way of thinking, Solomon did a good job. His style, which at times bears traces of Winchellingo, seems particularly appropriate for theatre and picture exploitation, opening hitherto closed portals of the industry and its personnel to patrons and fans and dishing out gossipy information to them in a chatty, attractive manner. With the thought in mind that the following will serve in good need some fellow showman contemplating a similar move, we are reprinting the broadcast word for word:

"It is our particular pleasure, at this time, ladies and gentlemen, to introduce on the air, for the first time, the Paramount Chatterbox. He comes to you at this time, until further notice, bringing interesting news and gossip to all lovers of the best in entertainment—the talking picture.

"And this is your punishment, ladies and gentlemen, for not going down to the Paramount Theatre this evening and enjoying the truly wonderful performances of Jackie Cooper and Lewis Stone in "DIVORCE IN THE FAMILY." Let me see—it must be almost three and one-half years since I made my last broadcast back of the Eastman Theatre in Rochester, New York. Your own Manny Evans of this station was announcer at the time, and Dave Rubinoff and myself made a joint appearance over the air—Rubinoff did the fiddling and I turned the pages.

"Every time I think of Rubinoff it reminds me of a week on the Eastman Theatre stage when we had the Russian Dave Rubinoff, the Irish Senator Murphy, the English Al Mitchell, the German Musical Director Wagner and the very French Fifi D'Orsay; all we needed was some Mexican Chili Con Carne to start another world war. There are many amusing stories told about Rubinoff, but, all in all, he was, and still is, a regular guy. He had his likes and dislikes and used as much energy in showing them as he did in playing his violin. Chevalier was his pet weakness and it was a common occurrence to see Dave between every stage appearance, drop into a back seat two or three times every day to get his fill of Chevalier in INNOCENTS OF PARIS," which reminds me that we, at the Paramount Theatre, will present Chevalier this Friday in his newest starring vehicle, "LOVE ME TONIGHT"—surrounded by the fascinating Jeanette MacDonald, the comical Charlie Ruggles and a host of popular screen celebrities.

"Somehow or other Youngstown has not, as yet, warmed up to Chevalier as has the rest of the world. Possibly it was the type of pictures he played or possibly the French background or maybe the type of songs he sang. Let me tell you folks that in "LOVE ME TONIGHT," each and every one of you—men and women—and children alike, will thrill to a new Chevalier. He's a regular guy in this picture, just a smart little tailor who knows his women and works on the modern theory that when a girl says 'No' she means 'Maybe'; when she says 'Maybe' she means 'Yes,' and when she says 'Yes'—well, she is no lady.

"I want to stop here to say that this fifteen minute period tonight is only an introduction to what I am looking forward to as many other happy Wednesday evenings over the air. Many a time I have wished to take many of you up in my office and talk shop, because I know how interested the average patron is in the intimacies of pictures and what goes to make up the picture industry. Through the kind offices of W. K. B. N. I am taking this opportunity of chatting with all our Paramount friends, and it is my particular desire to create as much good will, in so doing, as it is possible to maintain. There isn't one of you listening to me now, who hasn't a pet question to ask concerning his or her favorite star, how pictures are made, how they are distributed, why such certain conditions exist, etc., etc. During these fifteen minute periods it will be our particular pleasure to answer these questions, so write in to W. K. B. N., putting down in your own words what you would like to know and your questions will be answered in the order received.

(Stop for Cab Calloway's record.)

"Let me tell you something about our Paramount studios in Hollywood.

"Supposing those great iron gates of a studio such as Paramount's were suddenly swung open to you . . . you may roam those twenty-six acres at will . . . what would you marvel at most? Marlene Dietrich in a scene, you think? . . . Perhaps . . . but, after your curiosity is satisfied with the glamor and surprise of film making, you will look around and marvel at the modern city itself.

"Once inside a studio you will see what few outside the walls ever realized . . . that, given a week to prepare, 1,500 workers at Paramount could withstand a siege of long duration.

"A quick flight through the Paramount lot will convince you of this . . . here is a modern dormitory . . . it's the dressing room building, three stories high. Farther on is an up-to-date cafe . . . it feeds two thousand or more hungry workers every day.

"This city within a city contains other things . . . there's the barber shop . . . a hairdressing establishment . . . a bootblack stand . . . a nursery in which flowers and shrubs are grown . . . a wardrobe building where thousands may be clothed and where gowns are in constant making . . . a hospital . . . a fire department . . . a foundry . . . a huge garage . . . a wood mill, where sets are cut . . . a carpenter shop where they are put together . . . a paint shop where they are decorated . . . and a police force.

"For recreation, here's a fully-equipped gymnasium . . . and film entertainment can be supplied in three theatres and twenty projection rooms.

"The studio makes its own ice, distills its own drinking water . . . casts its own statuary . . . generates its own electricity . . . has a library with thousands of volumes . . . and has laboratories galore.

"But it is useless to continue. . . . In short, name something this little city hasn't. . . . Where, you ask, is the dairy and the chicken ranch? . . . Those, by dears, are two of the things to be provided for when preparing for a siege.

"How, we have been asked repeatedly, are some of these screen names correctly pronounced? Let's pause a minute for a little lesson in some of the hard ones. For instance, it's: Maw-reece Shev-ahl'-yay (Maurice Chevalier), Mar-leen' Dee'trick (Marlene Deitrich), Sha-ree Mah'ritsuh (Sari Maritza) George M. Ko-han' (George M. Cohan—last syllable as though you are about to say "hand"), Jimmy Doo-ran'-tee (Jimmy Durante).

"Next week we'll pronounce five more for you. Now watch me carefully if I mispronounce any from now on.

"We've been having a little fashion section for the ladies—and we will have yet tonight—but now let's please the men. Do you sports fans remember Tommy Ryan, three times ring champion thirty-five years ago? You know who Jack Johnson is, of course. And do you remember that great little jockey, Tod Sloane; that famous Giant out-fielder, Mike Donlin; great Tom Sharkey, of the ring; Billy Papke, middleweight champ a quarter century back, and Stanislaus Zbyszko, who wrestled many a match? Have you seen any of Jack Kearns' matches or watched Lou Magnolia referee a fight? Have you seen Mushy Callahan flash through a scrap? And do you follow the sport writing of Damon Runyon, Grantland Rice, Jack Lait, Westbrook Pegler, Paul Gallico and Ed. W. Smith? If you are a real sports addict, you know all these names. And now Paramount has them all in 'Madison Square Garden' with Jack Oakie, Warren Hymer, Marion Nixon, Thomas Meighan, Zasu Pitts and William Collier, Sr.

"Incidentally, a lot of you are often confused as to whether it is Zasu or Sazu Pitts, that little gal with the clever hands and the pathetic voice. We were confused until Zasu told us a way to keep it straight. She was named after two aunts. One was Liza and the other Susan. So, if you always remember Liza and Susan in thinking of her, you'll never call her anything else but Zasu. O. K.?

"And what can I tell you about your favorites? Let's see.

"A Detroit fan just sent Sylvia Sidney a Doberman-Pinscher dog. It arrived in time for her twenty-second birthday. She calls him 'Zim'—the real name is 'Zimena of Rhinegold.' We'll stick to 'Zim.'

"Miriam Hopkins once turned down an offer to be a screen bathing beauty because she wanted to be dramatic on the stage.

'Warren Hymer attended seventeen prep schools before he got to Yale—remember, I said, Yale!

"Your own Kate Smith always twists a hanky into a cone-shaped affair while singing before the microphone.

"And our favorite Vincent Lopez trained to be a priest.

"While to be shouted at by Tallulah Bankhead is a sign she likes you.

"If little Willie, whose mother makes him practice hard on the piano so that he'll be a great musician some day, is listening, I'll give him a break. Mama might choke me, but here goes.

"Being a great musician isn't always necessary to get famous in music. Why, Maurice Chevalier never had a singing lesson.

"And Bing Crosby and Kate Smith can't read a note of music.

"While neither George M. Cohan, who wrote 5,000 songs, nor Irving Berlin, one of the greatest, can play the piano.

"And that funny Harpo Marx, who plays so beautifully on a harp, doesn't know one note from another, and when he tunes his harp no other musician on earth can play it.

"And now the chatterer will chatter and the gossiper will gossip. Here are some little things about your favorite:

"Miriam Hopkins' hair has been classified by photographers. They claim it is white gold. . . . Kate Smith is only twenty-three, but she weighs 214. . . . Bing Crosby is back from that fishing trip—and, girls, he has a mustache! . . . Tallulah Bankhead is wearing bangs. . . . Jimmy Durante had May McAvoy to lunch yesterday. The shiek!"

"You have just listened to the Paramount Chatterbox, and I want to remind you to send in your questions at the first possible moment. These questions may be any and everything pertaining to the motion picture. Don't forget to sign your name and address plainly, because we want to identify these questions and answers over the air. Address them to the Paramount Chatterbox, care W. K. B. N. station, Youngstown, Ohio."

BEER AND PRETZELS WENT OVER BIG FOR MANAGER McDOWELL

Cast your eyes on the entrancing scene depicted in the accompanying illustration, which was Walter McDowell's way of tell ing the good citizens of his town that "Speak Easily" was on its way to Loew's Theatre, Louisville, Ky.

In return for advertising received through the stunt a local brewery supplied free beer and a bar from which to dispense the beverage. A local branch of a nationally known cheese company donated cheese and crackers and another firm helped create thirst by having on hand a big supply of old-fashioned pretzels. This lobby stunt proved so popular that it was held over during run of picture. The only cost to theatre was a small salary paid the bartender.

McDowell's display was particularly appropriate for this picture and he's passing along the suggestion to his fellow Club members who go in for this style of advance publicity. It went over big in his town and should go over big in any other town where a manager will take the trouble to put it over the same as did McDowell. Shoot along some more, "Mac"; your stuff is always well worth the space it requires.

FILL IN BLANK AND MAIL—THAT'S ALL!

W. HORACE REESE was recently promoted by Harry Hirsh, general manager of the Hirsh Amusement Co., Philadelphia, Pa., from an assistant managership at the Spruce Theatre to full charge of that house. We first received Reese's application for membership in this Club a few weeks ago, when he was still an assistant; now he's a full-fledged manager and a likewise Round Tabler. Horace has been hanging around theatres ever since he was a kid and, although he holds a projectionist's license, prefers to deal with the public. With both his boss, Harry Hirsh, and Horace to keep us informed on happenings down their way, the Hirsh houses ought to be well represented in this department.

DICK PARSON manages the Grand Theatre down South in Frankfort, Ky., and he's another one of the Sam Lee-John Elliott boys to become a member of this great organization of showmen—and still another Kentuckian to help bring his state up to fast approaching 100 per cent Club membership. We're glad to have you with us, Dick, and sincerely hope you intend to do your full share toward keeping this department the livest one of its kind in existence. Tell us what you're doing down in Frankfort in the show-selling line, so we can pass word along to your fellow Club members.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

A. P. SITTON is in charge of the Muse-U Theatre, Tularora, N. Mex., and since his application card does not mention his official capacity, we'll assume that he is both owner and manager. He's another new Round Tabler, fellows, so step up and give him the glad hand. He likes the idea of our Club and we have his word for it that he'll do his level best to send along some show-selling tips which will aid his fellow members. We'll be on the lookout for his next communication.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

HARRY GREENMAN has been managing director of the Fox Theatre, St. Louis, for the past three years, which almost amounts to a record for permanency these days. In fact, Harry went to the Fox when the house was opened, through appointment by Major John Zanft. Prior to this connection he held other important posts, among which were Loew's State, under Louis K. Sidney; the Aldine, Philadelphia; the Fox Theatre, Philadelphia; the Fox, Washington, D. C., and at one time was manager of the old Academy of Music, New York City. He started his career in showbusiness as an usher in a Buffalo, N. Y., house, under the guidance of Harold B. Franklin. Well, all we can state is that if this department doesn't carry some information on Greenman's activities, it will not be our fault. How about this, Harry?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

J. L. SLATER is another assistant manager to join the ranks of this large army of showmen and he has the job of helping M. T. Nayor manager the Washington St. Olympia Theatre, Boston, Mass. Prior to spending the past year at the Olympic, Slater held the assistant's job at the Scollay Square, another Boston house. His boss tells us he's a mighty likeable chap and knows showbusiness, so it probably won't be long before he'll be receiving one of the regular Club certificates. What's doing to the Washington Street, fellows? When George Laby was there we used to hear regularly. Let's go!

WALTER S. LONGFELLOW assists C. V. Wilson with management of the Ritz Theatre, Tipton, Ind., and according to the fine recommendation given him by his boss, this new recruit will prove a valuable asset to our organization. Walter is 28 years old and has been with the Ritz for the past five years. Prior to that he was with the Sells-Floto Circus. We're glad to have the opportunity to post his name up with the many other assistants already registered in this Club and will watch his career with interest. Tell your boss, Walter, to let us hear what's going on in show business at the Ritz. If he's too busy, why not take a shot at it yourself?

SAM SCHENKEL is the assistant manager of the Troy Theatre, Troy, N. Y., and his application for Club membership has been okayed by his boss, Vernon Reaver, who needs no introduction to many of our readers. Before going to the Troy, Sam held down the job of assistant at the Lincoln, another Troy house, and his present post is the result of a transfer. With a dyed-in-the-wool showman like Reaver to coach him in the art of show-selling, we predict a bright future for Sam'l. Between these two we should be able to get some news from Troy. What say, Vernon?

ORVILLE DEFFENBAUGH is the head art man for RKO Theatres out in Sid Dannenberg's Cleveland territory and he can rest assured that it's a great pleasure to include his name among new applicants for Club membership. Now we know whom to credit for all the fine art work that has been done for the RKO houses in his city and we'll hope to be able to present some examples of it in future issues of this section. We're indebted to Bert Henson for sending along Deffenbaugh's application and will hope to hear further from both.

GEORGE RODIS manages the Playhouse Theatre up in Canandaigua, N. Y., and we're taking this opportunity to introduce this new Round Tabler to his fellow Club members. It's been quite a long time since we've heard directly from his section of the state and many of his showman friends in this organization will be glad to hear what's going on up there. Shoot in some news, George, and we'll pass it along the line.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

C. W. McHALE is another new recruit for the great Round Table army and he hails from Clinton, Mass., where he manages the Strand Theatre. We are again indebted to Max Melincoff for sponsoring McHale's application for membership and hope the latter will prove as worthy a Round Tabler as the former. Anyway, he likes our outfit and proposes to help the good work along. Shoot in your ideas on show-selling, Mack, and we'll do the rest.

EDWIN PETTETT is the hard-working, go-getting assistant manager who helps H. T. Lashley, skipper of the Carolina Theatre, Greenville, S. C. When he isn't working at the Carolina, Pettett pursues his studies at Furman University, which he re-enters this fall as sophomore. He likes our department, thinks his boss is one of the best managers in the South and some day hopes to become as good a showman himself. We'll be shoutin' for you, Ed, so keep up the good work and you'll certainly make the grade. Tell Mr. Lashley hello for us and remind him that another one of those good show-selling stunts of his is due.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

MARK M. GATES is located over in Lawrence, Mass., Round Tabler Max Melincoff's old hangout, and it was none other than Max who proposed Gates for membership in this Club. Welcome to this ever-increasing gang of showmen, Mark, and let's hear all about what you are doing to keep the Warner going at the fast pace set by District Manager Max. We were mighty glad to hear of his recent and well deserved promotion. Please tender him our very best wishes for continued success when you meet.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

WILLIAM J. DEUBACH manages the Warner Theatre over in Worcester, Mass., and his application for Club membership is sponsored by Max Melincoff, well known Round Tabler who was recently promoted to a district managership in Mass. It's a pleasure to include Deubach's name on the Club roster and we're going to count upon him to help the good work along by sending in his share of show-selling ideas. Welcome to the gang, Bill, and tell Max hello for us when you see him again.

MRS. C. R. MITCHELL is the manager of the National Theatre down South in Barbourville, Ky., and she's another showwoman to become a member of this organization. Our Club already has a number of live-wire lady-managers enrolled and it is our hope that Mrs. Mitchell will do her full share toward keeping this department full of interesting ideas on the art of show-selling. We will look forward toward hearing from her again.

NOVELTY

Johnny Perkins (3)
Jersey City Loew's

"The Ton of Fun," "The Blues Chaser," "The Boy Who Makes You Forget Your Troubles,"—that's Johnny Perkins (and having seen him in many theatres throughout the country, this reviewer can safely say that this rotund comedian, who wears sweaters with X on the "spot where the body lies," is a show-stopper for any audience). Perkins works hard, not only in his own specialties but throughout the entire bill, introducing acts and "selling" them to the audience. He does a lot of clowning, kidding himself and his fatness, telling gags; he recites and sings comedy numbers, all of which go over well with the patrons.

Miss Ruth Petty, a beauteous brunette (with a voice that would make a big name for her in radio) sings "What Is It?" with Perkins the target of her question. Following this with "After I'm Gone," Ruth encores with "Say It Isn't So." Her delivery is unusual and the applause she received was enough to earn two encores. The young colored boy, Richard Montgomery, also in the act, does well with his singing of "Roses of Picardy," and "Two Hearts in Waltz Time," sung in German, to a great reception.

Johnny Perkins' act is excellent and is diversified enough to be surefire for any audience.

John & Mary Mason (3)
New York Palace

Opening with a thrilling acrobatic stunt bit on roller skates, John and Mary Mason prove an effective pair of entertainers. Later, with a clown who provides laughs, John offers to take anyone in the audience "for a ride," and his efforts with a fat woman prove highly amusing.

Four Warners
New Orleans State

This act, consisting of the father and mother and two very clever youngsters, was well liked. It opens with the father and mother doing a comedy number "On a Bicycle Built for Two," the children then doing it as the father and mother say they did it years ago. From then on the act is shared by the four, but the young ones get much the better hand, with the boy showing great talent in his dance work and the girl displaying showmanship.

Sylvia Clark
Buffalo Century

Strong applause greeted Miss Clark's comedy character mimicry, and her brief bits of song and dance also got applause. Bobby Kuhn, baritone and banjoist, proved an effective foil.

Ben Bernie's Mother Dead

Mrs. Anna Ancel, mother of Ben Bernie, orchestra leader, died early Tuesday morning at her home in New York. Hope for recovery had been abandoned last Friday, and all of her 12 children were at the bedside when she died. Ben Bernie flew to New York from Chicago last week to be with her.

RKO Bids for Business With Acts in Southwest

RKO is making a strong bid for increased patronage in the Southwest under the supervision of Charles W. Koerner, division director, with a new policy of "name" acts. Five acts of vaudeville have opened at the RKO Majestic in Dallas.

The shows will continue to San Antonio, Houston, New Orleans, Memphis. Variety will be the keynote of the programs with outstanding names featured. The shows at the Majestic form the only vaudeville in Dallas, the Publix Palace reporting no anticipated change in policy.

NOVELTY

Donatella Bros. & Carmen
New York Palace

The three brothers open as an instrumental trio using two accordions and a clarinet followed by a tap dance offered by two of them accompanied by Carmen, their sweet-looking sister. Carmen scores with an acrobatic dance and a contortion bit and the boys do an acrobatic tap dance. Carmen then introduces her father and mother, who play the shepherd's horn and hot tambourine respectively. An entertaining act for everybody.

Ryan and Noblette
Denver Orpheum

This couple pull some of the oldest of jokes for an opener and they are also old to the audience. The girl sings a couple of doleful songs, and is just the type that can do them properly. Some of their jokes are prolonged unduly.

Smith, Strong and Lee
Baltimore Hippodrome

These two men and women offer a "country" hokum comedy act, with music, songs and chatter, that registers well. The comedy costumes got laughs from the start.

Stanley and White
Detroit Hollywood

This looks like a Burns and Allen steal. Other appearances of this group show that they have some fair share of ability. What they lack here is material.

Boyce Coombs
San Francisco Golden Gate

This engaging chap, sometimes called the "American Prince of Wales," has a lot of funny English songs on tap and speedily gets into the good graces of his audience.

Miss Althoff with Shilling

Hattie Althoff, sister of the Althoff Sisters, vaudeville team, is now associated with the William Shilling office. Miss Althoff has 45 acts on her books.

COMEDY

The Weaver Brothers and Elviry with Home Folks (25)
Dallas Majestic

A headline act which does not get old, and this was the reason that the SRO sign was appropriate. Beginning with the introductions of the string sextet followed by the irrepressible Cicero, the "hand-spanked and farm-raised" son with all of his trick props, there were laughs aplenty for all. Whistling imitations, Cicero's trap-drumming, Elviry's chorus arrayed in their high shoes and house dresses and Elviry in her own inimitable way, all contributed high points to the act. Elviry's boy friend and his brother very smooth in their tapping, tumbling and acrobatics. With Elviry at the organ playing "In the Good Old Summer Time," five couples swung consecutively into a dance routine of a sort and in the midst of the homecoming the square dance was cut loose.

Harry Howard
New Orleans State

Coming in a barrage of noise, Harry Howard leaves in a gale of laughs from an audience which did not wish to let him go despite the running time of his act. Occasionally doing a single, often heckled by a stooge, introducing a dwarf who clowns with him and a beautiful young woman, he keeps his act running at top speed. Even the old one of the trick dog which won't do tricks seems funny under his direction, the dog actually achieving a yawn, which may have been accidental, but which, none the less, was funny. A fast moving comedy act, well worth seeing.

Al Bayes and Harvey Speck
Cincinnati Albee

These two boys have a routine of clever gags and a smooth method of salesmanship, without resorting to high pressure tactics. In fact, they work slowly and deliberately, and, although their act is framed along purely nonsensical lines, it is sure-fire material, and the audience is kept in a state of constant laughter. The boys also contribute a couple of soft shoe dances.

Barney Grant and Family (4)
Dallas Majestic

Barney, Ma, Pa and Cousin Clarence give a rural comedy act of much merit in which comic tumbling and acrobatics, music and rustic wit and actions combine to please the audience.

Sid Marion and Marie Duval
Detroit Michigan

The best part of this turn is Marie Duval's singing of "Kiss Me Again." Sid Marion's business is hazy hedging on Jack Pearl, dressed with questionable material not at all covered by cleverness.

Kirk and Lawrence
San Francisco Golden Gate

This pair offers an act of dummy horsemanship and keeps the audience in near-hysterics for fifteen minutes. It's tomfoolery, pure and simple, mostly simple, but is enjoyed.

ATTENTION EXHIBITORS BOOKING TALENT! This department aims to serve you in booking acts. We have on file the information on how to get in touch with any act reviewed. Write to Stage Attractions Department, Motion Picture Herald, 1790 Broadway, New York City.

REVIEWS OF ACTS FOR PICTURE THEATRES

DANCERS

Merriel Abbott Dancers (16)

Brooklyn Paramount

After being held over for two weeks at the New York Paramount, this world-famous troupe of dancers are featured in four spots on the current bill. Unquestionably this group is just about the best set of line-girls to play in Paramount's ace houses, and if audience reaction means anything, they should be permanently in these theatres. Their routines consist of an exceedingly well done acrobatic dance for an opener. Novelty is injected into the routine by individual numbers by the girls, each receiving good applause.

Their second appearance is with Dick Liebert, at the stage console, who accompanies four of them in a gracefully done high-kick and turn-over routine, followed by the remaining twelve who do a snappy rhythm dance that is brought to a climax by one of the first group doing an acrobatic turn-over for closing. Each turn received applause that exceeded that given to previous troupes of this kind.—E. D.

Bryant, Raines and Young

Detroit Fisher

This is an adagio act unusual in one respect: there are two girls and but one man in it. Their work is characterized by grace that is almost classic. A safe number for any audience.

Hal Le Roy

Philadelphia Fox

Tap dancer extraordinary of Ziegfeld's Follies, Hal LeRoy is rewarded with a burst of applause for 10 minutes' fast footwork. He responds with an encore that is even more of a success.

Dave Jones and Peggy Lee

Omaha Orpheum

Two girl assistants appear early in the act in a hop-skip number. Dave does a stair tap dance that goes over. Jones and Miss Lee then introduce what they call their ballroom-tap dance. The concluding chorus dance is weak.

The Three Bees

San Francisco Golden Gate

This trio of dancers displays six feet of rhythm and has mastered the art of coaxing applause with trick steps introduced at just the right time. They please and that's what counts.

Gates, Claire and Haines

Buffalo Century

Two men and a girl, they do a variation of the stair dance, with tap specialty solos and unison stepping.

Sophie Tucker at Grill

Sophie Tucker opened a two-weeks' engagement at the Paramount Grill, New York, last week. Miss Tucker recently appeared on the Loew's circuit.

Jolson to Broadcast

Al Jolson arrived in New York this week and signed an NBC broadcast series contract starting November 18, and another with theatrical interests for personal appearances in the east, both to commence after he has completed work on "Happy Go Lucky" for United Artists.

SLICES OF MELLIN

by BOBBY MELLIN

Art Kassell and his orchestra return to the Bismarck Hotel for the winter season. . . . Hal Kemp has been booked for the Blackhawk Cafe. . . . Bernie Cummins and band are at the Trianon for the season, with Wayne King returning to the Aragon Ballroom. . . . Ben Bernie again is officiating as master of ceremonies at his celebrated Celebrity Nights and master of the College Inn orchestra at the Sherman Hotel. . . . Mark Fisher and orchestra are succeeding Charlie Agnew at the Edgewater Beach Hotel starting October 15. . . . Earl Hines and his Dark Clouds are returning to the Southside palace of mirth, the Grand Terrace. . . . Frankie Masters continues to please both his radio audience and diners of the Terrace Garden. . . .

Clyde McCoy of "Sugar Blues" fame is doing a great business at the summer gardens of the Drake Hotel and from all reports will continue there for some time. . . . The Congress Hotel is opening a new room with Vincent Lopez and orchestra doing the honors. . . . Ted Weems is on a road trip for a few weeks, then will be at the theatres Forest Club, New Orleans, and very likely the Winter Gardens for the coming holiday season. . . . Deli Coon is at the Beachview Gardens. . . . Smiling Al Handler, at the Via Lago Cafe, is doing a very nice business. . . .

Jack Miles is conductor of one of the finest orchestras in the country, at the Granada Cafe. . . . Jack Russell is at the new Vanity Fair. . . . Jimmy Garrigan is returning to the Oriental Gardens. . . . Earl Smith and orchestra are doing marvelously well at the Canton Tea Garden. . . . Leo Terry, one of the foremost theatre organists, is now officiating at the console of radio station WIBO and, believe me when I tell you that his programs are the very best and give yourself an honest-to-goodness treat and listen in daily. . . .

Irene Taylor, featured soloist with Charlie Agnew's orchestra at the Edgewater Beach Hotel, has signed with Paul Whiteman and opens in New York October 18. Irene is a great performer and should take the big city by storm. Lots of luck, Irene. . . . Harry Sosnik, conductor of the Pennsoil program, one of the best radio programs on the ether, will start a new series of programs within a week.

ACROBATICS

Gaudsmith Bros.

New York Palace

These two clowns offer a routine of acrobatics, assisted by two well-trained dogs who help in performance of the clowns, and gain laughs. A rousing finale, in which the men and dogs pyramid themselves, closes a well-received act.—H. P.

Arthur LeFleur & Co.

New Orleans State

This is an acrobatic act which is relieved by a girl doing some conventional and not too well executed dance steps. The man, however, is a first-class ring man and he does a twirling act, hanging by the teeth, that is remarkable. The house gave him a heavy hand.

SINGERS

Tastyeast Jesters (3)

New York Palace

The Tastyeast Jesters, Vim, Vigor and Pep of radio fame, offer a very pleasing twelve minutes of harmony including hillbilly, comedy and hot songs. Their individual abilities in imitating musical instruments, is well appreciated by the audience while their bits of comedy, often injected into their routine, click.—H. P.

Frank Prince

Detroit Michigan

Prince has a good voice of the crooning order, but for one so obviously created to attract feminine eyes, he is dangerously free with emotional display. The men of his audience met his rendition of "The Night When Love Was Born" with an attitude bordering on laughter.

Rae Samuels (3)

Baltimore Century

Miss Samuels has a swiftly moving act with a cycle of songs, comedy chatter and mannerisms with "B" Walker doing piano accompaniment and Eleanor Whitney some speedy stepping. Miss Samuels' songs include "Give Me a Man Like That," and one about old and new married life with a monologue about real estate agents selling suburban lots.

Jones Prebble

Buffalo Century

A shy, juvenile appearance builds up audience appeal for this youthful baritone, who got a big hand with "Lullaby of My Dreams" and "Dancing Together Again."

SONG AND DANCE

Upham and Sidare (5)

Brooklyn Gates

A youthful group of versatile performers offer a miniature musical turn and feature singing and dancing. The act opens with a typical musical number, sung by Jack Lenny, who, at the finish, goes into a well done eccentric rhythm dance. A smiling, bedimpled blonde, one of the O'Connor Sisters, offers a piano accompaniment throughout the act, and for her share offers harmony singing with her sister, right after the opening and in the finale. Miss Jean Upham presents a toe and rhythm routine that earns good applause, as does Hal Sidare for his "drunk" characterization and his eccentric acrobatic dance.

Closing with a "hot" song by the O'Connor Sisters and spectacular dancing by the rest of the company, the act gained a noteworthy reception.—E. D.

Mastbaum Reopens

The Mastbaum theatre, Philadelphia, leading house in the Stanley-Warner Circuit, reopened last week. The house has been closed since June 30. Headliners were Harry Richman, Benny Davis and his gang, and Dorothy Jordan.

"Panther Woman" in Person

Kathleen Burke, who won the featured role in "Island of Lost Souls" as the "Panther Woman," will leave Hollywood for a tour of important cities upon the completion, some time in November, of her current assignment.

STAGE ATTRACTIONS

ORGAN SOLOS

ROSA RIO and BOB HAMILTON (Brooklyn Fox), have started things off well at the twin consoles with an organ concert that amply proved their versatility. Their program opened with Miss Rio playing her own theme song, "Rosetta," followed by Bob Hamilton's original fanfare. The title of the concert is "Moments Musicale," and as their first number (together) they offer "Pomp and Circumstance," followed by Hamilton's solo of "Sweet Mystery of Life," played first in regular tempo and then in a fast, rhythmic time. Miss Rio with spot on her for her solo spot, clicked with that hot number, "Tiger Rag." Both artists were well received. The next bit on their program was "Something in the Night," with Hamilton playing the melody and Miss Rio a specially arranged accompaniment. The stirring strains of "William Tell Overture" was played by the team for an effective finale.

HERBIE KOCH (Shea's Buffalo, Buffalo), responding to popular demand for a songfest and to requests for oldtime favorites, called his console session this week "Long Long Ago" and, exhorting the audience through the microphone to do their best, had them singing lustily "Let Me Call You Sweetheart," "Let the Rest of the World Go By," "Shine On, Harvest Moon," "In the Shade of the Old Apple Tree" and "Put on Your Old Gray Bonnet." Suitable screen backgrounds were used, those for "The Old Apple Tree" being especially effective in their reminiscence of the old "illustrated song." Original and strictly modern words for "Let the Rest of the World Go By" brought the act to a rousing climax.

DURAND SAULS (Miami Capitol). This 22-year-old chap has gained himself a lot of popularity since he started here, both for his theatre work and his "slumber hour" programs every night at 11:30. One of his recent and typical programs opened with two favorite song hits from Broadway shows, "Of Thee I Sing" and "Let's Have Another Cup of Coffee." Next came song slides of "Somebody Loves You," for community singing, the theme song, "The Old Refrain," used in the "Slumber Hour." This number won applause in the middle of the program. More audience songs were "Good Night Sweetheart," a picture puzzle group of slides of "By the Old Mill Stream" and "Night Love Was Born," which completed the community singing section. The surprise feature of the program was his own arrangement of "Chloe," played in concert style and built up to a big finale. As a rule his "hand" runs into the feature picture which follows. The foregoing program was no exception.

UP AND DOWN THE ALLEY

Harold Ramsey, who was loaned by Publix to Mr. Sidney Bernstein, of Bernstein Theatres, England, last year, is back and says that business was good in the New Granada, London, where he was featured organist. . . .

Often Ramsey flew to Paris on a Sunday morning and played an organ concert at the Gaumont Palace, for Radio-Paris. Ramsay is now in Los Angeles renewing acquaintance with his wife (who is in motion pictures) and it is rumored will direct an orchestra for Paramount in one of its houses on the West Coast. . . .

Milton Kae, director of the destinies of Kae Studios, formerly of 125 W. 45th Street, is now in his new studios at 112 West 44th, where he will continue the manufacture of organ novelties, slides and photographs. . . . Verne Buck, popular Chicago music director and master of ceremonies, is back at the Sheridan with a 16-piece band. . . . Verne was responsible for the success of the Sheridan four years ago and every one is looking to him to bring it back. . . .

Milton Slosser has just signed another year's contract to remain at the console at the Ambassador, St. Louis. . . . This makes thirteen years in the city of "Blues" for Milt. . . . Eight of them at the Missouri and five at the Ambassador. . . . Milt tells me that he has decided to stay in St. Louis until Kate Smith gets that moon over the mountain. . . . This go-getting young fellow also plays over KMOX, "The Voice of St. Louis," every Wednesday night from 11:45 until 12:15. . . .

ED. DAWSON.

Ted Mack Organizes Band

Ted Mack, formerly master of ceremonies at the Denver theatre, Denver, and at the New York Paramount and other Publix houses in the East and South, has organized a fourteen-piece band and is playing at the Casanova roo in the Brown Palace hotel in Denver. On the opening night all records were broken for a new orchestra, over 400 being turned away. The group is broadcasting over the NBC network weekly and over KOA several times a week. Fan mail indicate it one of the popular programs on the air.

Theatre Stages Song Contest

More than 150 songs were written by San Diego composers in a recent song contest staged by the Fox theatre and a local newspaper. The audience judged the winners of the best ballad and waltz. Ron and Don, organist team, played the various compositions as part of their act.

WJW to Akron, O.

Radio station WJW, which has been operating at Mansfield, O., for the past several years, has been moved to Akron, O.

Added to CBS Network

Station WICC, Bridgeport, Conn., has been added to the 90-station network of the Columbia Broadcasting System. The station was established in 1926.

OVERTURES

LOU BREESE (New Orleans Saenger) and the pit orchestra return together to this theatre, and the reception given both indicates the public's delight. Breese reveals himself once more as a finished musician, a banjo virtuoso and a showman, and his work has added polish. The overture opened with an arrangement of "Black Eyes," treating the melody in different styles, winding up with one of those quasi-dramatic endings, in which were threaded the 1812 overture, "Marche Slav," and the opening chords of Rachmaninoff's C sharp minor piano prelude. The second number reintroduced Breese as a banjoist. It was an imitation of a music box playing "I Want to Be Happy" and scored applause which Breese interrupted by going into his banjo version of an abridged second "Hungarian Rhapsody." Breese's ease in strumming the difficult Liszt figures probably made the audience think this was simple, but it is doubtful whether there are many banjoists who can play it. He cuts the applause short once more by leading off into the band novelty, "Shout, Sister, Shout," in which the old favorites are introduced. William Bolman, trumpeter, received a cordial welcome with his hot chorus; M. Allesandra's Italian bit went over; Godfrey Hirsch and Et Montana's also were well received.

LOU FORBES (Detroit Michigan), with the overture to the opera "Martha," brings out the quality of the string section of the orchestra. His second effort is "Tom Thumb's Drum," featuring the drummer in novel bits and Lee Mason with vocal interpolations. The various sections of the orchestra are brought out in momentary spots to contrast with the drummer's hectic activities. Forbes turned up the usual blast of applause.

WALT ROESNER (San Francisco Fox) and the Fox Grand Orchestra return to the realm of the classics, following a flirtation with jazz. This week they offer selections from the works of Saint Saens, including excerpts from "The Swan," "Danse Macabre" and "Samson and Delila." The offering is so well done that the soloists are called upon to take bows. Fox theatre audiences show a decided preference for music of the finer type and there have been many requests for a return to the classics.

Lowry at St. Louis

Eddie Lowry, master of ceremonies, has returned to the Ambassador theatre, St. Louis, under a week to week contract.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1932, unless otherwise specified.

Frank Young of United Artists claims, among other distinctions, the one of having on file the oldest—or earliest—copy of the HERALD. As we had heard similar claims by a number of other folk along the Row we invited Frank to produce the copy for inspection. After much searching among the family souvenirs Frank pleaded that the particular copy he had in mind had been temporarily mislaid. He was sure to find it and just recalled a spot in the bookcase that he had forgotten to dig into. In the meantime—and until he makes further search for the missing copy—and until some one produces an older issue—Mr. Young enters a copy of Exhibitors Herald & Motography dated May 3, 1919, as the oldest copy of this publication held by any Film Row person.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 147.—(A) In examining a diagrammatic illustration of the action of alternating current (as per page 16, vol. 1, of your Bluebook) what do the various lines represent? (B) Explain the action of the generation of one cycle of alternating current. By that it is meant, tell us at what voltage it starts, how the voltage rises, how long it takes for the voltage to reach maximum, what is happening to the amperage at the same time, and what happens after voltage has reached its peak. (C) Explain why alternating current reverses its direction each cycle.

Answer to Question No. 139

Bluebook School Question No. 139 was: (A) Tell us your idea of what basic knowledge is necessary to an understanding of electrical action. (B) Just why is it essential that the projectionist have a good basic knowledge of electrical action; also what will certainly be the result if he has not such basic knowledge?

I am gratified at the number of excellent replies to these queries. It has been difficult to decide which of them best suits the needs of publication, but I believe the one finally decided upon best serves the purpose of this school, everything considered. The following had answers that were excellent:

G. E. Doe, T. Van Vaulkenburg, C. Rau and S. Evans, Lester Borst, S. G. Williams, R. J. Arntson, D. Goldberg, A. Zerach and Nic Granby, Bill Doe, J. Wentworth, O. L. Darls, J. Hendershot and R. D. Konley, and T. L. Jansen, B. D. Danielson, M. Mooney, H. L. Tomlinson and R. Spaulding (the last three answering as a unit).

The following made acceptable answers: R. J. Arnston, S. Carroll, A. Breston, B. Diglah and P. Jackson, L. M. Goodrah, D. Holmes, G. L. Gann and H. M. Jackson, L. D. Simmons, L. Mason, B. V. Donaldson, F. Harrlor and N. F. Kindom, S. True and L. M. Norris, J. Ahrenson, T. R. Peters, S. D. Love and W. Love, R. Singleton, S. Howard and L. D. Kurts, A. Bailey, L. V. Kobbe and F. Davis, J. Daniels, L. Michaelson and R. T. Thompson, D. Holler and P. H. Howe, B. Wheeler, M. L. Crakley and T. G. Henderson, T. McGruder, H. D. Palmer and B. L. Palmer, G. Tinlin, P. L. Davis, A. Johnson, L. Averson, P. K. Daniels, L. B. Bryant and D. L. Monehan, J. L. and F. Hanson, D. K. Ormie and J. B. Buckley, M. H. Lonberger, D. Lambert and T. Davis, D. Emmerson, D. Anderson, F. D. Tomlinson and G. L. Priner, C. Peters, L. Ross, N. McGuire, J. Billings, M. R. Garvin and L. D. Raffray, A. L. DeMar, D. Little and J. Rathburn, G. Farmann and H. Kuri, C. Ray and T. Taylor, F. B. Ronder, O. L. Deverney, R. Lobe and L. B. Heitner, D. R. Kleinberg, F. Ferguson, T. Murphy, A. Geibto and T. Larson, F. F. Franks, D. V. Peterson and L. H. Grimes, P. L. Jensen, J. Williams, D. Andrews, B. Walker, S. G. Williams, T. H. Bergher, F. Ferguson and G. Loit, P. T. Levin and D. Tuttle, P. O'Brien and J. R. Jameson, and B. L. Richards.

As to Section A, on the whole I believe Brother S. G. Williams has put matters most acceptably for publication. He says, "The basic knowlegde necessary to a competent understanding of electrical action would be in our opinion, first, an understanding of what is called 'polarity' and the fact that a wire attached to a battery or dynamo has an affinity for electricl conductors attached to the opposite pole of the same battery or dynamo, and for nothing else. This means that electric current seeks to return to the opposite polarity of its source. In so doing it will of course seek the path of least resistance, and because of this latter fact, unless the two polarities be well and completely insulated from each other, it (the current) may seek some other path to opposite polarity than the one it is designed it shall take, such as, for example, the earth, metal pipes, etc.

"With the foregoing as a basis, we believe the next most important bit of fundamental knowledge is a thorough understanding of Ohm's law, to the end that electrical calculations may be made, which are necessary to intelligent work.

"The third item of necessary fundamental knowledge is the electric generator, the functioning of each part of which should be understood. In studying the electric generator (dynamo, not battery) it is essential that the projectionist learn the basic fact that the machine depends for its action upon the fact that when an electric conductor is moved in a magnetic field in such manner that the lines of magnetic force will be cut, a current will be generated in the conductor so moved, provided of course it be connected to an electric circuit. Such understanding will of course include an understanding of magnetic action and the function of each part of the generator, as well as the various methods of increasing the output and the controlling of the current, which involves a study of the various wire systems and current using and controlling devices. It is also essential that the student understand the various currents and how they are produced, such as a.c., d.c., single-, two- and three-phase current.

"It is also necessary in these days of sound apparatus, that (I refer now directly to the projectionist) there be a thorough understanding of batteries, both as generators and as storage reservoirs, of transformers, choke coils, resistance and its various effects, induction, electrical condensers and motors and their action, a.c. and d.c.

I think I shall have to print the answers of both S. G. Williams and Rau and Evans on Section D. Williams says, "The projectionist of today must have a good basic knowledge of electricity if he expects to be able to understand all the complex electrical devices under his immediate care and control. Motors, generators, arc lamps, storage batteries, dry batteries, charging panels, rectifiers, transformers, rheostats, potentiometers, condensers, vacuum tubes, photoelectric cell and disc record sound pickups are some of them, not forgetting voltmeters and ammeters and the complicated wiring system under his care.

"An understanding of the theory of molecules, atoms and electrons is necessary to the understanding of the action of vacuum tubes and photo-electric cells. If the projectionist hasn't a good understanding of all these various things, the excellence of the functioning of the equiment will not be what it should be."

Rau and Evans say, "It is essential that the projectionist have a good basic knowledge of electrical action, because if he does not he will be unable to cope with the various problems which arise suddenly in the course of his work. Also, some of the various troubles met with in the electrical equipment may be prevented if the projectionist knows that undesired results are bound to occur if faults are allowed to remain uncorrected. However, when a fault almost impossible to detect beforehand occurs, if the projectionist is well grounded in the fundamentals of electricity he will most certainly be in a position to find the cause in a much shorter time than if he had to depend on trial and error to get to the root of the trouble."

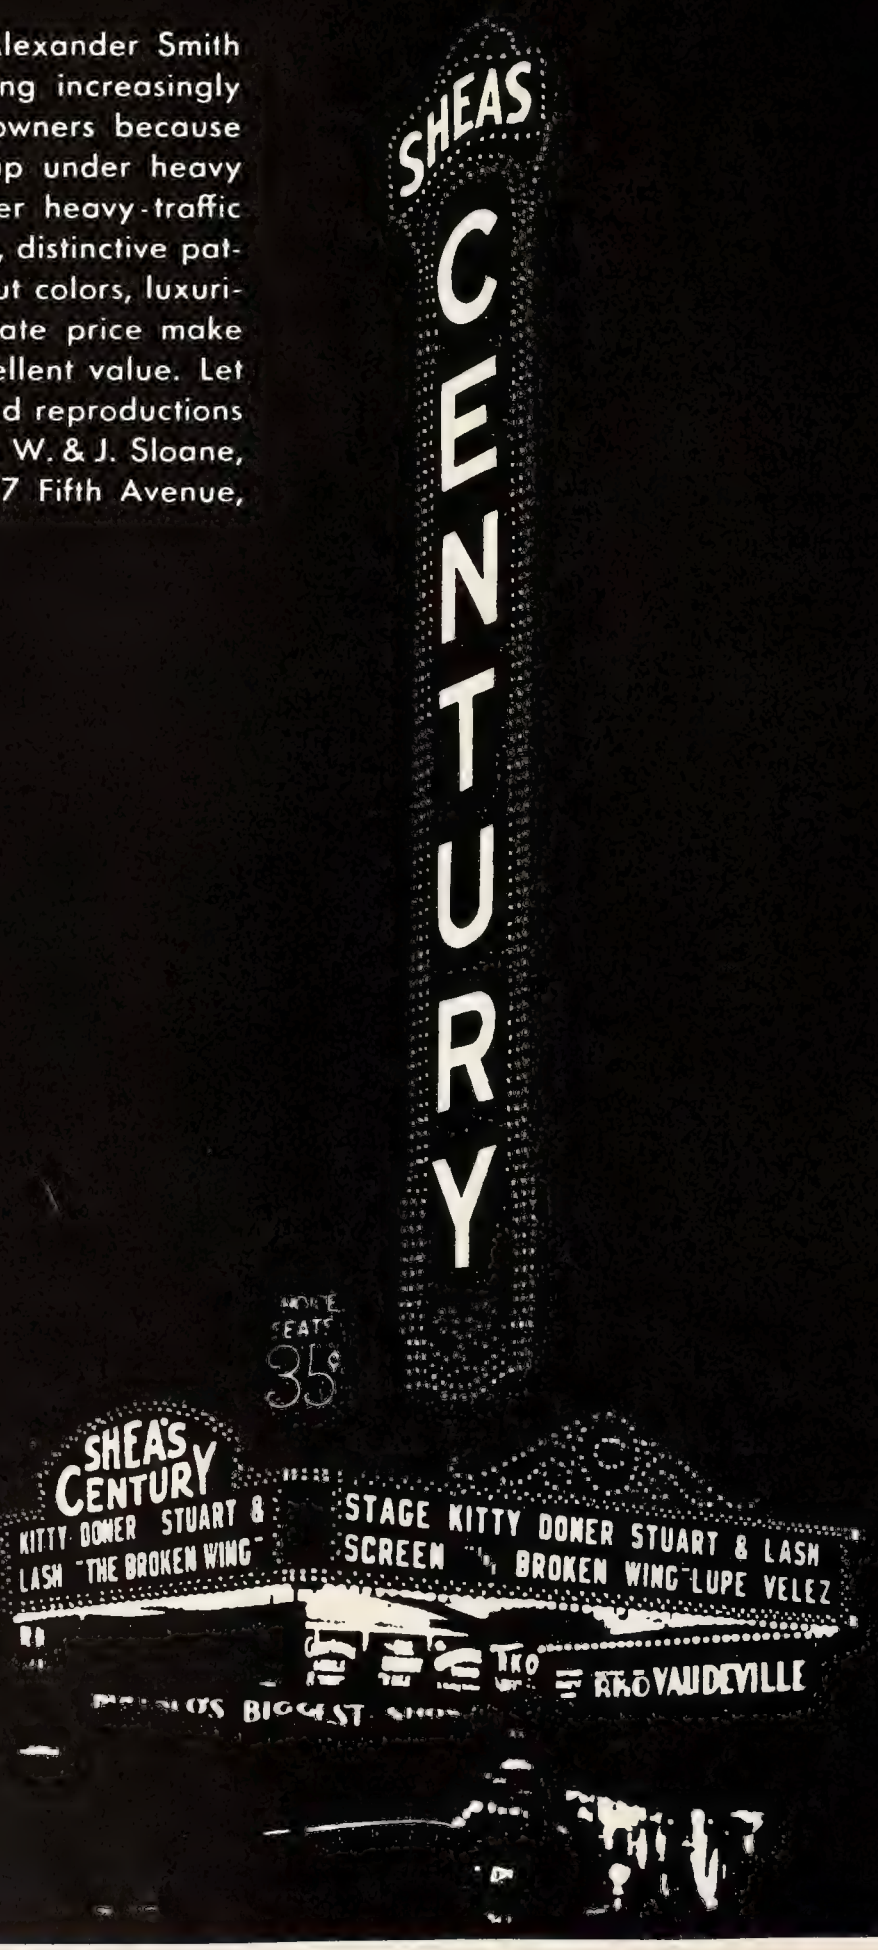
WITH WHICH IS COMBINED "THE SHOWMAN"



THEY'RE building theatres in England, and doing it radically as well as conservatively, according to Mr. Charman in this issue. . . . And rather in connection with the talk about the renaissance of the organ, Mr. Ted Crawford offers some ideas. . . . But unexpected was the controversy that Mr. Schlanger made out of Mr. Aimer's discussion of his own type of Reversed Floor.

THEATRES AS BUSINESS—FIGURATIVELY SPEAKING

an editorial

¶ Right at the outset—in considering the stature and status of the motion picture theatre business—one ponders the significance of 80 million patrons a week. Then in the United States alone there are operating something like 15,000 theatres of the better type, equipped to present modern audible screen entertainment. Thus before one gets started to measure the motion picture theatre business, one is confronted with some figures that are fairly ruinous to ordinary powers of perspective. And yet, in the final summation, this is a business of relatively small figures, of factors as simple as those confronting the corner groceryman.

It is a business of the individual retailer knowing his community, keying his shop and his service to it, and putting on sale the goods it wants in a manner that suggests that those goods are wanted. Immense superstructures of organization can be erected upon this relatively simple procedure, but after all the super-superintendents have filed their reports, and after the char woman has cleaned up the glasses, the ash trays and the scribblings on bits of paper, the real business of the motion picture business has been transacted by those who can think in terms of the individual theatre in a specific community.

¶ Having been stimulated in the first place by figures, we still seem to be fascinated by them. Perhaps because we find them so timely. Reflecting on the first figure, we are directed to remark that 80 million people can't be wrong. When a business has 80 million customers a week in a single country, it must be a pretty good business.

Three or four score million customers each week for 15,000 theatres gives us at least some idea of what the motion picture theatre business means to the economic (as well as the sociological) structure of this nation. More than 225,000 persons are employed in this business directly; indirectly, who knows how many? There are, for example, more than 300 kinds of equipment and supplies manufactured for the motion picture theatre. These are made in factories with an aggregate payroll of staggering stature.

A theatre of from 1,000 to 2,000 seats expends more than $1,500 a year merely for supplies and general routine maintenance, not including replacements. A theatre of some pretentions pays to equipment and supply manufacturers and dealers around $20,000 a year for supplies alone, while replacements boost this amount to around $35,000. And recalling that there are 16,000 modern, wired theatres in just the United States and Canada, our interest in figures is well repaid, for now we are dealing in totals of tens of millions.

And the figure mounts as one reflects upon the increase in the number of the more modern, finer theatres, with their extended requirements. Even in 1931, a year in which theatre building was summarily brought to a comparative halt for the time being, over 600 new houses were erected. The coming year and its successor—unless the present signs of the upturn are incredibly deceiving—should not present a construction figure so low as that.

¶ But even were not another theatre to be added, the yearly maintenance and replacement bill of the theatres in North America alone would continue to amount to tens of millions of dollars. The normal total has probably been markedly reduced during the last year, but the reduction represents merely emergency measures and not normal, necessary maintenance policy. Although no composite rate is feasible with respect to such property, motion picture theatre equipment has an average depreciation rate of from 15% to 20% annually, in some cases (as with carpets, rugs, etc.) as high as 33 1/3%.

All this contributes to a picture of impressive magnitude. Happily, this impressiveness is not based on mere size, satisfying nothing more than a megalomania. Its significance lies in what the motion picture theatre business offers to the thousands who have chosen it as their life's work, and to the scores of companies and their workers who fabricate the things the motion picture theatre uses.

The starkly plain auditorium of the Regent at Paignton.

TWO EXTREMES IN BRITISH DESIGN

A pair of new theatres in Provincial England, the one severely modern in its simplicity, the other hyper-elegant

By BERNARD
CHARMAN

A MAN'S FIRST creative job of work is a matter of deep interest not only to himself, but also to his professional colleagues. And it so happens that the new little cinema at Paignton, in England, is also otherwise worth placing on record. The Regent is the first complete theatre designed by Leslie H. Kemp, a young architect who was at one time in the drawing office of the Gaumont British circuit, and who has supervised a great deal of reconstruction work. In significant contrast to the Regent is the lavish Broadway at Eccles.

The modern design of the Regent, both inside and out, suggests that Mr. Kemp is an acquisition to the ranks of British cinema designers. Both auditorium and external facade are rendered striking by the simple manner of their treatment, and are a creditable development of the modern Continental manner to a hall of modest proportions.

Paignton is one of many small seaside resorts along the South Coast of England, and is a town whose demands in the direction of motion picture entertainment are naturally moderate. Its growing popularity, however, has led to the expansion of the town, and the demand was created for a theatre of the calibre of the Regent.

There are 800 seats in the theatre, which represents a considerable constructional feat, in that it was erected in 18 weeks—two weeks under contract time. The whole scheme of design has been carried out on modern lines, and unnecessary fenestration has been avoided.

Wall treatment throughout the vestibule, staircase and auditorium is in plastic paint of various designs. The general color scheme is cream and gold, which also includes the theatre furnishings and fittings, carpets and rubber flooring. Carpets are laid throughout the auditorium and circle.

The proscenium opening is 28 feet wide, with a stage 12 feet deep. Neither safety curtain nor dressing rooms, however, have been provided.

A decidedly novel form of internal lighting has been adopted, comprising two fittings, 42 feet long by 2½ feet wide, of continuous unbreakable glass, these extending longitudinally along the ceiling. The whole interior lighting is controlled by dimmers, and includes the usual four-color foot lights, side wall features and the main ceiling fittings.

The exterior of the Regent—typically Continental in its modernism.

Ventilation is by the plenum system, by which means treated air is blown into the auditorium at six different positions, and the whole atmosphere internally is changed six times every hour.

The projection room is equipped with Ernemann III machines on Western Electric sound bases, with Zeiss 75 high intensity lamps, automatic changeover, switchboard and resistances. Secondary lighting for the house is by Keepalite equipment.

The external walls of the Regent are treated in white concrete toned cream, in order to obtain good reflection from floodlights installed over the marquee. The under side of this canopy is illuminated by three neon tubes, which are fixed to a stepped soffit and finished in gold cellulose. On the angle of the facade the name "Regent" is spelled out in letters 2½ feet high, all outlined in green neon.

THE BROADWAY theatre at Eccles, which is an off-shoot of Manchester, may be pointedly introduced by the architect's remark, "The people want the glamor and the glitter of the cinema theatres—and so they get them." The author of this apology is Joseph Gomersall, a prominent British theatre architect who holds the distinction of having designed five big motion picture theatres before reaching the age of 30. The Broadway represents the latest achievement in theatre construction in the north of England, and is an excellent example of the sumptuousness provided as a contrast to the drabness of the ordinary life of the worker in this dense industrial area. Over £55,000 (call it $250,000) has been spent on its construction and equipment, which, according to British standards, is plenty.

Eccles is a prosperous borough some five miles from the center of Manchester, and the Broadway has been built in the market place toward which all the main roads converge. In order that some uniformity in design and materials could be obtained, the main elevation has been surfaced with sand-faced bricks and terra cotta. The terra cotta is indistinguishable from Portland stone at a distance, and although finished a full glaze, it has a rough surface.

The new adjoining buildings are all faced with brick and Portland stone. The design of the elevation is modern in character, but has been restrained so as not to clash with the Georgian character of the adjoining buildings. At night the whole of the elevation is floodlighted. The marquee has a chromium steel soffit arranged in coffered panels. From the center of each is suspended a lighting unit of opaque glass and chromium-plated metal. The fascia is of opal glass and interchangeable cast metal lettering.

The vestibule is panelled in oak and finished in polished art green. A new feature has been introduced in the use of gold powder, which is worked into the grain of the wood prior to the final rubbing down.

The foyer is commanding in its size and appointments, the decorations, furnishings and lighting being worthy of a London West End theatre. The pay-boxes are situated in the foyer.

Over the vestibule and foyer is a restaurant having accommodation for 300 people. On one side is a large orchestra platform overlooking the main staircase. The background is of plate glass, thus enabling theatre patrons to have an extensive view of the café on entering and leaving the theatre.

The auditorium is arranged in two tiers —stalls and circle. The seating capacity is 2,100. All the seats are 20 inches wide. Carpet has been laid throughout the whole of the auditorium—in fact, everywhere in the theatre, with the exception of the entrance vestibule.

A stage large enough to accommodate any touring company has been provided, the policy of the theatre being a composite show of organ and orchestra music, variety and films. The orchestra and organ are arranged on separate electrically operated lifts, which are raised to stage level during interludes.

The fibrous plaster and decorations throughout are modern in character. In the decorations a new departure has been made, the general treatment being a combination of textured plastic paint, finished with metallic etching in silver, gold and bronze on a background of striking but restful colors and stencil ornament. (The combination of plastic paint and stencil work is a particularly pleasing and new treatment that certainly seems worthy of development.)

A striking feature of the Broadway is the lighting, which is designed on entirely new lines and forms part of the architectural lay-out of the building. Generally speaking, four-color lighting is used, and by means of special troughs and control apparatus, the proscenium architrave and the coved ceiling above can be covered with light of any intensity and color, the illumination being particularly even over the whole of the area.

The auditorium center ceiling is illuminated by two large grilles floodlighted in pale blue to give the illusion of peering through the openwork of the grilles to a blue sky above. Over the circle and under the balcony cornices have been constructed to accommodate a new form of trough, which projects deep amber lighting on to a gold-textured surface, giving the effect of a glowing sunset. On the side walls lighting is provided from a niche which has been so designed and decorated as to give an illusion of infinite depth.

The Broadway's electrical control equipment of the stage consists of four-color circuits arranged for control of a central switchboard, which contains 28 separate dimming circuits. The equipment has been designed to give the public something new in the form of color lighting on draperies.

The unit organ is situated in two specially constructed organ chambers, one above the other, on the right-hand side of the proscenium. The sound passes into the auditorium through louvres electrically controlling the volume.

Alongside the theatre free parking facilities are provided for patrons coming in motor cars. The car park attendant is a fully qualified motor mechanic and is available for minor repairs should the necessity for them ever arise.

Upper view: The auditorium of the Broadway, looking toward the proscenium from the balcony. The pattern is semi-classical, worked out in modern plastic paint and metallic etchings.

Lower view: The facade of the Broadway, faced with brick and Portland stone. The marquee has a soffit of chromium steel coffered panels, while the fascia is composed of opal glass.

THE ORGAN SOLO AS AN INTERLUDE

By TED CRAWFORD

As a featured performer sees the new function of the organ solo in the motion picture theatre, and the technique that serves it

SHORTLY AFTER talking pictures were inaugurated at Loew's theatre in Richmond, Va., where I was the organist playing accompaniments to the screen program, a new manager was installed. And I was fired.

Was the cause talking pictures? Or the new manager? Or me?

Without a dime, and sufficiently sour on my profession to kick all the pretty ornament off the console, I was in what you might call at least a predicament. Ultimately I landed in San Francisco, my home town. And there I learned that the loss of my job in Richmond was to be blamed principally on me.

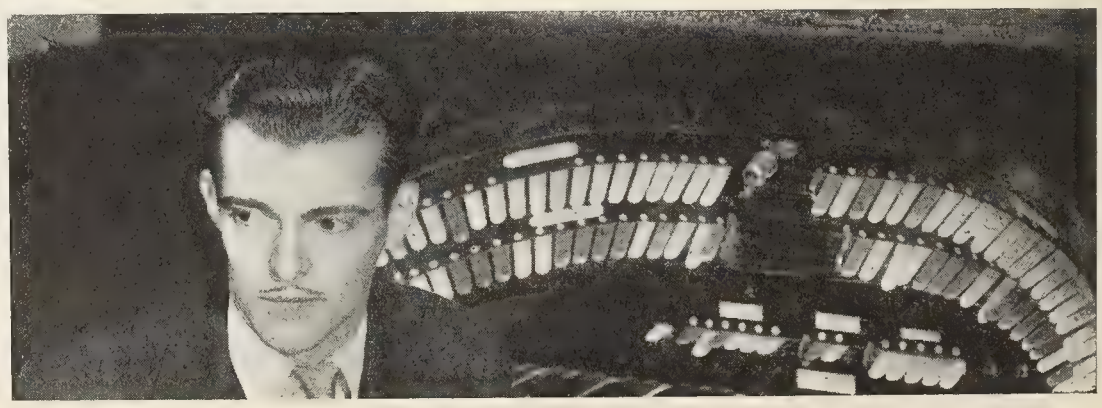
Getting relief work at the Paramount in San Francisco, I was given the opportunity of associating professionally with Harold Ramsay. A long paragraph of praise is due this fine artist, but it would not be appropriate here. I learned from him that it was possible to fit organ music into any theatre program with definite benefit to the whole bill. It became my conviction then that it all depends on how it is done, and I can observe now, after the last two or three years of intensive concentration on the sound screen in the building of programs, that the truth of this is more generally recognized.

As the technique of the organ solo has developed (because it has had to in order to reassert the value of the organ to the theatre), motion picture programs have been given a more sustained appeal. By this I mean, organ solos have shown their ability to give the program warmth, color, flourish and intimacy—all essential theatrical things—while the screen, thoroughly effective though it is as a medium of dramatic representation, tends to be rather cold and distant. These qualities are probably of no importance if they are not permitted to characterize the general atmosphere of the theatre, and the organ solo should be designed to have the necessary counter-effect.

I should not regard it as necessary, perhaps, to preface what I am about to say with a reminder that my ideas may not work for other organists in their specific situations. But I have reason to believe that the things I have learned are basically sound, and therefore they have, within certain limitations, a rather general application. In Albuquerque, New Mexico (where I am located at present), routine is one thing; in New York or Des Moines it is something else. But I think there are only a few special situations in which one should not invariably apply the rule: Play to their hearts! Difficult music may appeal to some heads. The merely spectacular solo may rouse all hands to mighty applause. But neither type may deeply satisfy. Playing to their hearts is bound to do so.

The organist should never forget that the design of the solo is intimately dependent for proper effect upon the character of the screen program. Is there to be a Laurel and Hardy comedy? Is the feature to be ultra-sophisticated? In other words, what kind of people are going to be in the audience, and what will be their mood, as represented by the appeal that brought them to the theatre? In some measure, of course, one can attempt a contrast, using a comic community sing with a tragic feature. But this method must be applied with care. Your audience may not be equal to the emotional demands your parodies impose upon it.

But perhaps it would be in the interests of clarity to refer to actual practices, and to this end allow me to describe recent selections of mine. The first four days of the week the screen feature was Laurel and Hardy in "Pack Up Your Troubles." The organ solo was a community sing entitled "Local Boy Makes Good," consisting in poking fun at local celebrities who started from the bottom, with lots of tongue-twisters and plenty of new tunes. Then on the last three days the feature was "Divorce in the Family." For the organ solo I used "Liebestraume"—nothing else—played in a blue spot.



It is important to note that the community sing got the bigger hand of that week. Was it therefore more effective than the other? By no means! The organist should remember that boisterous applause does not necessarily follow the enjoyment of music which makes people sit restfully back, perhaps with eyes closed, listening quietly, being deeply satisfied. I didn't expect clattering applause from the "Liebestraume." But I did expect letters. And I got 'em!

MANAGERS might well watch their organists to see if they are dressing properly for their work. Is the theatre located down by the gas works? Or is it in a fashionable suburb? I, myself, wear sport clothes usually, because the location permits them and I look best in this type of apparel. However, when I do an overture with the band, then on goes the tuxedo. Ignoring any exceptions, I should say that for an exclusive district, a tuxedo is the more proper, while for an ordinary section, a dark business suit is indicated. And when selecting colors, remember the effect of the spot! As for the idea that the organist should always wear a tuxedo, especially in a deluxe house, it is sheer rubbish. Tuxedos can easily work against the whole effect of warmth and intimacy desired. The organist should dress primarily to make people want to like him the minute the spot hits him. The right clothes are the ones that will do just that.

If you are an organist, did you ever stop to think how short is the time allotted you before your audience? The pictures get nearly two hours. You get from ten to 15 minutes. During that time you have to sell everything you've got on that organ. Even if that is only a flute, vox, tuba and string—show it to those people out front! Thus if you're doing a community sing for the solo, give them a light classic on the trailers. And don't play a community sing all in one combination. Color it! Even kinuras get tired and wear out. And those

THE JEWEL BOX: A FINE THEATRE IN MINIATURE

ONE OF the most unusual theatres in America has been opened on Seattle's Film Row. It is called the Jewel Box Preview theatre, and was created by the B. F. Shearer Company for use by film distributors, exhibitors, private clubs and commercial organizations desiring to screen pictures. (The B. F. Shearer Company is a Pacific Coast theatre equipment company.) The Jewel Box theatre, in point of equipment and refinement features, is really a fine theatre in miniature. Despite the fact that it has a seating capacity of only 70, the auditorium is acoustically treated to insure the finest sound reproduction, while draperies, carpets and stage curtains are similar to those in the great theatres of our large cities.

The auditorium is 18 feet in width, and 58 feet from the rear wall to the screen. The seating problem has been taken care of in a very "salesmanlike" manner, the B. F. Shearer Company being a distributor for Heywood-Wakefield. With the exception of the loge seats, which are all of the same type, the seating in the Jewel Box is composed of various models so that an audience of exhibitors may experience the comfort of new type seats.

A 9x12 Chromolite screen has been installed. The sound apparatus is by Universal. Projection is handled on two Kaplan projectors. Brenkert reflector lamps are used. Rewind tables, cabinets and other apparatus of a theatre projection room have been installed.

The construction of the projection room, which is of good size, is such that absosultely no sound from the machines reaches the audience, despite the small size of the theatre. Curtains and lighting effects are all controlled from a main switchboard in the booth.

The Jewel Box is air conditioned, equipment being by Kooler-Aire. The theatre is available daily from 8:30 a.m. until midnight, including Sundays, at a fee. Located in the B. F. Shearer Building, on Film Row, it is convenient to the exchanges.

Entrance to the theatre is through a little ante-room that has all the essential character of a lobby in a regular theatre. It is furnished with considerable elegance, having deeply upholstered chairs, soft carpetings, tables, and so on.

There is, in this tiny Jewel Box theatre, many a suggestion for the imaginative person contemplating the building of a small theatre of the 150- to 300-seat type opened during the past year.

The view shows the Jewel Box auditorium, looking toward the screen platform. The room is 18 feet wide and 58 feet long, and there are about 70 chairs. Equipment is quite complete, with the projection apparatus entirely that of a regular theatre.

TWO VERSIONS OF THE REVERSED FLOOR

One of them from New Zealand. The other the Schlanger plan of recent domestic origin, here developed more fully in a direct reply to the sponsor of the former. And if the general effect be that of a good argument, the talk is enlighteningly of ideas and methods.

Says Kenneth W. Aimer, Architect:

AMERICAN INTEREST in the reversed floor, as devised by Ben Schlanger, has just recently come to my attention through copies placed in my hands by a subscriber, and it prompts some description of our use of this scheme in New Zealand.

In 1923, my firm designed the Majestic theatre in Auckland, with a seating capacity of about 2,000, in which the reversed floor slope was used in the lowest tier or orchestra stalls. (I recall that one of the articles on the American method referred to the Thalia theatre opened this year in New York as the first theatre to use the reversed floor slope.) This lower tier contained 400 seats. The next tier, which started approximately level and was given a parabolic slope up to the back, accommodated about 1,000 seats. The top tier, with stepped galleries, had about 600 seats. After some delays due to financial troubles, this theatre was opened in 1925.

We have always used the principle of the parabolic curve in arranging our theatre seating, and it was most interesting to me to learn that this method is such a recent development in America. Many of the theatres designed by us have been for small country towns, where the only theatrical entertainment they can hope for is the motion picture, and in designing these theatres we have never been fettered by the old standardized practices of the ordinary auditorium.

I must confess that when we first attacked the problem of designing a theatre, the Theatre Royal Hamilton, in 1914, we had very little data available to guide us in arranging seating, sight lines, etc., and we we were forced to rely on an analysis of seating comfort, and the mathematics and geometry of sight lines and projection lines.

Since that time we have planned and supervised the erection of very many theatres in Auckland and surrounding country towns, and experience has shown us that the methods adopted from the first were sound and gave the most efficient results.

BRIEFLY, the principles on which we have worked and which produced the parabolic form of floor slope, resulting under certain circumstances in a reversed slope, are these:

Some form of stage or platform is usually called for, and where possible we arranged for the screen to be well back on this stage, so that the seating could be close to the proscenium, yet at least 20 feet from the screen. This distance of 20 feet we have regarded as the minimum to ensure a satisfactory view from the front seats.

Unless there is a possibility of the stage being used for dancing or similar performance, it is not necessary that the audience should see the floor of the stage, and then the only determining factor to govern the position of the screen in relation to the front row of seats is the angle to which the head must be raised to view the screen.

We found by experiment that the angle to the horizontal plane formed by a line from the front seat spectator's eye to the center of the picture, must not exceed 30° to ensure the comfort of these spectators. Or alternatively, if this angle must needs be greater than 30°, the seats must be tilted back proportionately, and the screen if possible tilted forward.

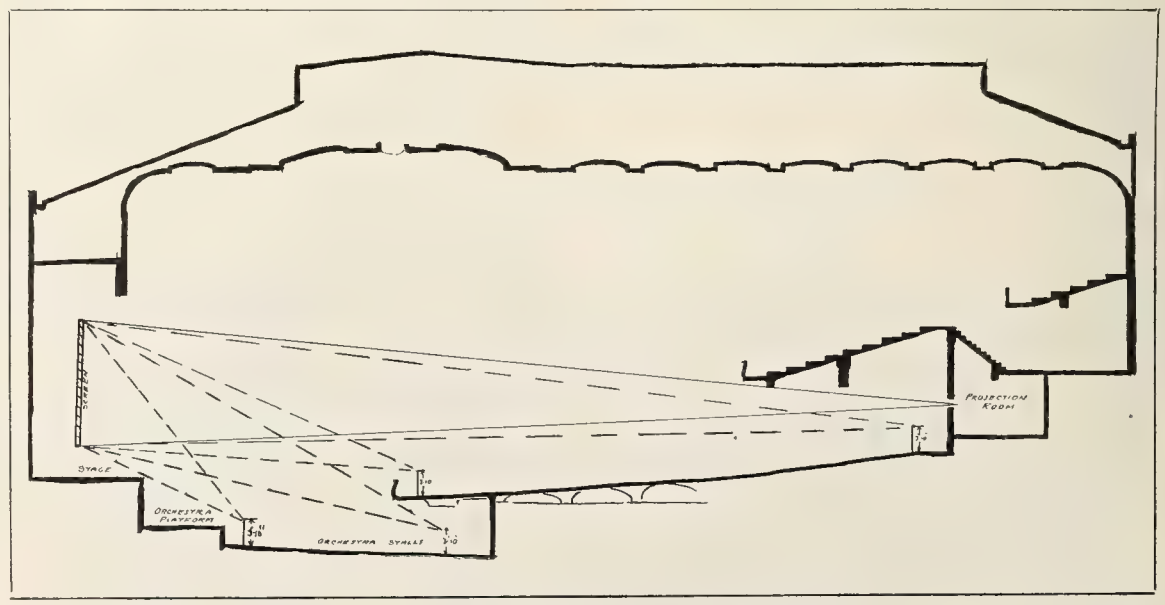
With the type of seats in general use in the smaller theatres, we secured satisfactory results by spacing the rows from 2 feet, 8 inches to 2 feet, 10 inches back-to-back, on level or sloping floors, and from 3 feet to 3 feet, 2 inches on stepped floors.

With the center of the screen fixed, and the position of the front seat determined in relation thereto, it is a matter of plane geometrical drawing to arrive at the slope which will give a satisfactory view to the seats behind the front row.

For example:

Spacing—2 feet, 10 inches.

Average height from floor to eye—3 feet, 10 inches.



Average height floor to top of head—4 feet, 2 inches.

A line drawn from a point 3 feet, 10 inches above the floor in any row of seats, passing through a point 4 feet, 2 inches above floor in the row next in front, should strike at least 8 feet below the center of the screen to give a picture 15 feet high and allow a small margin.

The line of floor produced by the above setting out follows a parabolic curve, and since the sight lines thus secured form a system of lines that could be rotated round the screen center without altering their relation to each other, it follows that the same system can be adapted to a variety of theatre shapes, and that in certain circumstances it might suit very well to so arrange this system that the floor line, or parabolic curve, starts away from the screen with a downward or reverse slope.

The above is the process by which after some years of experience we arrived at the reverse slope used in the Majestic theatre in Auckland.

It should be mentioned that in setting out the seats and consequent floor line by the method described above, it is necessary that the rows of seats should be curved, otherwise those at the sides of a wide theatre will have a different line of sight from those in the center. This curving of the seats produces a floor shaped like the section of a shallow bowl or saucer. The correct curve is secured by taking as the center, the point on the main axis of the theatre not more than the width of the picture behind the screen.

In discussing these sight lines and floor curves, I have, of course, neglected such considerations as orchestra space, gallery steps, height of upper tiers, amount of overhang, etc. It is really a matter of careful trial and adjustment to secure the sectional outline that will best conform to, yet make possible, an entirely satisfactory system of sight lines.

Says Ben Schlanger, Architect:

I WAS very glad to learn from reading the discussion of the reversed floor by Kenneth W. Aimer, that another architect also realizes that motion picture theatres should not be patterned after the ordinary auditorium that has for so long housed the stage performance. Mr. Aimer, however, might give the impression that the theatre designs of his firm have incorporated the use of basic principles of theatre floor design, as I have developed them. If this is the impression, I should like to correct it, and also to clarify the differences in results arrived at by Mr. Aimer's office, and those arrived at through my research work and used in my theatre designs.

Whereas some form of a reversed floor slope was used in the design of the Majestic theatre in Auckland, N. Z., I must point out that this particular floor does not serve the same purposes, nor does it assume the same physical appearance as in my theatre forms. The reversed floor design I have developed functions to increase the physical comfort and to relieve all eye-strain of the patron. To achieve this, I have been able to establish a definite mathematical relationship of the factors of optics and physical comfort in seating. From a careful reading of Mr. Aimer's discussion, and a careful scrutiny of the diagram section of the Majestic theatre, I find that there are no such relationships established in his design. I also find that he has made certain assumptions as to the placing of the screeen, the position of the eye level of the first row of seats, the pitches of chair backs, and the angle of the screen, which show a lack of recognition of the basic needs of physical comfort and optics.

For example, the assumption that there may be an angle of 30° formed by taking the eye level of the first row of seats and joining it with the center line of the height of the screen in relation to a horizontal plane, must be corrected. In being guided by such an assumption, which is wrong in itself, the architect is handicapped in his efforts to arrive at a successful theatre floor arrangement. It is impossible comfortably to view a screen that is placed according to the assumption that Mr. Aimer makes. Accompanying these remarks is a diagram which shows how the various factors governing the screen position are correlated, according to my findings. (See Figure 1.)

THE FORM of the Majestic reversed floor lower level certainly cannot, as developed, give the patron a comfortable view of the screen. A comparative study of my theatre forms with that of Mr. Aimer's will show that the physical outline of the reversed floor in the Majestic theatre is an optional form assumed by the designer, whereas the reversed floor, as I have developed it has a physical outline which is entirely developed by projecting a system of sight lines based upon physical posture in seating, and horizontal and vertical ranges of vision. This is necessary.

The parabolic floor which rises upward as it goes away from the screen is an old and common form in the United States. The reversed parabolic form, which is an entirely new development, is in no way a development of the common parabolic floor. Its development is based upon the recognition of the factor of gain in the vertical range of vision due to increased distance from the screen. This factor makes it a development of the flat level floor, rather than that of the common parabolic floor. Full vision of a screen can be obtained from the rear half of a flat level auditorium if the screen is raised a certain amount, while an unobstructed but uncomfortable view of the screen can be obtained from the front half under such conditions.

The reversed floor in the Majestic theatre has only about nine rows of depth; and also the downward pitch away from the screen is so slight that it is really difficult to regard it as a reversed floor. The reversed floor should be extremely flexible in its application. The number of rows should be limited only by practical bounds.

The position of the projection room in the Majestic theatre, while it affords good projection, forces the top level of seating higher than it need necessarily be. Accompanying diagrams of theatre forms using the reversed floor, show that the projection booth may be placed at a level above all other levels of seating, yet provide a highly suitable angle of projection. (See Figure 2.)

RECENT VERDICTS AFFECTING THEATRES

By LEO T. PARKER

The latest decisions of the higher courts in cases involving questions of law pertinent to theatre operation, analyzed expressly for the exhibitor

A REASONABLE state taxation law is valid which is effective with respect to theatre box office receipts. For illustration, in Apollo Theatre v. Anderson, (55 F. [2d] 66), it was disclosed that a state law provides as follows:

"A tax equivalent to 50 per centum of the amount for which the proprietors, managers, or employes of any * * * theatre, or other place of amusement sell or dispose of tickets or cards of admission in excess of the regular or established price or charge therefor. * * *"

A certain theatre owner contested the validity of the law. However, the higher United States court held the law valid:

"It is not any more a violation of the powers reserved to the state to impose a tax upon the excess price of tickets sold at the box office than to impose a tax on the excess price of tickets sold away from the box office. * * * The tax upon the act of selling a ticket at the box office at an amount in excess of the established price printed upon the face of the ticket is a transaction sufficient upon which to base the imposition of an excise tax."

Liability for Defective Street

THE COURTS have consistently held that the duty of a municipal corporation to maintain its sidewalks and streets in a reasonably safe condition for use by the public is to use reasonable care. The theatre owner, also, must exercise care to keep a sidewalk in safe condition. However, a city is bound to keep all parts of the street in safe condition. In other words, it is the duty of the municipal corporation to protect the public from dangers near or in close proximity to the sidewalks.

Another important point of the law is that it is not necessary that a city have actual notice of the defective condition of a street in order for it to become liable for an injury. It is sufficient if the defective condition has existed for such a period of time that the city, by the use of ordinary care, should have discovered the same. These points of the law were discussed by the higher court in the recent case of Oklahoma City v. Stewart (8 P. [2d] 30).

The facts of this case are that a city installed and maintained, in connection with its water system, a water meter box in the grass adjoining a theatre building. The lid covering this water meter box was made of concrete and was an inch too small to properly cover the box.

One night, while alighting from an automobile, a prson stepped on the covering which, because of the loose fitting of the lid, turned and caused him to fall, thereby sustaining severe injuries.

The injured person filed suit to recover damages. It was contended that no liability existed for two reasons, first, because the city officials were not informed that the box was defective; second, because the box was in a location not intended for pedestrians to walk.

However, notwithstanding these contentions, the higher court held the city solely liable. The building owner was not liable because the meter box was the property of the city and the former was not obligated to maintain it in a safe condition. This court said:

"It is not necessary that a city have actual notice of the condition of its streets and sidewalks. It is sufficient that the defective condition of the street or sidewalk had existed for such a period of time that the city, by the use of ordinary care, could have discovered the same. * * * The duty of a municipal corporation to maintain its sidewalks and streets in a reasonably safe condition for use by the public, and to exercise ordinary care in its inspection of its sidewalks for places of danger is not confined within the exact lines followed by the public in passing over the sidewalks. It is the duty of the municipal corporation to protect the public in the use of its sidewalks from dangers near, or within close proximity to, the sidewalk."

City Authorizes Use of Sidewalk

GENERALLY SPEAKING, the city council has the power to supervise and control the streets and sidewalks of a city with authority to cause to be removed any structure which encroaches upon the same, nor is this power lost because of inaction of the city governing body for a long period of time. On the other hand, the municipal authorities cannot legally authorize a use inconsistent with the right of the public to the reasonable use and enjoyment of these public ways. The latest higher court case involving this point of the law is State v. City of Marianna (39 S. W. [2d] 301).

The facts of this case are that a property owner obtained permission of the city council to tear down the buildings then located on his property and to erect a building on the site of the old one. In order to remove the debris, it was necessary to use a part of the street and all of the sidewalk and he asked permission to make this obstruction. The council voted "to grant all of Mr. McClintock's requests, and he was informed that he was at liberty to proceed according to his own plans." Pursuant to the permission the property owner proceeded with the demolition of the old building and caused to be erected on its site a modern two-story brick building with a basement. As a means for gaining entrance to the basement he appropriated one-half of the eight-foot sidewalk abutting on the building and caused to be cut through the same an aperture of sufficient width to permit private passage.

Certain citizens filed suit to prevent use by the property owner of the sidewalk for the purpose of gaining entrance to the basement. It was contended that the above mentioned permission related exclusively to the necessary use of the sidwalk and street during the construction work. Notwithstanding this argument the higher court held the property owner entitled to maintain the stairway in the sidewalk, and said:

"We conclude that the correct rule is that the governing body of municipalities may, within its discretion, permit an encroachment upon the streets or sidewalks where such encroachment is not of such nature as to necessarily prevent the reasonable and proper use by the public, and which does not of itself constitute a common nuisance. The facts as presented by the petition in this case do not show a complete obstruction of the sidewalk, but only a partial obstruction, nor does it show any special damages suffered. * * * We are of the opinion that the allegations sufficiently to show the obstruction was made with the assent of the city council, and its refusal to abate such obstruction is a proper exercise of its discretion."

Liability for Employe's Injury

A PERSON whose employe is negligent and causes an injury is liable, although the injured person is employed by another. This is particularly true if it is shown that the employer of the injured employe was not negligent.

For instance, in McComas v. Al G. Barnes Shows Company (12 P. [2d] 630), it was disclosed that an actress of the William Fox Studio sued to recover damages for injuries sustained when she fell off an elephant which she was riding while making a scene. She filed suit against the pro-

Announcing the Fall Buyers Number of BETTER THEATRES: NOV. 19

Quigley Publications is pleased to announce that the November 19th issue of Better Theatres will be the annual Fall Buyers Number. In design, this special issue will be of the same comprehensive, authoritative character that has established the Buyers Numbers of Better Theatres as the standard reference books of the motion picture theatre business. Published at a time when the motion picture industry has begun its 1932-33 season, the Fall Buyers Number will bring to its 12,000 exhibitor readers an editorial content built to be of practical aid in the industry's efforts toward a resumption of its normal pace.

The industry's standard theatre equipment directories —The Equipment Index and Theatre Supply Dealers— will appear in the Fall Buyers Number with all additions and changes necessary to make them complete and accurate for reference by those who buy equipment and other supplies for the theatre.

THE MOTION PICTURE MOVES ON

By GEORGE SCHUTZ

Some of the significant things the technicians are doing in projection, sound and other fields

CONSISTENT technological progress has been made during that period in 1932 covered by the committee reports of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, just recently turned in. In spite of the depression, which of course exerted considerable restraint upon the technical and purely scientific activities of the motion picture industry, important advances can be reported, some of them, indeed, suggested by the economic conditions, being aimed at lower costs of production.

The faster emulsions that were introduced, not so long ago, are now used for both exteriors and interiors, and have been adopted even by amateurs. Film laboratories have mastered the problems introduced by these emulsions, and handle them now in a routine fashion. The industry still awaits a suitable emulsion for sound recording, and in the meantime, must utilize to the best advantage the emulsions at hand.

High-grade portable sound recording equipment, and silent, or nearly silent, cameras are being developed; improvements are being made in methods of synchronizing and prescoring, and in the technique and equipment used for dubbing or re-recording.

A most notable technological development of the past few months was the establishment of dimensional standards for the apertures of sound cameras and projectors. Color processes have not been used to any great extent by the industry during the past year, although consistent progress is reported by the color industry. Considerable activity is reported in amateur color cinematography, and a wellknown firm has announced that its high sensitivity emulsions are now available in this field.

Improvements in acoustics, especially in theatres, continues as the public becomes more and more conscious of what constitutes good reproduction of sound. Great improvements have been made in recording, extending the ranges of volume and frequency to limits hitherto unattainable, adding remarkably to the brilliancy and naturalness of dialog and music.

In the laboratory, the sensitometric method of control, so long followed in sound track processing, is now beginning to find application in picture processing. In general, scientific methods are continuing to improve their foothold upon the industry and are paying dividends, not only in the form of an improved product, but also in developing a more sane and economical production technique.

Prominent among the activities of technologists during the past year has been the work devoted to studying the causes of the mutilation of film and of vitiating these causes. The Projection Practice Committee of the S.M.P.E. began serious work on this subject some time ago. The ramifications of the study, however, extend into the exchange, so that recently the Committee on Exchange Practices has taken up that phase of the work.

THE PROBLEM involves, first the satisfactory "processing" or treatment of prints before being sent to the exchanges; next, the handling of the prints by the exchanges while under their control; and finally, the handling of the print in the projection room by the projectionist. Intimately related to the condition of the print is the condition of the projection machine. Each defect of the machine produces its own characteristic mark on the film. The work of the Projection Practice Committee, therefore, is concerned particularly with the clearances, tolerances and tensions, as they do and ought to exist in projectors, and the work of the Committee on Exchange Practices will follow up this work with an attempt to correlate the kind of damage suffered by the film with the agency causing the damage. This is an extremely important matter—the ability to diagnose the condition of the projector by studying the markings of the film—and one that ought eventually to save the industry thousands of dollars.

Efforts are now under way to devise a method of testing the output level of several projectors while in use for the purpose of maintaining an equality of performance of all the projectors. Determination of a method of checking the continuity of the speech circuits of loud speaker units while in use, and for equalizing the sound volume before each performance, is another important object of present activities. A study of theatre problems of the release print, dealing with processing of film, buckling of film, density of positive prints, cutting film for change-overs, uniformity of volume level, and use of the present standard release print, is being made by the S. M. P. E., while a study of various operating problems of projection, including the relationship between supervision of projection and the maintenance of superior performance and the costs of operation, is in the hands of an S. M. P. E. committee.

Among the problems facing the Projection Screens Committee of the S. M. P. E. during the past six months were those of determining the nature and characteristics of new screens placed upon the market, and of devising new and simple means of measuring the illumination and reflection factors. One of the most interesting subjects of inquiry was that of determining the reasons why the color of screens becomes yellow as the screens age. Although much is not known about the causes of discoloration, it is believed that the fault may be ascribed, not to the pigment employed on the screen, but to the vehicle used to carry the pigment. In other words, it seems that the prevention of discoloration of screens is concerned more with the selection of the vehicle than of the pigment, a fact that one would not be led to suspect.

EMPHASIS is being laid on the fact that although much valuable use has been made of the existing formula developed by the late Prof. W. E. Sabine, for calculating the acoustical characteristics of auditoriums, this formula has been found to be inadequate under certain conditions, and a real need exists for an extension to this formula. More attention than ever is being paid by architects and theatre owners to the importance of adjusting the auditoriums acoustically so as to realize the highest possible quality of reproduction of sound.

Further study is being made of reverberation, the importance of establishing for each theatre, or each kind of theatre, what is known as the "maximum time of reverberation." This is a measure of the greatest amount of reverberation permissible in a given theatre without permitting interference. The recognition of the need of such a maximum amount of reverberation implies, of course, the equally urgent need of preventing an auditorium from becoming too "dead," or not sufficiently reverberant.

The problem of preventing the transmission of noises from the exterior into the auditorium is also one of great importance, in addition to that of damping the noises arising from vibrating equipment within the theatre building, such as ventilating equipment, and the like. Mechanics as well as acoustics are involved.

And there is also, finally, that very important question of relating the acoustical characteristics found in the motion picture studio to those found in the theatre. This is a question that has been entirely neglected in the past, despite the importance of its bearing on the satisfaction of the customer.

In recording studios there can not be said to exist any consistent practice as regards acoustical conditions which range from the extreme deadness of cloth-walled sets to the hardness of painted plywood flats. The optimum relation of studio acoustics to theatre acoustics can not be simply expressed; as a first important step, review rooms and preview theatres should be adjusted to have the acoustical characteristics now considered optimum for auditoriums of their size. Reproducing equipment in the review room should also be as free from distortion as possible, so as not to impart to the reproduced sound its own idiosyncrasies. With present methods, previews are heard under such varying conditions that a concerted opinion of a picture is difficult.

Incidentally, to gain an appreciation of what has been going on in the development of the motion picture, in its manufacture and its mechanisms of reproduction, and what researches in its art and science are under way at the present time, and the direction in which these researches point, one has not only an adequate but a comprehensively organized source in the reports of the committees of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers. The activities of these committees are always sufficiently adjusted to the current practical needs of the industry technologically to be timely, and therefore newsy. In great measure the reports of them plot the technical advance of the motion picture while it is actually in movement.

PHOTOELECTRIC CELLS

● A full line of photoelectric cells for theatre sound reproduction and industrial application, has been announced by the Continental Electric Company of St. Charles, Ill.

The manufacturer describes his process as based on the McIlvaine patents covering a method of cathode coating, and on a number of other technical devices. The cells are available in all standard types, while special types can be supplied.

PORTABLE EQUIPMENT

● Portable sound-on-film projectors have been placed on the market by the Kolograph Company of Indianapolis. Illustrations and specifications show it to be extremely compact. The entire operating mechanism is mounted in a metal case 18 inches high.

Operation is on a.c. current at from 100 to 120 volts, either 50 or 60 cycles. The photoelectric cell amplifiers are incorporated in the main amplifier.

THE INDIAN MARKET

● Very specific market data have been issued by the U. S. Department of Commerce on India. It is stated that the trade in that country could use at least 150 reproducing sets if low-priced equipment could be had on convenient terms.

Practically all theatres in the larger towns have been wired, these numbering, according to the latest figures, about 180.

It is stated that equipment should be easy to install and operate. Credit terms vary, but it is believed that 25% with the order, 15% against inland railway receipts, and the balance in 12 monthly payments, would be acceptable.

BY WAY OF NEWS

● Hermany A. DeVry, Inc., has purchased the Q. R. S. DeVry Corporation of Chicago, manufacturers of motion picture cameras, portable, projection and sound equipment. New quarters have been acquired, and the plant will be reorganized for extension of its range of product and service.

The Simpson Instrument and Lens Corporation of Chicago, has purchased the lens business of the Brinner Optical Manufacturing Company. The Simpson concern, which was just recently formed, will specialize in the manufacture of lenses of most all commercial as well as scientific types. Ray Simpson is president.

OVERHAULING MECHANISMS IN THE PROJECTION ROOM

EVERY LITTLE while comes a letter similar to the following:

"The manager of this theatre is desirous of obtaining the necessary tools for the repairing of our machines. I told him I thought you would be good enough to suggest a list of tools we would need, also a place to buy same. He wishes to bring the machines up-to-date, or as nearly so as possible, and, since our business is no exception to the general rule, wants to do so as cheaply as possible. At present the tools supplied by the management consist of a screwdriver and a pair of pliers."

From that last I am allowed to suppose the correspondent is not operating the theatre, but is its projectionist. Then why not call things by their correct name? Just what is meant by "machines" is not certain, but presumably the projector mechanisms are what stand in need of repair.

While I sympathize with the desire of the manager to effect repairs as cheaply as may be, still he will do well to consider very seriously just what really is a cheap job. Theatre patrons of today are more critical than formerly. Projection faults which ten years ago would have passed wholly unnoticed, may today be sharply criticized and result in loss to the box office. If friend manager "saves" even so much as fifty dollars by doing a home-made repair job, and that job is sufficiently less excellent than a factory job to cost the box office one hundred dollars—well, the job just cannot be called really cheap. It is in fact very expensive. And, believe it or not, the thing is by no manner of means impossible.

Hard as are the times, the really best advice I can give the exhibitor is to obtain, except in the matter of minor repairs, two loan mechanisms from the factory (which will cost only express charges) and have the mechanism repaired at the factory.

In the case in question I assume the manager proposes to give the mechanisms a thorough overhauling. He proposes to "bring them up-to-date," and that is a job which I would not myself care to undertake. It is hardly to be presumed that the projectionist, or anyone else on a theatre staff could possibly do such a job in the best manner. Projector mechanisms are now made, in some of their more vital parts, so that the permissible clearance is only one ten-thousanth of an inch. All or nearly all parts are in a high state of accuracy. How is it possible for theatre men, projectionist or otherwise, to work in such measurements?

The projectionist, if skillful and experienced, might make a "fair" job of it, but "fair" jobs are not now desirable. Near-perfect jobs are what is required, and it is not conceivable that the projectionist in a small theatre in a small place, now supplied with a screwdriver and pair of pliers by the management, can possibly produce a near-perfect job, where such a high state of mechanical accuracy is essential to best results.

The projectionist should be supplied with a gas plier for handling hot carbons, a pair of about 8-inch cutting pliers, one large and one small screwdriver, one well magnetized long, narrow-bladed screwdriver for small screws (this to be well tempered at its blade point), one pair of pliers for notching film at broken sprocket holes, one small riveting hammer, one carpenter's claw hammer for general work, one hack saw, one large and one small cold chisel, a suitable assortment of files, a small gasoline torch for light soldering (such as wire joints), solder and solder flux, an assortment of punches, a suitable assortment of wrenches, a few sheets of Nos. 0 and ½ sandpaper and emery cloth.

That is all I think of at the moment. The assortment is intended for general service in the projection room.

THE S. M. P. E.'S "FALL MEETING"

IT IS NOT often I feel impelled to criticise any action of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, but that does not mean never, and just now I feel a bit agitated because the board of governors of the S. M. P. E. made the decision that because of the present rather flinty times, the regular four-day fall session of the Society would not be held. Instead, it would meet at the Hotel Pennsylvania in New York, put itself outside a dinner, count the ballots and announce the names of the officers elected. There would be addresses by President Goldsmith and Terry Ramsaye and some motion pictures.

Well, the dinner was good. So was the address by Doctor Goldsmith, while the talk by Terry Ramsaye was a knockout. So far so good. But motion picture engineers do not assemble, let us hope, to look at the didoes of an animated cartoon, and a feature production of merely ordinary significance.

There were some colored pictures which were very interesting as illustrating how far one color process has advanced. That picture had a right place at the meeting, the others not. We can see pictures at theatres.

It is really too bad to abandon even one regular session, but if it must be done, then at least what little time is available at a one-evening session should be employed usefully. In the time utterly wasted by the picture display, at least one or two important committees might have reported, and considerable business of real worth accomplished.

The S. M. P. E. is fortunate in again having Doctor Goldsmith as its chief executive. J. H. Kurlander was re-elected secretary. J. I. Crabtree remains past president. William Kunzmann of the National Carbon Company, is now vice president. H. T. Cowling remains as watch dog of the treasury. W. C. Hubbard of the General Electric Vapor Lamp Company, is on the board of governors.

NON-INTERMITTENT PROJECTORS

B. H. SNYDER, manager of the Unique theatre in Gunnison, Colorado, writes: "It has been exactly two years since you paid us that wonderful compliment following your visit to our city. It certainly thrilled us to read from your own pen that our projection and sound was equal to any you had seen or heard in towns of our size and even larger. Many times I have wanted to write and thank you, but think the chief reason I did not was that I could not express my appreciation adequately. Meanwhile we have kept up with your articles on sound and picture projection and have obtained a world of good from them.

"We have a new projectionist since you were here—a young chap who has been attending our local college for some while. He is taking a pro-engineering course—preparatory to electrical work, and has developed into an expert in sound, in consequence of which we have had to have no service on our equipment since he came. Here is a question he wants to ask: What, if any, are the developments in new projectors using synchronized light and thereby eliminating the intermittent movement?"

The reason I spoke as I did about your sound, Friend Snyder, was because your work deserved praise. It is always a real pleasure to be able to say nice things. If Friend Brand (the "new" projectionist's name is Fred Brand) is forging ahead in projection knowledge and has the will to apply his knowledge to his work, as it seems he has, I most sincerely hope that he will continue in the work of projection We need men of that kind.

There are no late developments in synchronized projection. If Mr. Brand asks this question with a view of tackling that problem himself, I advise him by all means to let it alone. Some very brilliant men have worked long and earnestly to solve that problem, and while it is not impossible that one man really has the answer, still if he has, he does not regard it as good policy to "spring" it yet.

If Mr. Brand merely wants to know if there is such a projector now available, I would say that, from the commercial viewpoint, there is not. He could secure such a projector in Germany, but the thing has a dozen or more lenses, weighs something like half a ton, and is very costly. (It was used for some time in a New York theatre, but was discarded.) So really there is nothing of interest at this time to tell you along these lines.

THE CAPACITY OF S. R. A. CARBONS

STANLEY SEABOLD writes from the city of Denver as follows:

"I have just had an argument with a projectionist of this city. I am not now a projectionist, but am studying and I aspire to be one some day. This man declared the S. R. A. carbons were no good. He said he could not hold a steady light with them. He said he was using 35 amperes and 12-mm. positive. I have been at pains to secure and study the various recommendations of carbon manufacturers. I told him he was overloading the 12-mm. carbons, whereupon he said, 'You've a lot of gall telling me how to use carbons! What in Hell do you know about it, anyhow?' Whereupon I removed myself from his august presence. What, Mr. Richardson, is your opinion?"

Well, Friend Seabold, I'm afraid if I set it forth fully in print, it might not look well. Let us rather consider the effect of such crimes. Almost everything now used in projection practice is designed to be used in some exact way, though usually there is a fairly close tolerance both ways from what is considered as the really best thing, since it is not always possible (for example, in current flow) to maintain a rigid exactitude.

Carbons are no exception. The projectionist who is using a 12-mm. S. R. A. positive at 35 amperes is guilty of serious overloading. He is disregarding the manufacturer's instructions and working wastefully and therefore inefficiently. He is wasting current, wasting carbons and getting poor results compared with what he might and should get.

The S. R. A. 12-mm. positive is designed to carry between 28 and 32 amperes of current. Twenty-eight is the least that can be used to get the best possible result; 32 is the highest for maximum results and efficiency. If 34 or more amperes be used, there will in all probability be more or less constant sputtering and unsteadiness of illumination.

It is the projectionist, not the carbons, that is to blame.

S. R. A. carbons of from 12 to 14 millimeters are given the following current ratings by the National Carbon Company: 12-mm., 21 to 24 amperes (sputtering starts at 25 amperes); 13-mm., 28 to 32 (above 34 sputtering may be expected); 13-mm., 32 to 42 (sputters at 44); 14-mm., 42 to 52 (sputters at 55).

It is cold fact that much inefficient and low quality work results from failure of projectionists to study and closely follow instructions sent out by manufacturers of various equipments or equipment parts. Manufacturers not infrequently complain bitterly to me regarding this failure. They are themselves vitally interested, of course, in the good performance of their product. They often conduct long, careful and not infrequently very costly experiments to determine exactly under what conditions their product, either as a whole or in its various parts, may be made to develop the very best possible performance. They carefully compile instructions for installation and operation, which are sent out with the equipment or with a part.

Presently, however, they often receive a vigorous howl to the effect that the device or the part is "no good." Investigation not infrequently develops the fact that the instructions for its installation and use have been either partially or wholly disregarded. Such procedure represents shamefully poor work. When a new equipment or part is received, accompanied by instructions from the manufacturer, it is only intelligent to assume that the men who designed and built the thing know decidedly more about it than do those who have never laid eyes upon it prior to its arrival in the projection room. It then most emphatically is up to them to install in strict accordance with the instructions, and to operate it, also in faithful compliance with them. If later, when the projectionist has become well acquainted with the device or part, and understands both its theory and practice thoroughly, he believes he can make changes which will result in either better results or more efficient operation, or both, it is permissible that he make very careful, reasonable experiments, first, however, being very certain before he starts that he will be able to restore the original condition in the event his ideas do not pan out as he expected.

I am sorry you did not give me the name of the projectionist, Friend Seabold A man using a 12-mm. S. R. A. carbon at 35 amperes, and who is abusive when the fault is pointed out to him, should be dealt with, and to my way of thinking the union itself should do the dealing, with instructions to study the ratings of carbons.

NEW MIRRORS LIKELY TO BE BETTER

FROM THE projection staff of the Colonial theatre in Southington, Conn., comes this request for information:

"We are using reflector type lamps for projector light sources. The mirrors have started to fade. We would like to know if it is practical to have them resilvered."

Just a bit vague, as is the case with so many, many requests for information. "Beginning to fade" is not definite. However, since the request concerns the practicability of resilvering, I am justified in assuming that the outer or concave surface is deemed perfect and that the silver backing is either coming off in spots or failing in some other way. (Projectionists asking for advice should be very careful to describe such things in minute detail.)

Yes, the mirror can be resilvered. You could write the Peerless lamp makers (that is the kind being used) and ask where. However, I would strongly advise you to install new mirrors, for the following reasons. In the first place, if you have the old mirror or mirrors resilvered, when it is all finished and done, if you include transportation charges, I think you will find you will have paid out almost if not quite as much as new mirrors would have cost—and you won't have new mirrors.

THE S. R. P. AND PERFORATED SCREENS

FROM E. E. Van Fradenburg, projectionist of the Valley theatre in Manassa, Colo., comes this interesting communication:

"Just read current BETTER THEATRES and would like to comment on one or two things. You have on several occasions printed complaints concerning the mutilation of the Standard Release Print. I presume there really are such things done, but with very rare exceptions I have never received a print in any other than good condition. Possibly the exchanges serving this territory are more efficient than elsewhere, though I see no reason why that should be.

"Often I get a laugh at the 'standard'—so called. By this I mean that the Academy told us exactly the way the leaders were to be numbered, the size of the letters, border, etc., yet not all follow this standard, though the results achieved by other methods are the same. This seems notably true of Universal. Columbia does not use the same style signal mark the others do. However, the dots are there. The footage is correct and the whole thing works like the proverbial charm. I regard the S. R. P. as the greatest improvement in projection practice that has ever happened.

"Very seldom have I had a changeover dot so dim that I failed to see it. Even when that happened I have thought perhaps it was my fault, rather than fault in the signal. Light might have been momentarily dim at that point just then. Happens once in possibly 150 prints. Result was about five seconds of dark screen, and while not so good, it was nothing to call out the troops about. Had it been a white screen—well let us not go into that. We often have a dark screen for a few seconds due to the film, so one more added maybe once a month at changeover won't work very serious harm.

"However, the thing I want really to comment on is your article about perforated screens. I have for a long while held the perforated screen to be unnecessary, and that it makes adequate screen illumination very hard to obtain. With that in mind I have tried the following experiment. With the projector lamp not working, but with the sound on I have had regular patrons of the theatre stand at the rear and walk toward the screen, with the instruction to tell me just where the speakers were, or where some individual speaker was. Without exception they have located the speaker as being in the screen center vertically, and about 4 feet from the edge horizontally, when in fact the horns were at that time located at the sides of the screen. They would advance until quite close to the screen, say about 6 feet, at which point they would begin to be puzzled, finally locating the voice where it actually was.

"By way of explanation, I left the screen blank (projector lamp unlighted), for the simple reason that were the figures in action on the screen, the average person would locate the words as coming from the speaker's mouth, even though they came from the ceiling. I have tried the above described experiment with a dozen different people. The result was almost exactly identical in each case."

Well, Brother Van Fradenburg, I have pretty well made up my mind concerning the perforated versus the solid screen. I am of the opinion that the perforated screen detracts from both the sound and the picture sufficiently that its total effect is to do decidedly greater harm than it does good. Were I myself to become an exhibitor tomorrow, I would lose no time in installing a solid screen. I would then call in the sound engineers to work out the best possible effect in sound distribution. As to the theatre patrons, except possibly for a few seated in the very front rows, I would do absolutely no worrying at all. I would not advise them of the change and would be quite willing to place a wager at at least even money, that if the horns be rightly placed, and possibly treated as I shall later describe, not more than one in ten of the

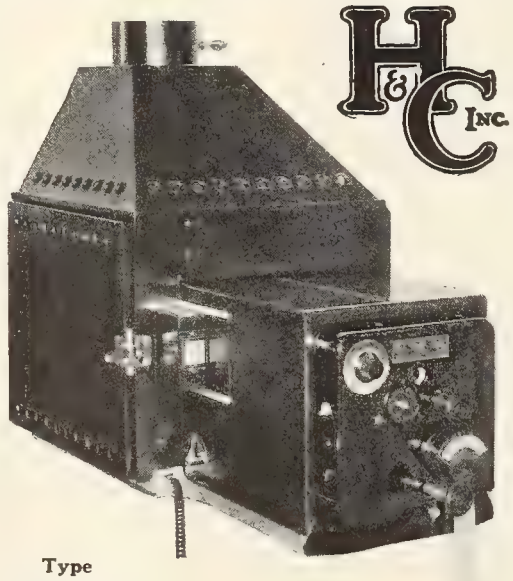
PHOTOTONE TALKAFILM



Liked by Projectionist, Patron and Proprietor

Proprietors like Phototone Talkafilm because it costs so little at first and service is so rarely needed. Phototone Talkafilm makes money. Projectionists like it because all adjustments are made at the factory—nothing to do but hook it in and run it. Patrons like it for the good shows it gives. Clear voices and sweet music are always heard at theatres equipped with Phototone Talkafilm.

Phototone Talkafilm has a unique speaker. It is directional, sound waves can be controlled. This feature has turned many a house into a moneymaker. Other outstanding improvements have been made in the new micrometer tracking adjustment optical system, the photoelectric cell assembly, the all-electric amplifying system and twenty other parts. Send for the full details.

Phototone Equipment sold to 2,500 theatres, institutions and auditoriums the world over.

theatre patrons would note the change, while the tenth would be unable to point out any really valid objection.

As against the perforated screen, we would have a large gain in light, or considerably reduced current bills, and much better chance of cleaning screen surfaces effectively. I myself believe there would be a distinct improvement in sound as well.

It seems reasonable to assume that the best location of the horns would not be at the sides of the screen, but at either the bottom or top, or both. The reason for this assumption is obvious. The screen image, save in cases of outrageous distortion set up by unapproved and rather silly near-the-ceiling projection room location, is much wider than it is high, therefore any ill effect set up by the proposed chance of horn location would be decidedly greater with them at the side or sides.

Another thing: It seems reasonable that placing horns behind the screen would have considerable effect upon sound distribution. (I wonder whether or not Erpi, RCA or anyone else has tried locating the horns at top or bottom of screen, their mouths covered with material something like tautly stretched cheese cloth, or possibly something heavier?) Possibly such baffle should, for best results, be placed at a distance from the edges of the horn mouth to be determined by experiment. Personally I am quite certain this experiment deserves very thorough test. Whether or not this is the proper method, I am for the solid screen, with the horns placed at top or bottom, or perhaps both, but without any broadcasting of the change until it has been in use for at least a reasonable time, say one month. Too late for Mr. Chronic Kicker to put up a protest then, if he has not already discovered the change!

NOTING EXCELLENCE IN PHOTOGRAPHY

LESTER BORST, projectionist of Two Rivers, Wis., writes, "The last week, projectionally speaking, has been a paradise for us, by reason of the fact that we have had three features which we consider as the very acme of excellence in photography; namely, MGM's 'Speak Easily,' photographed by Harold Wenstrom; Caddo's 'Sky Devils,' on which Tony Gaudio did the camera work; and lastly, Metro's 'Unashamed,' which had Norbert Brodine as the cinematographer. If you have seen these, or any of them, you may understand my enthusiastic praise."

I have as yet seen none of them, but am able to understand and appreciate the enthusiasm the real projectionist feels when he receives prints with which he may do himself credit on the theatre screen; also his chagrin when prints come which, do what he will, permit him to get only imperfect results.

However, let it be clearly understood that imperfect prints are by no manner of means always chargeable to carelessness or poor work on the part of the cinematographer. When the cinematographer has finished with his work and has handed over the negative, the finished result, insofar as individual prints be concerned, is dependent upon dozens of things. Even a slight error in two or three of them may have the effect of placing in your hands a decidedly unsatisfactory print, whereupon both the cinematographer and the projectionist automatically become the goat.

As a matter of fact, many inferior prints are sent out which were printed from perfect negatives. The fault may be due to some carelessness on the part of some individual in the printing room. It may be due to some carelessness in development of the print, or some fault in the developer itself, or even in the drying of the print.

I am glad to see the cinematographer get full credit for excellence in results, but don't want him to be blamed, by inference, for faults in prints. He has plenty of sins to do penance for, without being saddled with those many which have their seat in the development labs or in the printing or drying rooms.

AN INGENIOUS TESTING DEVICE

HERE IS a brand new one! John Sulman of Chicago, comes forward with the following:

"I have gained a great deal of benefit from your department in BETTER THEATRES. I am a projectionist in a suburban city and feel that I should, in my turn, help your good work along by contributing a scheme I am using and have found to have value much more than equal to the work entailed.

"My boss has a machine into which he dictates letters for his stenographer. When our present sound outfit was installed a while back and pronounced working perfectly by the installation engineers, I bought me a new wax record for the dictating machine at a cost of a few cents. I also obtained a 50-foot strip of new film.

"Getting friend boss' permission, I moved the dictating machine down into the auditorium, pulled the screen up out of the way and mounted it (the machine), with its receiver held facing the center of the center horn opening. In the mouth of the receiver I mounted a large paper cone to increase the area of its opening, and working by trial and error, trimmed it down until it picked up the correct amount of sound. Then I projected my strip of sound film and recorded the results in sound on the wax record, which, together with the film strip, was carefully wrapped and stored.

"Now whenever I think the outfit is not working right, or is not as good as it once was, I just exhume that film strip and make a new sound recording, whereupon by listening to them both in the dictating machine, I am able to form a pretty good idea as to just what fall-off there has been, if any, and exactly what the faults consist of. What do you think of the stunt, Friend Richardson?"

Well, Friend Sulman, I don't believe I would care to go on record with an opinion. In the first place, I think few projectionists would have access to such a machine. In the second place I really doubt that the sound reproduction of such a machine would be such as would enable one to form a very accurate opinion. Perhaps I am wrong about that, but I don't believe I am unless it be possible to reproduce the recorded sound through the theatre horns, and I think that could hardly be done.

But what do the rest of you think of the idea?

TO VASELINE OR NOT TO VASELINE

DALE DANIELSON, chief projectionist of the Mainstreet theatre in Russel, Kans., takes issue with me as follows:

"Referring back to the March 12th issue of BETTER THEATRES, I take issue on two things; first, with projectionist John B. Meeker regarding the use of vaseline on fader contacts, and, secondly, with your commendation of his objection thereto.

"I have used a W. E. 12-point fader for fully three years and have kept its contacts lubricated with vaseline continuously. Today it is in A-1 condition. Not only does the vaseline keep the contacts from cutting, but also it makes for smoother action and an almost complete freedom from a scratchy changeover.

"As regards dust, every fader should be cleaned daily, or at most every other day, using Carbona or carbon tetrachloride. If this practice be rigidly followed, not enough dust can possibly reach and adhere to the contacts to cause harm. Surely, Friend Richardson, research departments, such as Erpi, for example, maintains, have studied this long enough to know what is best.

"And now I want to agree with projectionist Louis A. Goldman, same issue, of BETTER THEATRES, where he disagrees with projectionist Jeffres and says all changeover marks are not standard. I would like to add a bit to that. He (Goldman) found two Columbia prints different from standard in that they only had 10 feet between cues, whereas the standard calls for 11 feet.

"I find some Vitaphone comedies with only one cue, placed approximately 4 feet from the end. I feel sure no one had made a cutout, for the reels had not been doubled and the action and sound were unbroken. I also find some United Artists prints to have cue marks much smaller than the standard demands, though I will say they are plainly visible."

CONCERNING SOUND GATE TENSION

CHARLES N. DALBY of Montgomery, Mo., asks, "Will you be kind enough to tell me what the tension should be at the sound gate aperture?"

Up to date I know of no authoritative statement on this point, insofar as has to do with pull in ounces. The only rule I know of is that the sound gate tension must be sufficient to eliminate what is known as "gate flutter," resulting from lack of absolute uniformity of film motion over the sound aperture. If by reason of insufficient tension pressure the motion be not absolutely even over the sound aperture, then gate flutter, usually in the form of a harsh, sort of rasping noise, will appear.

It is highly important that the gate tension be not excessive, however, since that will wear the sound sprocket teeth unnecessarily, as well as work injury to the film sprocket holes, whereupon "sprocket flutter" will probably develop, since what is termed "flutter" may have its seat in the sound sprocket, usually by reason of worn teeth.

Should flutter appear and the sound sprocket teeth be worn, the first thing to do is install a new sprocket. In fact, as soon as wear visible under a magnifying glass is evident, the sprocket should be renewed. Don't wait for Old Man Trouble. Beat him to it! Dirt on the face of the sound sprocket will, of course, produce flutter, but surely by now there is no projectionist so shiftless that he would tolerate a dirty sound sprocket, save in the event something has adhered to its face during a run, which could not be removed until the reel was finished.

If any projectionist feels able to set forth information as to the adjustment of sound gate tension, let him stand forth and be heard.

PHOTOGRAPHING DIRT IN CAMERA APERTURE

HENRY MAITRE, member of local 293, New Orleans, hands us a new one, as follows:

"I have something that I ask you to publish, provided it meets your approval. I am using standard plates [meaning, presumably, the new standard aperture plates]. Enclosed find two film clippings, both marked, in which you will observe dirt on the edge of the frame line, the same being photographed thereon.

"Projectionists are blamed when such 'decorations' appear on the theatre screen. The manager, of course, believes the fault to be due to carelessness. Immediately he grabs the phone, calls up and bawls the living tar out of the light ray shooter. Perhaps, though, while friend manager is heating up the phone circuit with language, the scene changes, and lo and behold, there is no dirt on the frame line at all, whereupon we in our turn, warm up the phone wires as much as we dare, advising the manager to look—see and show us the dirt, which he can't do, and a flood of words meet the middle of the phone circuit. The fault friend manager got all het up about was, as an examination discloses when the reel is finished, caused by dirt in the camera aperture being photographed into the film."

Well, I don't know. It does not seem within the range of possibility that such a fault could get by. All negatives are projected in the studio screening room, and are there inspected by anywhere from two or three to a dozen persons. I think we may therefore say that such a thing could hardly be, insofar as concerns the negative. A negative containing such a glaring fault would automatically be discarded.

I have examined the clipping under a powerful microscope. The fault certainly has every appearance of dirt adhering to the camera aperture being photographed into the print. I have sent the clipping to George Blaisdell, editor of The International Photographer (Hollywood), asking that he refer it to the cinematographers' organization for examination and opinion.

I, of course am no expert in such things, but on the face of it my guess is that the dirt adhered to a printer aperture and was there impressed upon the print. I don't even remember what sort of an aperture printers have, but anyhow that is my guess. I shall advise you further when (and if) I receive a report from Hollywood. GLAD THE WRONG WAS SOON RIGHTED

JOHN ALLBRIGHT of Dennison, Tex., says, "Dear Mr. Richardson: We tried for a long, long while to have certain abuses in the form of poor exchange service corrected, without getting anywhere at all. Finally I got my manager to write you about it, and presto, the thing was made right. We want to thank you and also ask how in * * *you managed to do it."

I don't know exactly what happened, of course, but imagine the exchange manager received a letter from his superior.

A GOOD EXAMPLE OF BAD SERVICE

DON AXTELL, projectionist at the State theatre in Rapid City, S. Dak., member of local 503, says: "Dear Dad Richardson: I am located away out here, far from all supply houses, etc., and I must do my own repair work, either after the show at night or before the show next day. It surely does keep me busily busy. We run seven days a week, continuously from 1 p.m. to 11:30 p.m. I am alone in the projection room, without relief at all Saturday and Sunday.

"And now to business: I have Powers projectors with Perfex lamps, taking current from two Perfex rectifiers. Can you put me in touch with some dealer who handles 6⅝ reflectors for Perfex lamps? We have been unable to get in touch with anyone who handles that size.

"Enclosed find a piece of film cut from 'Sally of the Subway.' It was about 18 inches ahead of the first Standard Release Print changeover cue. There was another about the same distance ahead of the last warning. It is a sample of the service we get here.

"May I thank you for all your writings have done to help me make my position a better one, and to enable me to do first-class projection work."

The film sample is one of the worst I have yet encountered. Someone has scraped the emulsion off about four and a half full frames, for almost the full width of the film. But what must be said about the exchange inspection which failed to find it and remove it? Or if it was found and not removed, what should be said about the exchange which sends such film to a theatre?

The ruined frame should have been removed, and the offending theatre charged plenty; also, the exchange should enter a good, vigorous protest against the further employment of a machine operator who has so very little regard for the rights of others, and none at all for the property placed in his care. That is the way, and about the only way, to put a stop to such projection crimes.

ABOUT BUCKLED FILM AGAIN

FROM Paul W. Crick, projectionist at the Roxy theatre in Cleveland, Tenn., comes the following:

"While glancing through back numbers of BETTER THEATRES, I found the article titled, 'That Problem of Buckled Film,' in the February 13th issue. The correspondent was C. B. Baldwin of Atlanta, Ga. Mr. Baldwin's theory, and the remedy for such, appear to be correct. It worked out in my own case, and I feel sure that if you will again request opinions from the field and ask the Eastman Kodak Company to help in the matter, further valuable knowledge will be gained.

"In closing, may I remark that I thoroughly enjoyed your lecture given in the Tivoli theatre in Chatanooga, Tenn., some while ago."

Brother Baldwin's article set forth the fact that he had trouble with film which buckled during the first run of the day and ran perfectly thereafter. He attributed this to the fact that he was using lamps that gave a very hot spot, and that on the first run of the day (the film being cold), the heat caused the center of the film to expand before the edges had time to get warmed up. After the first run, however, the edges became warm and there usually was no further trouble. If this is correct, and the expansion could take place fast enough to buckle the film while it remained stationary over the aperture, I do not quite see how the Eastman Kodak Company could do anything to explain the condition. Of course, the film might be stored in a very warm place in the theatre, but that in itself would be rather highly objectionable. The only remedy, it seems to me, would be to reduce the heat at the spot, and if you will tell me how you can do that without also reducing the screen illumination, I would like to have you do so.

ORGANIZATION IN ENGLAND

STANLEY T. PERRY, president of the British Guild of Kinema Projectionists and Technicians and projectionist at the Empire theatre in London, England, writes as follows:

Re your article (p. 38, BETTER THEATRES, issue of February 13, 1932) in which you set forth certain facts regarding our Guild, followed by remarks concerning the necessity for a labor union in addition, and the benefits to be derived, and which very evidently have been derived from such a union in your country and Canada, the conditions over here are very different and must, at least for the present, be handled differently.

"The cold fact is that in the projection field here in England we have not at present the material from which it would be possible to form an effective organization such as you have over there. The fact is that a very large proportion of our 'men' over here are really boys who are attempting to do men's work, without either the stability or ability to do it as it should be done. These boys have no realization of the importance of the position they hold and act accordingly. We also have many men who are almost on a par with the boys in the two points I have named.

"What really good, qualified motion picture-sound projectionists there are in London and the other key cities, are for the most part now enrolled in the Guild. We are making a real effort to educate the promising element of the younger school in the way they should go. It is a hard, up-hill job, but we believe we are making progress. We have no license law such as you have over there to protect, at least in some degree, our good men from the 'machine operator' element."

Mr. Perry was kind enough to send me two printed copies of the report of the Guild for the past year. In it I see there are branch guilds, called "courts," in Birmingham, Leeds, Bradford, Liverpool and Manchester, with an additional court known as the "South Wales Court," the location of which is not specified. The Guild and its courts have held many educational sessions during the past year, at which lectures of various sorts have been the main feature. The Guild entrance fee, or as we term it, the initiation fee, is one pound one shilling, or normally just about $5 of our money. The yearly dues are the same.

As I have said before, there can be no manner of doubt but that the British Guild is doing excellent work. Also there can be no doubt that a labor union, in addition, would have a most beneficial effect, provided it be conservatively and intelligently managed. In the end an effective union would have the effect of raising the morale of the whole profession of projection and the morale of the men engaged therein, with the consequence that there would be not only a general improvement in results, both in sound and pictures, but also a decided lowering of projection overhead, insofar as concerns electric power bills and life of equipment.

If British exhibitors expect to have their now highly sensitive, complex equipments handled in such manner as will produce the best results, and to produce them at a minimum cost, they must have men of training and intelligence in their projection rooms. And we all know that real brains (save for a few exceptions which merely serve to prove the rule) must be paid for. The exhibitor, like everyone else, seldom gets more than he pays for. If he buys cheap projection (equipment and wages) he gets just exactly that. Invariably it is almost anything but cheap in the end.

And right there lies the crux of this whole matter. The average exhibitor or theatre manager, although he can of course visualize the effect of any reduction in wages, or of low wages, and can understand exactly what that means each day or week or month in dollars and cents (or even in pounds sterling!), he is unable to visualize the effect of increased wages at the box office. He may feel that it might make some improvement if carried far enough to attract a better class of men to the profession of projection, but he is unable to feel certain that he will get back all the money he must invest while waiting for results, to say nothing of a profit, at the box office. He therefore and rather naturally resists any increase in wages, except in a very small way, where he is able to see that the work is particularly well done. He just will not advance wages, except by compulsion, to the point where a real general improvement begins, and it is this reluctance that must be overcome by the union.

The one unfortunate circumstance which makes improvement slow is the fact that almost invariably the circumstances compel unions to admit to membership men who are not really competent projectionists, and to demand for those men the regular scale of wages, which usually is more than they are worth. However, in general, the effect is good. Moreover, it is beneficial to the exhibitor himself.

I well remember when, before there was a union, the absolutely top wage was $18 a week. Few got that "stupendous sum." The average was then well below $10 a week, and the exhibitors of that day vehemently declared the business would not support any considerable increase in projectionists' wages—or any at all, for that matter. It would mean ruin!

Wages have been forced up, however, until now the top is well above $100 (or was before the depression), while $75 a week is common, and few city men receive less than $40 or $50 per week. Yet the exhibitor has not been ruined. In fact, compared with the old days, he is, at least in normal times, very much better off than he was then.

This is not designed as an argument for wage increases. It is intended wholly as a statement of the fact that increased wages for projectionists are justified when such increase will have the effect of improving results in picture and sound, and of decreasing overhead expense through more efficient operation.

A CASE, IT SEEMS OF UNEVEN SPEED

R. BUTCH of the La Vista theatre, in Hollis, Okla., (who addresses me as "Friend Trouble Shooter") says, "You are setting many and many a poor embryo projectionist on a firmer foundation, both as to sound and pictures. I am using a Syncro-Film sound system, film only, on one machine. The music has a draggy, sluggish sound. The fault is on the music only. Spoken words are perfect, but the music drags, though the projection speed is 90 feet per minute. I'll be looking for your answer in BETTER THEATRES."

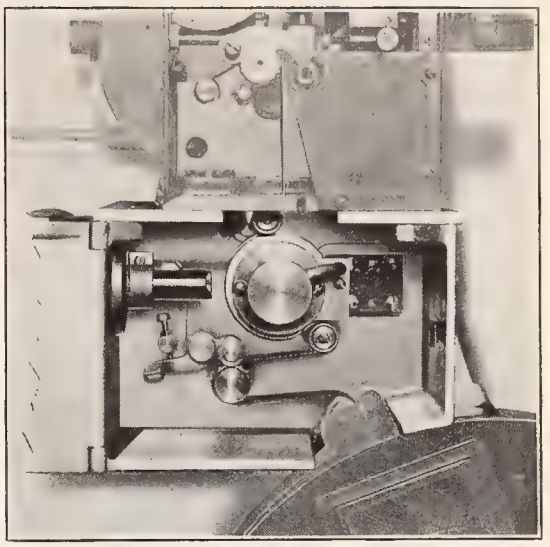
Rather vague, brother. Anyhow, I immediately got into touch with one of the best sound engineers in the business. Here is his opinion in the matter, to which I would not feel able to add anything of value:

"The inquiry from Oklahoma is a bit vague. I suppose the projectionist means by 'draggy, sluggish sound on music' that the same sounds thin and unnatural. However, the speech is clear.

"My own guess would be that there is a flutter or 'wow.' That is to say, the film is not moving through the sound gate or over the sound drum at a precisely uniform rate of speed. This may be caused by too much or too little friction somewhere in the path of the film through the sound head, or vibrations set up by the film loop may be getting into the sound head. Some fault in the sprocket which moves the film may be the seat of trouble.

"When there is a flutter due to such causes, music sounds queer. A piano may sound like a harp,—or a violin like a flute. A large orchestra may sound like a trio. The music does not 'sparkle.' The remedy is, as you say, obvious. Find the place in the sound head where the flutter starts and make whatever adjustments are necessary to eliminate it.

"It is a curious fact that flutter causes less injury to speech quality than to music, or at least that is the opinion of some people."



Unevenness in speed of film through the sound head, of course, makes for what is called "wow" or "flutter," and so long as they are present perfection cannot be expected, though either music or speech may sound fairly well. As a matter of fact, in high grade equipment, particularly in the high fidelity sound head variety, the effect of flutter is more noticeable in speech than in music.

Flutter may be caused by the various things named. It may be caused by worn sprocket teeth, by a bit or bits of dirt adhering to the face of the sound sprocket—the sprocket which moves the film through the sound head. It may be set up by improper tension at the sound gate, or in fact by anything which causes the film to move past the sound gate aperture at anything but an absolutely even rate of speed.

SEVERAL QUESTIONS ABOUT ILLUMINATION

JOHN B. MC MASTERS, projectionist of Granite Falls, Minn., asks if he may ask a few questions? His first is:

"Does all the illumination of a high intensity arc come from its crater? Second, I have been told that the angle at which the negative carbon of an H. I. arc is set with relation to the positive is very important. This angle cannot be changed in the lamps we have, except by changing the lamp itself—its construction, I mean. Is this angle of any considerable importance? Is the angle fixed in these lamps necessarily the best one? I have a little machine shop of my own and experimented by making some tapered shims. By increasing the angle slightly I got, or at least thought I got, a more steady arc and slightly better illumination. Is this possible? Third, what percentage of the total light of an arc can be made available to the screen?"

The tail flame of high intensity arcs supplies about 32% of the light. The remainder comes, of course, from the crater. Secondly, the angle is very important. It is a fixed angle in most H. I. lamps used for projection. The angle which is best has been very carefully worked out by the scientific department of the National Carbon Company. It is available to all lamp manufacturers. It is possible the makers of your lamps have varied from the correct angle. All standard projection lamps use only the accepted angles. You might measure the angle of your lamps very carefully and ask the National Carbon Company, Cleveland, whether or not they are correct. If not, it may be possible for you to alter them. You might place very carefully tapered shims in the lower carbon jaw, one over, and one under, the carbon. That might soon result in poor carbon contact, however, as one end of each shim would necessarily be very thin and probably would burn away quickly. It is always possible your local machine shop, if you have one, might be able to plane or grind the jaws.

Your last question I could not undertake to answer accurately. It would depend upon the percentage of the total light picked up by the collecting element (condenser or reflector), upon the necessary amount of waste at the projector aperture and the rotating shutter, the condenser or reflector, at the projection lens, and upon the density of the film itself.

These various losses are to a considerable extent under the control of the projectionist himself. True, he cannot possibly pick up all the light emanating from the light source. He cannot put all the light from the converging element of the optical train through the aperture and get good results. However, by wrong procedure he may, and not infrequently does, waste a rather large amount of light at both places, as well as at other points. The total amount of light available to the screen, through correct practice, varies with different types of light source and the various equipments it is necessary to use with them.

CURRENT AND CANDLE POWER

JOHN L. MORTLE of Brunswick, Mo., wants information, as follows:

"A thing which is no doubt quite simple to experienced projectionists puzzles me. It is this: When more electric current is used in a carbon arc, more light results. Is this because the carbon gets hotter, or what? Where may I obtain some book which gives full information about all projection matters. Your department and the Bluebook School are wonderful, but I would like to get everything all together in one book."

That, friend Mortle, you won't be able to do, for there is no such book, and probably never will be. However, the Bluebook School, of which you seem to think well, is based upon the Bluebook of Projection, which comes in three volumes, has a total of about 1,500 pages and almost 500 illustrations.

As to your main question, it is a matter of candle power per square millimeter, and of area. Candle power per unit area varies according to the character of the arc. There now is such a variety of arcs and carbons that to go into the matter thoroughly would require much more space than it is possible to spare. However, taking the old straight arc for example, each square millimeter of its crater surface gives out approximately 150 c.p. The total candle power of such a light source then is its square millimeter area times 150, and since the square millimeter area increases or decreases as current value is raised or lowered, you will readily understand that that is the answer to your question. However, don't accept 150 c.p. per sq. mm. as correct, for all arcs or you will be badly fooled. That value applies only to the old straight arc, using d.c.; also I quote it only as an approximate value.

ASKING IMPROPER EXAMINATION QUESTIONS

EARL M. HOLDEN, manager of Keith's Georgia theatre in Atlanta, writes:

"Dear Mr. Richardson, I believe it is the duty of every theatre manager to keep in close touch with projection, and so far as possible, to prepare himself to understand projection problems which come up from day to day. For this reason I thoroughly enjoy your department.

"Speaking of problems, though, will you be good enough to express your candid opinion of the following, which same are taken from examination questions projectionists are required to answer when taking an examination for city license. Here they are: (A) What is the resistance of a 702A fader? (B) How far does a needle travel on a record in one second? (C) What is 'effective aperture?' (D) Describe Hi-Lo intensity Hall & Connolly lamps and their light action.

"These questions have stumped projectionists of long experience, one of whom I know has been projecting motion pictures for 16 years. Do you think inability to answer these questions would brand a man as unfit to receive a license as a projectionist?"

Most emphatically I do not! The first two questions I should be unable to answer myself. I should be obliged to make inquiry of Erpi engineers as to the fader resistance. Anyhow, fader resistance is a variable quantity. If an examiner wished to ask such a valueless question he could only ask what is the maximum and minimum resistance of a 702A fader. But it would take someone much wiser than myself to find any value in such a question, in a projectionist examination. In my opinion it is both unwise and unfair to ask such a question.

As to Question B, since a record runs at uniform speed of rotation, and since in the very nature of things each individual groove on a record must and does have a diameter, and therefore a length different from every other groove on that record, such a question is just plain silly. It does not mean anything at all, unless a particular groove be designated. If that is to be done may I ask the examiner to try to answer it himself.

Selecting a groove exactly 2 inches from the outer edge of a record. For example, how far does the needle travel in that groove in one-tenth of a second? How much farther does it travel in the same space of time in the next groove away from the center? When you, Mr. Examiner, have answered those questions exactly, I believe you will yourself have used up considerable time, paper and lead pencil.

Concerning Question C, just what has knowing or not knowing what is meant by "effective aperture," got to do with projection practice? The term is simple. Its definition is fairly self-evident, but why ask a projectionist such a question?

Question D is not a good one as put. Many projectionists may have had no opportunity of examining the lamps in question. They may nevertheless be very competent projectionists, though they should make every effort to acquaint themselves with the details of such equipment. However, had the examiner substituted the following, it would have been entirely fair and an excellent question: Describe the light action, as applies to a non-condenser Hi-Lo reflector type lamp. Selecting a pin point at any point except the center of the reflector, sketch, in pencil, the approximate path of the light from that point to the near surface of the projection lens. Such a question would disclose what knowledge the applicant for license has of light action in a projector optical train, using a non-condenser reflector type lamp. Any competent projectionist will be able to answer it, and to make a sketch at least approximately correct.

INEFFICIENCY PAR EXCELLENCE

RECENTLY I visited the submarine base located on the Thames river, located about three miles above New London, Conn., to attend a motion picture show which is provided for the 300 or 400 men stationed at the base. The show consists of one full production. It is given five nights a week and is free to the men and their families. They also may invite an occasional friend. Giving of the show is certainly a very fine service, but surely it borders on the foolish to do it so inefficiently as it was done that evening, though just who was at fault I don't know.

Lieut. C. F. Grisham has general charge of the show. An enlisted man, F. V. Hill, is projectionist. I believe they did all that could be done with the equipment provided.

The projection room was not at all bad. The projection is almost level. The projectors were RCA Cruiser type, equipped with 1,000-watt Mazda light sources.

The sound was just about as poor as it well could be. I could not understand half the conversation. Lieutenant Grisham charged this to the reverberation set up by the walls and ceiling, and he was at least partly right. I was not able to test out to see if there was any fault in the equipment itself. The lieutenant told me an RCA sound man who was there not long ago charged it entirely to the hall itself.

However, be that as it may, the picture was almost worse than the sound, for it was very, very badly under-illuminated. More than that, the screen was a type made up for use as a part of the RCA outfit supplied for use on United States cruisers. I am told the black strips are affixed to enable the screen to withstand heavy wind pressures that screens used on these ships must withstand. It consists of some sort of perforated material, to the back of which is sewn stout, flat black cloth tape about an inch wide, spaced about 4½ inches from center to center horizontally. Vertical tapes also are sewn, spaced about 8 inches apart. The pattern thus created may be invisible from the front when the screen is new. But the screen in use there is a year or more old.

bells! You don't need them on every chorus, really. Save your loud volume for the very end, and a mighty good trick it is to lift your hands off the keys on the few bars just before the last eight of the final chorus. The audience feels silly, stranded high and dry, and it seems they love it. If you like applause, this trick wins it.

One of my problems was to get over being scared of my audience. Fright, no matter how mild, makes an organist stiff, and because I have noticed this in other organists, I am going to offer my own views on the whole matter of addressing the audience. Trying to be clever, or even funny, is likely to be construed as being in bad taste, and the organist who adopts this approach will burn himself out in a few weeks. In speaking to the audience, one should indicate an attitude that says as simply and sincerely as possible, "I like you and I want you to like me." Smile as you would to them in their own homes. I had to go to some effort to learn how to make a speech. The wrong way, I learned, is like this:

"Good evening, ladies and gentlemen. I wish to present this evening a new song hit entitled, 'As You Desire Me'—I hope you'll like it." This is too stiff. The right way is along the lines of the following:

"Hello, folks. I've just received a brand new song from the music publishers. The title is 'As You Desire Me.' I think it is destined to be a big hit and I want you to hear it, because I know you'll like it." You are being natural.

ONE WORD more about style of solos, this time in connection with a program consisting in an ordinary feature, neither heavy nor light, appealing to a mixed and average audience. In this case, the more variety a solo has, the better. I often do a group of two or three numbers, announced orally, like this:

Opening: Big fan-fare coming into the spot (opening of "American Fantasy"—Herbert is good) . . . Announcement . . . Largo—New World Symphony by Dvorak. . . . "Two Hearts in Three-Four Time." . . . "The Night When Love Was Born."

That, of course, is just a form. The point is, the numbers should be diversified —one good classic, a bright novelty or waltz, a fox-trot for finish.

The closing fox-trot, it should be remembered, is what will determine the applause, and I have learned that selling the closing number is entirely a matter of registration. It should have three choruses, the first for establishing firmly the melody (using a good rich tuba combination), the second for whimsical contrast (using some dainty stringey effect with the breaks taken on another manual and including embellishments on xylophone or bells), and the third wide open, with a terrific glissando on the last note, and a succession of heavy chords, followed by a crash cymbal at the very close of the number.

All things out of one performer's experience, these remarks have been, of course. But I have tried to confine myself to fundamentals. And my whole purpose has been to contribute what I could to others' efforts to build up a technique that can make organ music effective as the relief motif in the sound screen program. This is the organ solo's great function today. And in that function, it is winning new recognition as a box office draw.

ducer and, also, against the owner of the elephant. She contended that the elephant's trainer was negligent in failing to fasten the seat securely on the elephant.

It is interesting to observe that the higher court held the elephant owner liable, and relieved the producer from liability, saying:

"The William Fox Studio gave the trainer no directions as to show he could place the howdah upon the elephant's back, nor did any representative of that company assume to know anything about the handling of elephants, or how they should be 'harnessed' for the purpose of carrying passengers. * * * We think it is evident from the facts in the case that no right or authority had been given the William Fox Studio by the general employer to direct or control the trainer as to his duties in that respect. The trainer, therefore, in the performance of these duties was the servant or employe of the general employer, the appellant herein. This conclusion we think finds full support in the decisions of this court."

Duty to Repair Premises

VARIOUS COURTS have held that the owner of a theatre building is not an insurer of the safety of patrons and invitees while on the premises, but that he owes the duty to exercise ordinary care to see that the property is in a reasonably safe condition. Still another important legal rule is that the owner of a theatre building who rents out store-rooms or apartments to various tenants, and the halls, stairways, and other approaches are intended for the common use of his tenants, such owner legally is bound to use reasonable care to keep such parts of the building in a reasonably safe condition. Moreover, the owner of a building is not liable in damages to the employer of an injured employe in an amount greater than that paid by the employer to his employe.

For example, in the late case of Williamson v. Wellman (158 S. E. 777), it was shown that a collector of insurance was seriously injured when he stepped upon a decayed board while in a public building collecting insurance premiums, and his employer was compelled to pay compensation for the injury received. The employer then sued the owner of the building for an amount in damages greater than the compensation paid his employe.

Although the lower court held the owner of the building liable, the higher court reversed the decision and stated the following important law:

"In such case the liability of the landlord extends not only to his tenants but also to their guests and to anyone lawfully upon the premises and free from contributory negligence. * * * It is a matter of common knowledge that timber, exposed to the weather and so placed that water will collect in cracks where it is fastened together, will rapidly decay * * *. It would be unjust to allow an employer to recover from a third party more than such employer is liable to pay the injured employe."

Compensation Release Held Void

IT IS WELL settled that a person who is sound in mind and body, and who cannot read or write and does not know the terms of an agreement, may not avoid liability on a contract if he neglects to ask some one to read the instrument to him before he signs it. However, it is important to know that if the other party to the contract performs any act intended to deter the signer from procuring another person to read the contract for him, then the agrement is voidable.

For illustration, in McMillan v. Israel (30 S. W. [2d] 626), it was disclosed that while an employe was performing his duties he was injured and soon afterward the employer presented a paper for the injured employe to sign which stated that in consideration of payment of $446 the employe released the employer from further liability.

Later the employe sued the employer for $5,000 damages contending that when he signed the release he could not and did not read it, and that the employer had stated that the release was intended merely to supply him with immediate money with which to pay his expenses "until he fully recovered."

The counsel for the employer argued that the release was not rescindable because the employe was negligent in failing to have some one read the instrument for him before he affixed his signature thereto. However, the court held the release void and rendered a verdict in favor of the employe for $5,000, saying:

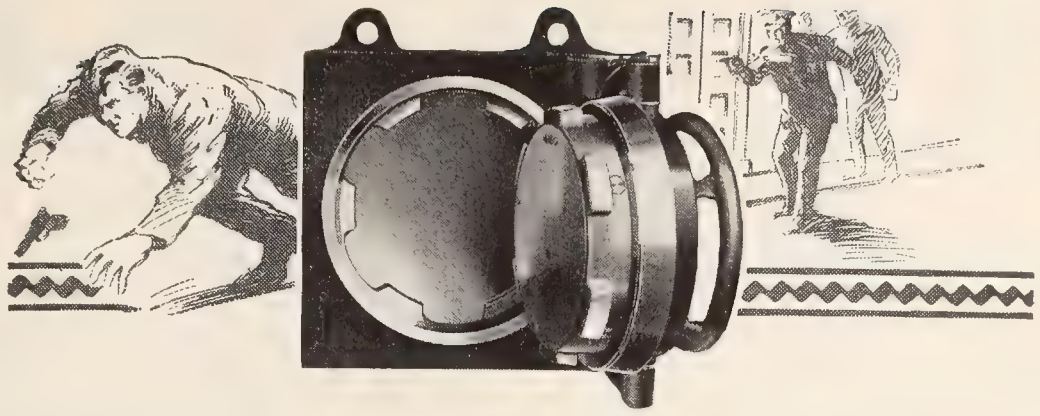
"The plaintiff (employe) cannot read and cannot write except to sign his own name. * * * False representations and fraudulent concealments upon the part of the defendant (employer) or its agent operated to deter the plaintiff from reading or having read the paper to which plaintiff affixed his signature, and under such circumstances the plaintiff's negligence in signing the paper without first acquainting himself with the contents was of no consequence."

Landlord Not Liable for Defective Construction

A THEATRE owner is expected to use only ordinary care to safeguard his patrons against injury. Another important point of the law is that although a theatre owner is negligent, he is not liable for an injury sustained by a patron, unless such negligence was the proximate cause of the injury. An example of this phase of the law is found in the late case of Stumpf v. Baronne (135 So. 100).

The facts of this case are that the owner of a building failed to provide a safe door. One day a patron was injured as a result of the unsafe condition of the door. He sued the owner for damages.

The counsel for the owner of the building proved that the approximate cause of the injury was not the fact that the door was unsafe. Therefore, in refusing to decide that the patron was entitled to recover damages, this court said:



"In actions for injuries through negligence, it is a general principle that a person is answerable for the consequences of his negligence only so far as they are the natural and proximate result of the injury, as might have been anticipated by ordinary forecast, and not for those consequences arising from a conjunction of his faults with extraordinary circumstances.

Restriction Against Negro

IT HAS BEEN held that a restriction in a deed is valid which prevents sale of the property to a negro. For instance, in the recent case of Edwards v. West Woodridge Theatre Company (55 F. [2d] 524), it was disclosed that a deed to purchased property contained a clause which forbade the sale or rental of the property to any person of negro descent. The validity of the clause was contested. The higher court held the restriction valid:

"The constitutional right of a negro to acquire, own, and occupy property does not carry with it the constitutional power to compel sale and conveyance to him of any particular private property. The individual citizen, whether he be black or white, may refuse to sell or lease his property to any particular individual or class of individuals. * * * The power of these property owners to exclude one class of citizens implies the power of the other class to exercise the same prerogative over property which they

NEW THEATRE PROJECTS

FOLLOWING is a list of new projects in motion picture theatre construction compiled from reports available on October 18. The list also includes remodeling projects and contracts awarded. An asterisk before an item indicates that additional information has been received since a previous report.

Theatres Planned

Massachusetts

BOSTON—The North Station Theatre Company, care Boston & Maine Railway Company, North Station, has plans by Funk & Wilcox, 26 Pemberton street, for a new up-to-date theatre to be located on Causeway street at North Station. Estimated cost, $150,000.

BROOKLINE—Owner, care C. P. Coughlan, 100 Mikl street, Boston, Mass., plans the erection of an up-to-date theatre at 147 Harvard street. Private plans. Estimated cost, $350,000.

Michigan

MT. CLEMENS—Leo Krim, who is well known in Michigan theatre circles, and now operating the Lasky and Plaza Theatres in Detroit, has acquired site for a new house, and expects to start construction work soon.

New Jersey

PLAINFIELD—A. F. Minszewrski, architect, 415 Fairview avenue, Dunellen, N. J., is taking bids for a two-story brick and stucco club house and auditorium for the Polish Falcons of America.

New York

BRIGHTON BEACH—E. N. Rugoff and H. Becker, 233 West Forty-second street, New York, have plans by C. Sandbloom, 145 West Forty-fifth street, New York, for a theatre, with seating capacity of 1,600, to occupy site 120 by 200 feet, at Boardwalk and Coney Island avenue.

BROOKLYN—Torrington Holding Corporation, care Clark & Strausberg Company, S. Strausberg, 16 Court street, plans new theatre, 133 by 272 feet, including roof garden and stores, to be located at Brighton Beach and Hoff street. Estimated cost, $150,000.

North Carolina

WINSTON-SALEM—The Pilot Real Estate Company plans the erection of an up-to-date theatre for colored patrons in the vicinity of Fourth and Chestnut streets. Architect and cost not made public.

Canada

CALGARY, ALTA.—Empress Theatre plans the erection of a new theatre and store building. Architect and location not made public. Estimated cost, $150,000.

Contracts Awarded

Louisiana

BATON ROUGE—Contract has been awarded by the Interstate Hotel Company, of Shreveport, La., through its president, Alfred Glassell, for the erection of a modern picture theatre to Clifford H. King. The project has been leased by Edward A. Greenblatt, formerly manager of the Paramount Theatre here. Total construction cost, including furnishings and equipment, is estimated at $100,000.

Maine

GARDNER—H. Johnson, care Bunker & Savage, architects, 255 Water street, Augusta, Me., has awarded the contract to F. A. Rumery Company, 533 Forest street, Portland, Me., for the erection of an up-to-date brick theatre and store building on Water street. Estimated cost, $150,000.

New York

COHOES—Louis Kappa, who operates the Regent Theatre at Albany, N. Y., is erecting a new house here, with seating capacity of 800.

Texas

HUNTSVILLE—The J. E. Allen building, formerly occupied as a grocery store, is being converted into a modern picture theatre. It will be known as the Sam Houston Theatre.

Canada

TORONTO, ONT.—A new theatre, with seating capacity of 800, is being erected by Hyman Freedman. It will be known as the Circle.

Remodeling

Arkansas

PINE BLUFF—Malco Amusement Company is reported having installed air-changing system in the Saenger Theatre, costing $10,000.

Corridor, balcony level, Broadway theatre, Eccles, England. Joseph Gomersall, architect.

California

PINOLO—James Hill, who recently leased the Pinolo Theatre, will open house as soon as alterations are completed.

Colorado

LOVELAND—Russell Tyson, who recently leased the Loveland Theatre, in addition to remodeling, has installed new sound equipment.

Iowa

WEBSTER CITY—The Isis Theatre has reopened after having been closed for improvements. L. E. Matthews, manager.

Kansas

GALENA—The Maywood Theatre is being remodeled and redecorated.

Georgia

ATLANTA—The Capitol Theatre, 202 Pinetree street, N. W., is reported planning to install new equipment, to cost about $25,000.

TITUSVILLE—Thomas S. Brandon, who recently acquired the Magnolia Hotel and theatre property, is reported planning to make extensive improvements to theatre.

Minnesota

WARREN—New equipment has been installed in the Strand Theatre. Clifford J. Nyland, manager.

Missouri

CRANE—Mr. Travis, new owner and manager of the Plaza Theatre, has made a number of improvements and some interior decorating.

NEOSHO—J. M. Catron, formerly of Tulsa, Okla., recently leased the Osborn building on the west side of the square. After extensive improvements are completed, will reopen as a first-class picture house.

New York

JAMAICA—Fox Theatre has been renovated and put in thorough order. Harold Janecky is the new manager.

Texas

Among Contributors to This Issue:

¶ Bernard Charman (Two Extremes in British Design) has long been associated with the film industry in England. As a journalist he was attached to The Bioscope, London film trade paper now defunct, and the physical theatre, in construction as well as operation, was his special interest. Mr. Charman is now acting as Motion Picture Herald's representative in England.

¶ Ted Crawford (The Organ Solo as an Interlude) has been a theatre organist for many years, beginning in the days before there were solos, when organ music was merely successor to the piano as a means of supplying a musical accompaniment to the photoplay. His article only indicates the difficulties he met in adapting himself to the new order that came with sound. He is now a featured organist in Albuquerque, N. Mex.

¶ Kenneth Aimer and Ben Schlanger (Two Versions of the Reversed Floor) are both architects who have specialized in motion picture theatre design. Mr. Aimer practices in Auckland, New Zealand. Mr. Schlanger is a New Yorker.

¶ Leo T. Parker (Recent Verdicts Affecting Theatres) is a Cincinnati attorney and writer on legalistic subjects who contributes regularly to Better Theatres. He is now preparing a series of articles on phases of the law of special interest to theatre owners, managers and builders.
